Another new problem that has cropped up in the course of reform of the economic structure is recent years is the decentralization of funds following the streamlining of administration and the delgation of authority. Then, as a result of the rapid development of production and construction, both the state and the enterprises faced an acute shortage of funds, and the enterprises found that they could not make use of their own funds in a rational and effective way. In recent years, China's extra-budgetary revenue has seen rapid growth, with 1983 showing an increase of 20.5 percent over the previous year and 1984 topping 1983 by a further 22.8 percent. In 1984, extra-budgetary revenue amounted to 83 percent of budgetary state revenue. In the same year, investment in fixed assets from extra-budgetary funds accounted for more than 40 percent of such investments in units owned by the whole people, and outlay on welfare and bonuses went up by 33.9 percent and 64.9 percent respectively over the previous year, greatly exceeding the growth rates attained by the enterprises in terms of profit and labor productivity. Some comrades see in the joint stock system their answer to the important question of how to guide the enterprises in making good use of such funds. In their opinion, stock issuance has more appeal than bank deposits as far as the pooling and utilization of funds are concerned, because with this method it is possible to absorb funds which are otherwise difficult to pool.

Besides, joint stock enterprises have access to a long-term and steady supply of operating funds and can promote the rational use of social funds. We think that this has yet to be analyzed and proven in a concrete way.

Besides being reflected in the production and management activities of enterprises, our present shortage of funds is all the more acutely felt in funds necessary for key projects of national construction and for long-term development. Stock financing plays a different role in resolving the problem of these two kinds of fund shortages. It is definitely a useful means for enterprises facing a shortage of funds. After the switch from financial appropriations to banks loans as their means of funding, the source of funds for enterprises is, to a large extent, controlled by banks. The amount they can get is directly affected by money supply. With stock financing, bank credit restrictions on the size of loans and their application are reduced, the needs of enterprises for funds are appropriately met, and the rational use of funds is ensured. At the same time, it can turn that part of unstable bank deposits with short-term but great mobility into relatively stable productive investment. However, such roles are very limited and can lead to a whole series of problems.

First, it is not conducive to the unified management of funds and can weaken the state's macrocontrol ability. Stock financing represents financial activities outside the banking system, and banks are still not in a very good position to control such activities. The state will find its role in regulating money supply and the flow of funds through banks handicapped by such stock financing activities and its ability in controlling the joint stock enterprises through banks greatly reduced. This may lead to more serious instances of blind investment, and encourage the random issuance of rewards and bonuses.

Second, the amount of idle funds that can be absorbed by stock financing is rather limited. Idle funds mainly come from funds of enterprises not yet deposited into banks but yet undisposed, as well as cash in the hands of residents. As far as the enterprises are concerned, there is now more money in the small money pools mainly as a result of the relaxation of cash control in the reform of the banking system and the lack of a stable financial policy, and because it is easy to deposit money into the banks but not so easy when it comes to making withdrawals. If cash control is strengthened and the financial policy is kept stable, reserves in the small money pools of enterprises will not increase as sharply as they did in these past years. Besides, money held by the small money pools of enterprises is mainly spent on the issuance of rewards, welfare and the so-called "coordination" in external economic dealings, and very little can be spared for the subscription of shares. As far as the individuals are concerned, although the amount of cash they have in hand has increased in recent years, there will not be too much left after making deductions for everyday transactions and setting aside sums for purchasing major items of consumption, building houses, and getting married. Besides, this portion of cash can be pooled through the strengthening of bank savings business (including the appropriate upward adjustment of interest on deposits), and the need for stock financing is not really that great.

Third, in order to carry out stock financing, the buying and selling of shares must be allowed. Otherwise the role of shares in regulating the flow of funds cannot be brought into full play. A portion of the funds involved in the buying and selling of shares is bound to remain in circulation, and this goes against the original intention of promoting production through stock financing cherished by those who proposed the share issuance. Moreover, speculation in stocks will take place, thus upsetting the normal financial activities of the state.

Stock-financing may claim to be of some help to enterprises facing a shortage of funds, but its role in helping the state overcome the problem of inadequate funds is very minimal. The higher the level of financing, the farther removed it is in its relation with share subscribers, and the smaller its appeal to the share buyers. State financing mainly goes to infrastructure construction and large-scale production projects, which are characterized by huge investment, long construction cycle, and slowness in producing results. Some of the prohects are even unprofitable. Thus, people generally do not want to buy these kinds of shares. Of course, in order to ensure a steady income for the shareholders, the state may issue some preferential shares, but then this is not much different from the issuance of bonds.

Compared with the above situation, bank financing is a better option. First, it readily supports macrocontrol. Through bank financing, the state can have a more precise and comprehensive grasp of the general scale of fund application and the situation of money circulation on the market. This is conducive to the better coordination of financial and money policies and will promote the steady development of the national economy. Second, it is conducive to the pooling of funds in a big way to finance key peojects of national construction. Compared with stock financing, bank financing covers a wider scope, can be done on a larger scale and allows more flexible application. Thus, it is in a better position than stock financing to ensure key projects of national construction. Third, it is conducive to the guidance and regulation of the microeconomic activities of enterprises. The larger the proportion of bank financed funds in the enterprises, the greater the role played by state financial policies in the regulation of their activities and the more possible it is to effectively prevent blindness in the production and management of enterprises.

Another objective of stock financing is to open a financial market so as to promote the rational flow of funds. We think that while stock financing can indeed promote the rational flow of funds through stock trading and transfer, the stock market is not our only choice for a financial market. Financial markets usually refer to loan capital markets where loan-taking and security transactions are carried out. They usually include money markets dealing in short-term credits, capital markets dealing in long-term credits, as well as stock markets, exchange markets and gold markets, but primarily they refer to short-term money markets and long-term capital markets. The stock market only forms a component part of the financial market and is not predominant. For example, in France between the years 1973 and 1977, shares issued by industrial-commercial firms and financial institutions only accounted for 15.2 percent of the total number of share issues on the security market. (Footnote 5) (Quoted from Sun Shuxi and Zhang Guile: "Foreign Banking Systems," China Finance Publishing House, 1984, p 96) In Japan during periods of high-speed economic growth, funds obtained through the issuance of shares and bonds dropped from 20.5 percent during the 1956-60 period to 9.6 percent over the 1966-70 period, while funds obtained through bank loans increased by 78.2 percent and 89.5 percent respectively over the same periods. (Footnote 6) (Quoted from "Banks of Japan" compiled by the International Finance Institute of the Bank of China and the Japan Institute of Jilin University, China Finance and Economics Publishing House, 1981, p 50) It can thus be seen that not having a stock market does not mean not having a financial market. We can also raise funds and effectively make use of funds through bank credits.

At present, the role of the banking mechanism is still not given full scope because our banking system is far from perfect and the scope of business is relatively narrow. Following the deepening of the reform of the economic structure and the gradual improvement of the banking mechanism, bank financing will become a major avenue for fund raising in China.

ZHEJIANG PROVINCE LABOR OUTFLOW OBSERVED

[Report by Chou Desheng: "Yongjia County Sent Over 85,000 Laborers To Work in Other Localities Last Year"]

[Excerpts] Last year there was an outflow of 85,000 rural laborers from Zhejiang's Yongjia County, 60 percent more than in 1984. According to a rough estimate, the income derived from work in other parts of the country accounted for about 40 percent of the county's agricultural income.

With little farmland but a large population, Yongjia is one of Zhejiang's five poverty-stricken counties. Since the application of the system of contracted responsibilities for production, the peasants have been increasingly enthusiastic about their work, efficiency has improved, and the problem of surplus labor and prolonged idleness has become increasingly serious. Thus, leaders at various levels enthusiastically help the masses take advantage of their surplus labor. They facilitate the outflow of laborers and create employment opportunities in order to find more sources of income. Laborers from the county are working in the rural areas of 20 provinces (or cities). They are employed in 12 types of business, including processing, building construction, beekeeping, and purchase and sales.

The outflow of labor has alleviated the problem of surplus labor in the rural areas, made things convenient for the rual and urban populations, and given impetus to the development of commodity production.

[Commentator's article: "Bright Prospects for Sending Laborers To Work in Other Localities"]

[Text] The reports on Yongjia County and Tuancheng Village have shown the bright prospects for channelling labor elsewhere and have pointed out a quick way of becoming rich for localities with neither rich natural resources not the idea of how to eradicate poverty and become rich quickly. It seems that so long as we have the courage to discard outdated ideas and to go elsewhere and work hard with our hands, we can quickly eradicate poverty.

The new phrase "outflow of labor" contains nothing new. There is no need to go too far back. We need only go back to the time when it was seriously demanded that "the way to capitalism be blocked" and when the slogan "manpower for land" was shouted loudly. At that time, did people totally stop working and earning a living in other parts of the country than their own hometowns? In fact, that was also an "outflow of laborers." The present outflow is in many respects different from that in the past. However, the practice of earning a living away from one's hometown has developed from the spontaneous practice of few individuals into a significant organized economic activity. Labor forces emancipated from the land have broken through the barriers between various regions and found a new world in which they can find a way to become rich. This development is in keeping with objective economic laws and is an inevitable result of the development of the commodity economy.

The more than 300 million laborers in China's rural areas are a valuable resource. In the past, whenever the problem of resources was discussed, people always focused their attention on natural vegetation and mineral resources. Manpower, which is very important, received little attention.

Since the extensive application of the system of contracted responsibilities with payment linked to output in the rural areas, surplus labor has become a problem in many parts of the country. The proper use and channelling of surplus labor can produce favorable conditions for production and development in areas without adequate manpower. In recent years, like Yongjia County, many areas have come to a better understanding of this. By discarding outdated ideas, taking advantage of their old strong points, and channelling their manpower elsewhere, they have lifted the peasants' economic status, increased revenue, trained people, improved the quality of their labor forces, facilitated the transportation of goods and the transmission of information between various parts of the country, and stimulated their own economic development. If they had done nothing except, like some other parts of the country, meditating and worrying about their land, they would never have experienced the joy of "accumulating wealth out of nothing and eradicating poverty."

As a result of the development of national economic construction, the demand for manpower is growing in many parts of the country and in many fields of production. The large construction projects, particularly mining, building, and highway maintenance, are to be carried out by relying on rural manpower. By so doing we can benefit both the peasants and state construction. In the places where conditions permit, we believe that they will enthusiastically support the peasants, regard channelling labor elsewhere as an important task for revitalizing the rural economy, and develop the work as quickly as possible.

SPORTS EMPHASIZED AS ESSENTIAL TO 4 MODERNIZATIONS

[Commentator's article: "Forge Ahead To Join the World Sports Powers"]

[Text] Over the past 5 years, China's sports have made a deep impression on the world. This has inspired the descendants of Emperior Huangdi in China and abroad. The rapid development of China's sports symbolizes the rejuvenation of the Chinese nation and is the epitome of the great efforts of the Chinese people in the "four modernizations" drive.

Sports are a cause involving the whole people. The CPC Central Committee's circular on promoting physical culture points out: Physical culture has an important bearing on people's health, the nation's prosperity, and the state's honor, and it plays an important role in enhancing people's ideological consciousness, realizing the party's general tasks in the new period, developing international exchanges, strengthening unity and friendship with the people in the rest of the world, and improving national defense capability.

In the second half of the 1980's, China will be faced with glorious yet arduous tasks on its sports front. In 1990, the 11th Asian Games will be held in Beijing, giving the whole world a chance to look at the new features of China. The CPC Central Committee and the people expect to see more rapid development in sports in the year to come. One-third of China's sports events have reached or are approaching world levels, but two-thirds still remain at a low level. Sports which are highly influential, such as track and field, swimming, and soccer, are still backward. We should make great efforts to enable these sports to catch up with world levels.

To achieve excellent results at future Asian and Olympic Games, it is important that we strengthen the training of young athletes and speed up the training of reserve athletes. Therefore, physical culture and sports commissions at various levels should attach great importance to this work.

They should take effective measures to improve the quality of spare-time sports schools and schools of physical culture so as to train more athletes at a faster rate. People in various fields should also energetically support the work of training athletes, so that a multistrata echelon of athletes can be formed through various channels. This will provide a reliable guarantee for scaling new heights in world sports. In addition, it is necesssry to strengthen the formation of a good ideological style among athletes and to set up a contingent of athletes and coaches who have lofty ideals, morality, cultural knowledge, and discipline, and who are Red and expert.

In building China into a sports power, we should take the road of promoting physical culture with Chinese characteristics. Ours is a large country. In promoting physical culture, various provinces, cities, and regions, by taking the whole country into account, should bring their superiorities into full play and make good arrangements for sports priorities. They should strengthen track and field, swimming, and other weak links in sports and attach great importance to the sports which are in a better position to catch up with advanced world levels in a short time.

Building our country into a sports power by the end of this century is a target of struggle set by the CPC Central Committee for the people of various nationalities and for comrades on the sports front in particular. We hope that comrades on the sports front will continue to display their death-defying spirit, set strict demands on themselves, lay a solid foundation for their work, and have full confidence in forging ahead.

DU RUNSHENG STRESSES RURAL COOPERATIVIZATION

HK200437 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 0200 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Text] According to SHAANXI RIBAO, Du Runsheng, director of the rural policy research office of the CPC Central Committee Secretariat, was invited to make a report on rural work issues in the Xian People's Hall yesterday.

Speaking on rural reforms, Du Runsheng stressed that it is necessary to have a new concept of agricultural cooperativization. Cooperativization must develop in step with the commodity economy. The demands of commodity economy represent the foundation of cooperativization and the masses should have freedom of choice. We do not rule out various transitional forms that have not yet taken shape. We should also retain certain supplementary economic forms.

We must clearly tell the peasants that it is necessary to persevere in cooperativization, that there is to be no change in household operations, and that joint efforts in providing services must be done well.

[Text] Beijing, March 20 (XINHUA) -- A three-week art and photographic exhibition reflecting the colorful life and customs of ethnic minorities in remote parts of southern China opened there today. The exhibition of 100 works of art and 100 photo graphs is being organized jointly by China's palace of minorities and authorities from Hunan, Hubei, Sichuan and Guizhou Provinces. The exhibits depict the lives of the Miao, Dong and Shui minorities, and their friendship with the majority Hans. Among the exhibits, the painting, "The Rosy Spring", and the photo graph, "The Miao People Have Enjoyed Running Water", show how minority groups are prospering. Attending the opening ceremony today were Wang Renzhong and Liao Hansheng, both vice-chairmen of the National People's Congress Standing Committee.

ARMY PAPER ON ABOLISHING CAVALRY UNITS

[Text] Beijing, March 21 (XINHUA) -- Trucks, tanks, and helicopters have largely replaced horses used by China's armed forces as draught animals or battle steed, the "People's Liberation Army" reported today. The Army, now working hard to modernize, has abolished cavalry units at and above the regimental level, the paper said. Most of the Army horses have been demobilized, although the cavalry was one of the Army's oldest services. The first cavalry units were formed in the early 1930's, and were expanded during the war of resistance against Japanese aggression and the liberation war. The Chinese People's Volunteers, who fought in Korea in the early 1950's, had three artillery divisions. Two used horses to draw their canons.

GUANGDONG ELECTS NEW NPC DEPUTIES, DISQUALIFIES TWO

HK201326 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1241 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, 20 Mar (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- With the approval of the 15th meeting of the 6th NPC Standing Committee, Guangdong has elected four new deputies to the Sixth National People's Congress in a by-election.

The four new deputies to the NPC are: Liu Huanyuan [0491 2970 3293] (assistant sales manager of Zhuhai City Goods and Materials Corporation), He Liucheng [0149 3177 2052] (a medical herb grower in Tangao Township, Dacheng District, Xinyi County, Guangdong), Chen Yintang [7115 5593 2768] (a teacher at Taishan County's Renyuan Secondary School), and Meng Qingping (deputy secretary of the Hainan Administrative Regional CPC Committee and chief responsible person of the Hainan Administrative Regional People's Government).

Guangdong has disqualified Zhang Hechang and Lei Yu as deputies to the Sixth National People's Congress. Zhang Hechang was a vice chairman of the Shaoguan City Federation of Returned Overseas Chinese. He has settled in a foreign country. Lei Yu was the responsible person of the Hainan Administrative Regional People's Government. Because of his mistake in the motor car reselling case, he asked to be disqualified as a deputy to the National People's Congress.

GUANGDONG'S LIN RUO AT ADVISORY COMMISSION MEETING

HK140949 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 0400 GMT 13 Mar 86

[Text] This morning, the provincial Advisory Commission held an enlarged Standing Committee meeting to convey and study the important instructions of central leaders which were made when the leaders inspected the province, as well as the important instructions and regulations of the central authorities on correcting party work style. The meeting also discussed ways of implementing them.

Comrade Lin Ruo, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, attended the meeting and made a speech. In his speech he first introduced the tasks which must be grasped well by the provincial CPC Committee.

First, we must correct party work style and strive to promote a fundamental change for the better in party work style within 2 years.

Second, based on consolidation, assimilation, augumentation and improvement, the province should strive for better development in its economic work.

Third, the province should strengthen the economic construction of mountainous areas, implement this year's afforestation plan which will last for a decade, and establish the corresponding responsibility system for examination.

In his speech, Lin Ruo fully affirmed the role of aged comrades, who gave many opinions on the work of the provincial CPC Committee. He urged the aged comrades to participate in the work arranged by the provincial CPC Committee so long as their health permitted. He urged them to assist the supervision work, to conduct research, and to report the situation and propose suggestions to the provincial CPC Committee.

Liang Lingguang, chairman of the provincial Advisory Commission, presided over today's meeting, which was attended by over 50 people. They included Standing Committee members of the provincial Advisory Commission and some aged comrades who had stepped down from office in the provincial Advisory Commission.

GUANGDONG'S LIN RUO ON RECTIFICATION OF PARTY STYLE

[Text] Guangzhou, 13 Mar (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- The secretary of Guangdong Provincial CPC Committee, Lin Ruo said: There has been an obvious but still not a fundamental turn for the better in the party style in Guangdong Province. Some unhealthy practices have only been temporarily held in check. Therefore, we must have less empty talks and do more concrete things. We must crack down hard on a number of unhealthy trends, resolutely strike at various illegal and criminal activities, properly handle education about party spirit, tidy things up where matters of discipline are concerned, and strive to achieve a fundamental turn for the better in the party style in Guangdong in 2 years.

Lin Ruo was speaking at a discipline inspection work meeting called by the Guangdong Provincial CPC Committee recently with Guangdong Province's problem of party style in mind.

Lin Ruo holds that in the year of Guangdong Province's party rectification efforts, the party style has been developing in a satisfactory direction from day to day. This has been reflected in the following: Party committees at various levels have set straight the idea guiding trading, especially the idea guiding economic work. They are no longer keen on seeking the illegal resale of foreign goods to make money or the so-called "shortcut to wealth through trading." They have instead switched over to down-to-earth involvement with the launching of industries, and to industrial production, the transformation of old enterprises, and the development of the productive forces, with efforts to get rich based on the development of the social productive forces. The province has basically stopped such unhealthy practices by party and government organs as involvement with trading, the resale of foreign exchange and of cars, marking up prices freely, imposing fines casually and demanding fees randomly, accepting bribes, freely handing out money and gifts, and so forth. It has cracked down hard upon a number of serious criminals in the economic field and taken care of a large number of big and important cases, enabling cadres to learn a lesson. It has strengthened education about party spirit, party style, and party discipline and education in building the spiritual civilization. A number of advanced units and exemplary figures have emerged.

Lin Ruo pointed out: There are still many problems involving party style in Guangdong Province. Among them are the following: Many party organizations, especially their leading groups, have still not let their own speeches and acts be really strictly guided by the party Constitution. Some unhealthy practices have only been "temporarily blocked," while the problem has still not been really solved ideologically. Therefore, some new unhealthy practices have again surfaced in their initial stages, such as illegally building private housing, not following specified size standards for housing, abusing authority to serve private ends, and so forth. In addition, there are such phenomena as neglecting the effort to build spiritual civilization, overlooking ideological work, the party not controlling the party, failure to follow pronounced decress and enforce prohibitions, lack of organization and discipline, serious manifestations of liberalism, and so forth.

Lin Ruo reminded the party and government cadres of Guangdong Province that given the policy of opening up to the outside world and enlivening things at home and the effort to develop a commodity economy, it is impossible not to have any problems. The important thing is to quickly take care of problems as they are discovered and not to let them grow until they become unhealthy trends. We cannot give up reform just because of the existence of unhealthy trends and the corrosive efforts of decadent thinking.

This a move to be avoided and a move that provides no way out. Retracing the old path provides no escape from problems and will only bring more serious problems. This has been proved by every year of experience in the past.

In conclusion, Lin Ruo said that now the CPC Central Committee has resolved to vigorously work on the buildup of party style. The provincial CPC Committee is also determined to do so. Given the same determination displayed by party committees at prefectural, city, and county levels and a persistent effort to that end, a fundamental turn for the better in the party style is possible. We have full confidence in this.

The Guangdong Provincial Discipline Inspection Work Conference was held in Guangzhou from 5 to 12 March. This was an important meeting in Guangdong Province's effort to bring about a fundamental turn for the better in the party's style in 2 years. The meeting was attended by more than 600 relevant responsible people of the province, prefectures, cities, and counties.

GUANGDONG SECURITY OFFICIALS JAILED FOR CORRUPTION

[Text] Guangzhou, 11 Mar (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Ye Renan, former chief of the Public Security Bureau, and Yin Xinyi, former deputy chief of the Public Security Bureau, of Taishan County of Guangdong Province abused their power in examining and approving exit documents, accepted bribes, and were punished according to law.

Ye Renan was formerly a member of the Taishan County CPC Committee Standing Committee, deputy magistrate of the county, chairman of the county political and legal committee, and chief of the country Public Security Bureau. When he was in office, he accepted as bribes 7,000 Hong Kong dollars, a black-and-white television set, and other things. After the case was cracked, Ye adopted a very bad attitude and tried by every means to deny the charges. The judicial departments have, according to law, sentenced him to 3 years' imprisonment, to be suspended.

When he was deputy chief of the Taishan County Public Security Bureau, Yin Xinyi, under the guise of helping dependents of Overseas Chinese go through exit formalities, accepted bribes in kind over a long period which amounted to over 6,700 yuan. He has also been sentenced to 2 years' imprisonment by judicial departments according to law.

GUANGDONG TO SORT OUT UNITS' 'SECRET MONEY'

[Text] Guangzhou, 12 Mar (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- The leading organs at all levels in Guangdong Province have now begun to take the lead in sorting out "small safes."

Recently, the Guangdong Provincial Government held a provincial government work conference sorting out "small safes." Vice Governor Yang Deyuan said that sorting of "small safes" was a major task for the provincial people's government in implementing the State Council's unified arrangements, and that it was also another important task after the financial and disciplinary overhaul last year in order to correct the unhealthy trends; therefore the governments at all levels, in particular the organs directly under the provincial authorities, had to quickly take the lead in doing this.

"Small safes" means the money that various units have acquired in the past few years and that they can dispose of at will, such as the money that they have acquired through illegally possessing or selling the state's property, the funds that they have raised through asking for help and donations; the fines that they have imposed and collected without authorization and kept for their own use; the balances of the funds allocated to them that should have been delivered to the upper level; the income from various kinds of operation that they have earned by employing the state's assets; the dividends from their investments which have been omitted from their accounts; the income from their illegal commercial operations; the various kinds of illegal income that they have concealed; the funds that they have diverted from the state budget and transferred to themselves; extrabudgetary funds; and the portion of their operational income that they have retained for their own disposal.

As this secret money is difficult for the state financial departments to supervise, the establishment of "small safes" facilitates and encourages various unhealthy practices such as misappropriation of funds, indiscriminate bonus payments, and giving banquets and gifts.

After "small safes", are sorted out, bonuses paid in excess of the stipulated amounts must be taxed in accordance with the regulations.

GUANGDONG PAPER ON MODEL WORKERS REPORT GROUP

HK140415 Guangzhou NANFANG RIBAO in Chinese 8 Mar 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "A Fine Example Has Boundless Power"]

[Text] The Guangdong Provincial report group on the deeds of advanced model workers is now presenting reports to the vast numbers of cadres in Guangzhou, and will leave for various places in our province to propagate the exemplary deeds of its members. This is a great event concerning the building of socialist spiritual civilization in our province this year, and will surely greatly encourage the people of the whole province and effectively promote the development of the building of the two civilizations.

The age of socialism is an age of heroes. Under the direction of the line, principles, and policies of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and the conditions of opening up to the outside world and carrying out reform, advanced model workers have more opportunities for displaying their abilities, and more and more advanced units and individuals are constantly emerging on all fronts. These are undeniable facts, although opening up to the outside world and carrying out reform can promote the building of spiritual civilization, strengthening the building of spiritual civilization will in turn ensure the smooth progress of opening up to the outside world and reform, thus greatly promoting the building of material civilization.

The kernel of building socialist spiritual civilization is communist ideology. Why are the advanced deeds of all the members of the provincial report group on the deeds of advanced model workers so moving? Why are they so convincing? This is because they are people who have truly fostered lofty ideals. In order to heal the wounded and rescue the dying and promote the development of medical science, some people have permanently settled down in mountainous areas, voluntarily sought hardships, and repeatedly taken risks to carry out scientific experiments on their own bodies, thereby attaining outstanding achievements. At ordinary posts which are looked down on by some some people ardently love their own jobs and make selfless sacrifices unknown to the public. Persistently combating fatal diseases, some people hold fast to their work posts for long periods of time and make thrilling achievements.

In the forward positions of opening up to the outside world, some people disseminate the friendship of the Chinese people for foreigners, resist the corrosive influence of bourgeois ideology, preserve the purity of Marxism, and so on. All these are products of lofty ideals, things which could not possibly be purchased with money, and the most valuable things in the world. All these people are model workers with lofty ideals, moral integrity, cultural knowledge, and a sense of discipline!

Having clear-cut aims in mind, the provincial authorities organized this report group on the deeds of advanced model workers so as to let the people who have ideals talk about ideals, the people who have a sense of discipline talk about discipline, and the people all over the province know of their meritorious deeds. This is of important realistic significance. The activities of the report group -- have provided inspiring examples for the vast numbers of cadres in the whole province to follow. Meanwhile, it is also a forceful criticism of the corrosive influence of bourgeois ideology, as well as the unhealthy tendencies. Our province adopted the policy of opening up to the outside world earlier than other places in the country. Just as when the window of a room is opened, as the fresh air enters, contaminants may also sneak in. In our contacts with people of other countries, a small handful of people act shamefully before foreigners, showing no consideration for the dignity of the state, as well as their own moral integrity. Being forgetful of their lofty ideals, they turn to capitalist mammonism and "do everything for money" and are bold in doing any self-seeking and speculative thing at the expense of the public interest. Some important leading cadres have also violated the law and discipline or even engaged in criminal activities. Undoubtedly, the activities of the report group on the deeds of advanced model workers will greatly benefit the predominance of the socialist and communist ideologies and vigorously lash out at the bourgeois ideology and unhealthy tendencies.

A fine example has boundless power. Let the inspiring deeds of the advanced model workers strike root in the hearts of the people and their noble ideals become the valuable spiritual wealth of the people of the whole province and actions to expedite the building of the two civilizations.

GUANGXI ISSUES CIRCULAR ON HELPING POOR

HK171556 Nanning Guangxi Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 15 Mar 86

[Excerpts] According to GUANGXI RIBAO, the regional CPC Committee and regional people's government recently made a decision on the work of helping the poor. They urged all localities and departments concerned to seriously study and implement it.

The decision points out: The CPC Central Committee and the State Council are very concerned about economic construction and people's livelihood in the region's poor areas. During this year's spring festival, General Secretary Hu Yaobang led an inspection group to visit some poor areas in Yunnan, Guizhou, and the region. He listened to reports and gave important instructions pointing out the direction of the work of helping the poor and encouraging the people throughout the region.

Over the years, the region's party committees and governments at all levels have done a lot in the work of putting an end to the backward situation in the poor areas. They have scored remarkable successes. For various reasons however, the economic development of the poor areas still lags far behind the average level of the region. Many people still face the problem of poverty. The work is therefore still very arduous. The regional CPC Committee and people's government urge all localities to seriously act in the spirit of relevant central documents and the instructions of Comrade Hu Yaobang.

Within the next 5 years, they should basically solve the poor areas' problems of insufficient clothing and food, and should lay a good foundation for extricating the poor areas from their poverty-stricken state.

In order to this work well, the regional CPC Committee and people's government stress: First, we should correct the guiding ideology, fully understand the significance of the work of promptly extricating the poor areas from their poverty-stricken state and developing the region's economy, and overcome the erroneous thinking of regarding the poor areas as a burden.

Second, we should continue to implement a series of policies on rehabilitating the poor areas. We should help the poor areas in terms of finances, tax collection, credit, purchase of agricultural and sideline products, development of forestry and natural resources, foreign trade, capital construction, industries run by counties, and technological transformation of town and township enterprises. Thus we can strengthen the vitality of the poor areas for economic development.

Third, we should administer and use well the state's funds for developing the underdeveloped areas. The focal point should be on developing forestry, animal husbandry, fruit growing, rare native products and specialties, the mining industry, the processing industry, and the construction of small hydroelectric power stations and small water conservation facilities.

The decision states: To grasp the leadership well is the key to doing well in the work of helping the poor. For this reason, the regional CPC Committee and people's government have decided to establish a regional leading group for the work of helping the poor. Moreover, they will replace the regional office for constructing old, minority nationality, border, mountainous, and poor areas with the regional office for helping the poor, which will be mainly responsible for the work of helping the poor.

Some 48 poor counties and cities, and other areas concerned, must view the work as an important task in the routine work of the regional CPC Committee and government. All departments, committees, offices, and bureaus under the regional authorities, colleges and universities, research units, and departments concerned at various localities must include the work on their agenda. At the same time, they should establish links with a poor county, town, or village. They should take the responsibility for helping it attain prosperity.

HEBEI: MOST CITY, COUNTY PARTY CONGRESSES HELD

SK180530 Shijiazhuang HEBEI RIBAO in Chinese 2 Mar 86 p 1

[Text] As of the Spring Festival, 9 cities under the jurisdiction of the provincial government, 140 counties (cities), and 38 districts under the jurisdiction of city governments -- a total of 187 local CPC Committees -- and 169 cities and counties (districts) had held their party congress one after another, accounting for 90.4 percent of the province's total. The remaining 16 counties, 1 district and 1 city will hold their party congresses after the Spring Festival. Most of the party congresses hald by the cities and counties (districts) were successful, serving as oath-taking meetings for promoting the two civilizations and mobilization meetings for fighting in unity for a splendid future.

1. The guiding ideology of the party congresses has been clear and definite. The party congresses of the various cities and counties (districts) have unified the ideology of the broad masses of party members with the guidelines of the 3d Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee and the National Conference of Party Delegates, and put forward positive and feasible fighting objectives and measures for developing the economy and strengthening the building of the party. The work reports given by most of the city and county (district) party congresses have clear-cut subjects and definite goals, and are in conformity with local realities and the desire of the broad masses of party members and the people and are most heartening.
2. The new leading bodies have been elected in line with the "four requirements" for cadres and the principle of establishing cooperation among the old and the new cadres and replacing the old with the new. A new step has been made in building the structure of the echelon. Statistics from 158 cities and counties (districts) show that among the newly elected 4,856 party members and alternate members, some of them are veteran cadres 50 years old or above who have rich experience and are capable of creatively implementing the party's line, principles and policies; some are middle-aged cadres who are full of vigor, broad minded, and keen to reform, and have great ability to solve problems; and some are young cadres less than 40 years old who are hard-working, promising, open-minded, eager to learn, and full of vitality. Among those being selected into the leading bodies, 656 were reserve cadres, accounting for 13.5 percent of the total number of committee members. In this way, the average age of the members and alternate members of the city CPC Committees under the jurisdiction of the provincial government is 46.7, and about 60 percent of them have an education of the college level or above. The average age of the county (district) CPC Committee members and alternate members is 43, and about 36.5 percent of them have education at the college level or above. In terms of specialties, the leading bodies are composed of qualified personnel in charge of party, government, mass, science, public health, cultural, construction, and financial work. The structure of the committees has improved daily and the level of the "four requirements" for cadres has further enhanced along with the structural reform of the leading bodies of the standing committees.
3. The practice of democratic centralism has been conscientiously implemented and party life has became more lively. Many cities and counties (districts) persisted in regarding the party congresses as authoritative power organs, followed the mass line from start to finish while preparing for the convocation of the party congresses, and played a fairly good role in pooling the wisdom of the masses, discovering competent personnel, and giving criticism and supervision.

4. Party style has been further improved. Many city and county (district) CPC Committees paid special attention to promoting the party's fine traditions and work style of integrating theory with practice, establishing close ties withthe masses, and conducting criticism and self-criticism in the course of preparing for the convocation of the party congresses. The party congresses were not lavish but simple, and not much money was spent. At the party congresses and their first plenary meetings, many CPC committees issued resolutions and decisions on strengthening party spirit and rectifying party-style, and stressed that in checking the new unhealthy trends emerged under the new situation, we should mainly grasp the two links of conducting study and education and examination of party style.

NEI MONGGOL CHAIRMAN SPEAKS AT ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

SK190833 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 18 Mar 86

[Text] Zhou Hui, secretary of the regional CPC Committee, and Bu He, chairman of the regional government, made speeches on the morning of 15 March at the conclusion of the regional conference on planning, economic, and pricing work. They called on cadres at all levels and the people of all nationalities throughout the region to persistently carry out reform, make solid efforts to achieve the work in all fields, and strive to make new greater contributions so as to welcome the 40th anniversary of the founding of the autonomous region.

Comrades participating in the conference heard the speeches made by Qian Fenyong and Tian Congming, deputy secretaries of the regional CPC Committee, and by Liu Zuohui, vice chariman of the regional government; conscientiously studied and discussed the relevant documents of the CPC Central Committee andthe State Council, summed up and exchanged the region's working experiences gained during the Sixth 5-Year Plan Period; studied and discussed the region's plans and tasks for the Seventh 5-Year Plan Period; and arranged the work plans for this year.

Comrade Bu He pointed out in his speech: Our region has made a good start in the industrial, agricultural, and livestock production in the first quarter of this year. In the first 2 months of this year, the value of the region's industrial output totaled 1.4 billion yuan, an increase of 7.6 percent over the corresponding period of last year. The output value realized by the budgetary state enterprises and the profits and taxes handed over to the higher levels by these enterprises were expected to basically increase at the same pace by the end of last Febraury. With regard to agricultural production, after conquering the natural disasters last winter and this spring, the preparations for plowing and sowing are progressing smoothly. The plans for growing crops have been well arranged. The Hetao area has started plowing and sowing seeds. The situation of livestock production is very good. In line with the actual conditions, all leagues and cities should conscientiously implement the principles of consolidation, digestion, supplement, and improvement, make solid efforts to achieve the work in all fields, and make good preparations for promoting the reform work for next year.

Comrade Bu He set forth the following few suggestions.
First, control the scale of the investment in fixed assets. Greater progress was made in capital construction during the Sixth 5 Year Plan Period. A number of key projects were completed and went into operation, playing an important role in the region's economic development. However, we must pay full attention to the situation in which the scale of our region's capital construction has been expanded over the past few years. This year we must have determination ourselves to control the scale of investment in fixed assets, and persistently carry out the system of administrative heads taking the responsibility for the work. The administrative heads of the areas should assume the responsibility for the areas' failure to control the scale of the investment in capital construction.

Second, control the increase in consumption funds. This is an important measure for balancing the relations between the total demands of the society and the total supplies of the society. Thus, besides controlling the scale of the investment in capital construction, first, we should put an end to the tendencies of different enterprises, different trades, and the enterprises and the organs vying with each other to increase wages, bonuses, and benefits; second, we should strictly control the increases in administrative funds, continue to control the institutional purchases, and halt the increases in the numbers of organizations, staff members, and working personnel; and third, we should achieve the work of withdrawing currency from circulation, and absorb the idle capital from the society to engage in production and construction.

Third, stabilize the prices of goods. This is a matter of vital importance to the nation's economy and the people's livelihood. We must well grasp it. We should strictly control the rate of retail price hikes. The state fixed prices and the state guidance prices should strictly go along with the state price readjustment plan. This must not be ignored since it is a central link of the macroeconomic control. In particular, we must stabilize the prices of such foodstuffs as meat, vegetables, and eggs.

Fourth, vigorously develop lateral economic cooperation. This is of great significance for further promoting reform and developing the social productive forces. Thus, we should formulate policies and take legal measures for encouraging and protecting the development of lateral economic cooperation. Efforts should be made to break the bounds of different ownership systems of different regions, departments, and trades, and to conduct various forms of lateral economic cooperation persistently in line with the principle of voluntary participation and mutual benefits. We should concentrate on opening up to the places outside the region and foreign countries, and make efforts to bring in capital, technology, talented persons, and advanced management experiences from abroad. While opening to the outside world, we should focus on creating more exports in order to earn more foreign exchange.

Fifth, continue to consolidate the achievements in the development of agriculture on a large scale, particularly, to steadily develop grain production. This is a base for achieving reform and the construction in all fields. All localities should firmly foster the thinking of agriculture being the foundation of the national economy and try every means possible to comprehensively reap agricultural, forestry, livestock and sideline harvest.

NEI MONGGOL SECRETARY SPEAKS AT CONFERENCE

[Text] At the regional planning, economic, and pricing work conference, Zhou Hui, secretary of the regional CPC Committee, made a speech on the issues of the current situation of rural production, on all trades and professions working in the service of agricultural production, on the urban economic reform, and on strengthening cadres' theoretical study.

Comrade Zhou Hui pointed out: It is time to start spring sowing after the waking of insects. We must firmly grasp farm work in the right season. We should pay attention to improving farming methods, apply scientific methods for growing crops, and strive to upgrade the per unit area yield and increase total agricultural production. All localities should take effective measures to ensure a steady increase in grain production under the circumstances in which the region's total cultivated areas are reduced. We must see new increases in total grain production over last year. Bayannur League has grown grain crops on 100,000 mu of areas covered with mulching films, has carried out grain and grass rotation on 100,000 mu of lands, and has interplanted wheat with corn on 100,000 mu of lands.

This is an excellent situation. After summing up the experiences of the (Houshan) area, characterized by suffering 9 years of drought in a 10-year period because of strong winds and many sandy areas, Qahar Right Wing Rear Banner established small agricultural and economic zones in some areas. The approach is right, and the banner has made initial achievements.

With regard to the measures for encouraging the peasant households to engage in grain production by giving two priorities to those who sign grain purchasing contracts taken by the regional commercial department, supply and marketing cooperatives, and the agricultural banks, Comrade Zhou Hui said: This progress has also satisfied us. With correct orientation, these trades have enhanced their sense of service. We must advance toward this orientation in order to upgrade our awareness of serving agricultural production, truly integrate the work of granting loans and the sales of top-quality chemical fertilizer at parity prices with the signing of grain and edible oil purchasing contracts, and offer high-quality service to the peasants so as to arouse their enthusiasm for developing the production of commodity grain. All leagues, cities, banners, and counties should pay attention to this question.

In his speech, Comrade Zhou Hui stressed: Along with the development of rural commodity production, the positions and functions of the supply and marketing cooperatives are becoming more and more important. Whether or not they achieve their work is to a certain extent related to the development of the rural commodity economy. Grass roots supply and marketing cooperatives should be established according to economic divisions and the orientation of economic circulation, instead of being automatically established according to administrative divisions. How do we set up grass roots supply and marketing cooperatives as well as banner and county integrated cooperatives? Where do our questions lie? The old, outdated, and unsuccessful methods will get us nowhere. Our ways of thinking and of handling affairs should tally with the objective law on development. Thus, we should have courage and not gaze around. We should bravely conduct the work as long as the peasants like it.

With regard to the reform of the economic system, Comrade Zhou Hui said: The reform of the economic system was carried out in an overall manner last year. The situation of the reform was very good thanks to our conscientious implementation of the principles and policies of the CPC Central Committee. This year, we should conscientiously implement and comprehensively and clearly understand the principles of consolidation, digestion, supplement, and improvement so as to further grasp the reform work. The implementation of this principle does not mean a stop to reform; on the contrary, it signifies its deep development.

Comrade Zhou Hui called on cadres at all levels to firmly grasp theoretical study. He said: At present, with many tasks to perform such as the four modernizations and the economic system reform, we will get nowhere if we only rely on old experiences. Without study, we will not be able to meet the demands of the new situation. What is socialism with Chinese characteristics? What measures should we take to persist in socialist orientation? Only when we closely proceed from reality and arduously study the basic theory of Marxism, can we comprehensively and clearly understand the principles and policies of the party and upgrade our ability to distinguish truth from falsehood.

SHANXI'S LI LIGONG STRESSES IDEOLOGICAL WORK

HK200549 Taiyuan Shanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Excerpts] Shanxi Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Li Ligong spoke at the second annual meeting of the provincial Study Association on Ideological and Political Work for staff and workers on 19 March.

He said: Viewing the general situation, ideological and political work remains a weak link in our province, and many arduous tasks await us. He stressed: Ideological and political work in the new period and the new situation is much more profound and important than in the past. The party organizations at all levels must strengthen leadership over ideological and political understanding. At present there are all kinds of problems on the ideological front. These include problems of methods of thought as well as of ideological line. However, even more important, since the all-around unfolding of reforms of economic structure focused on the cities, many viewpoints have emerged that lack an all-round and correct understanding of this process. There is one-sidedness and [words indistinct].

Li Ligong stressed: There are many fundamental problems in strengthening the building of the ideological and political work contingent. At present, it is essential to strengthen the building of the force of political work cadres and improve their quality.

TIANJIN'S NI ZHIFU AT CHINESE WRITERS ASSOCIATION

SK160452 Tianjin City Service in Mandarin 1430 GMT 15 Mar 86

[Text] Yesterday afternoon, Ni Zhifu, Zhang Dinghua, and Bai Hualing, as well as other municipal leading comrades, inspected the Tianjin branch of the Chinese Writers Association and held informal discussions with some municipal writers. Writers (Jiang Zilong), (Niu Xi), (Yang Runshen), (Feng Zhicai), and (Hang Ying) participated in the discussions.

The municipal leading comrades held extensive discussions with the writers on the municipal socialist spiritual civilization, on the fostering of a new generation of writers, and on how to do a good job in ideological and political work under the new situation.

Comrade Ni Zhifu pointed out at the discussion meeting: A literary work can be well received by the people and the masses as long as it reflects the realities of society about which the people are most concerned and, more importantly, the desire and demands of the people.

XINJIANG TO INSTITUTE NEW FINANCIAL SYSTEM

HK210545 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 17 Mar 86

[Text] The regional people's government has decided that beginning this year, the region will institute a new financial system of classifying taxes, checking and ratifying income and expenditures, and assigning a financial task to each level until it is completed. This is an important reform in the region's financial management system, and will play a very important role in unleashing the initiative of the region and other areas, in promoting the reform of the whole economic structure, and in speeding up the development of the four modernization drive.

The concrete contents of the new financial system of classifying taxes, checking and ratifying income and expenditures, and assigning a financial task to each level until it is completed are: On the basis of defining the scope of income and expenditures of the region, prefectures, autonomous prefectures, and cities, make reasonable readjustments using as a base the income and expenditures in the final financial accounts of 1985 and define bases with respect to income and expenditure assigned to all prefectures, autonomous prefectures, and cities. Rich areas whose income exceed expenditures should submit their quota and the part in excess of the quota should be retained by proportion. The region should give subsidies to areas whose expenditures exceed income and the amount of subsidy should increase by proportion. The method of assigning the financial task to each level should remain unchanged for 4 years.

This method of assigning a financial task to each level until it is completed and [words indistinct] has properly integrated the job, rights, and interest of financial departments at all levels, and expanded the decision-making power of localities. Localities with more income can spend more, and localities with less income should spend less, thus breaking the previous situation of eating out of the same big pot in which regional authorities controlled income and expenditures in a unified way.

The regional people's government demanded that party and government leaders and financial departments at all levels proceed from the region's overall situation, unify their ideas, effectively strengthen their leadership, and seriously study and implement the established financial contract system so as to unleash the people's initiative, increase income and raise funds, and open up a new situation in financial work.

JOURNAL INTERVIEWS XINJIANG'S WANG ENMAO

[Excerpts] Reporters of Jiangxi's HONG JUN SHI LU [ROAD OF RED ARMY] journal recently visited and interviewed Wang Enmao, an old revolutionary general beloved by the people of all nationalities in Xinjiang, chairman of the Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Regional CPC Advisroy Commission and first political commissar of the Xinjiang Military Region [as heard], in Urumqi City, a city in China's northwestern border region.

Wang Enmao is a native of Yongxin, Jiangxi.

During the interview, Wang Enmao was very happy and inquired with concern about the situation in Jiangxi Province.

TAIWAN PAPER URGES KMT TO CHANGE MAINLAND POLICY

OW200106 Beijing in Mandarin to Taiwan 1500 GMT 18 Mar 86

[Text] Taiwan's Kaohsiung MIN CHUNG JIH PAO in early March published an editorial, entitled: The People Have a Creative Suggestion on Changes for the Government Party. The editorial suggests to the third plenary session of the Kuomintang Central Committee, scheduled to open at the end of this month, that changes should be made in the policy on the mainland and three other related issues.

The editorial thinks that first, the policy on the mainland should change. It says: Currently, the mainland, pursuing an open policy, is seeking changes in everything; while we are content with the status quo. It is not hard to imagine the consequences of such an attitude.

Second, in its study of mainland affairs, Taiwan has, in the past, laid particular emphasis on negative aspects. Dwelling only on such things as the power struggle and economic difficulties, it has tried to smear the mainland, rather than make objective comments. To overestimate about itself and underestimate about others has caused huge deviations in policymaking. Therefore, methods of studying mainland affairs must change.

Third, education on the mainland situation should change. We should not always make negative comments on the results of study, and should conduct specific or general research on the overall situation on the mainland. The study of China mainland issues, a subject taught at Taiwan University, should enable the students to comprehensively study the political affairs, economy, society, foreign affairs, and literature of the mainland, so that the people know the actual situation there.

Fourth, our attitude to the mainland should change.

The editorial holds: The Kuomintang has, for a long time, had a fear of communism, and has always evaded the issue under any circumstances. From now on, it should permit the people in Taiwan to visit the mainland. It should not have misgivings or fears over anything concerning the mainland.

OW240639 Beijing in Russian to the USSR 1800 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Text] A PRC Foreign Ministry spokesman said on 22 March that the 19 March U.S. newspaper WASHINGTON POST reported that the United States is conducting talks with the PRC on the question of establishing seismic equipment in China for registering underground nuclear tests in the Soviet Union. This report is completely groundless. The spokesman of the PRC Foreign Ministry said this in response to a question from a correspondent who demanded that he confirm the above-mentioned report.

RENMIN RIBAO CALLS FOR WORLD PEACE EFFORTS

HK230502 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese 22 Mar 86 P 2

[Editorial: "The People Preserve Peace, the People Gain Peace"]

[Text] The UN proposal on the organization of the International Year of Peace has drawn serious attention and extensive responses from all over the world. Yesterday, at the "Chinese people's gathering to uphold world peace," Premier Zhao Ziyang delivered an important speech expressing the 1 billion Chinese people's strong desire for peace and their firm determination to uphold it.

It is a strong common desire of the peoples of all countries in the contemporary world to uphold world peace. World peace is also a noble ideal of mankind. The development of the human race, progress, and prosperity are impossible without peace. It is only with peace that the human race has been able to build its magnificent material and spiritual civilizations. The two world wars ruined countless lives and much property. Although in the 40 years since World War II there has not been another world war, regional conflicts and wars have not ceased. According to one account, the total number of people killed in these regional conflicts and wars amounts to about half the number killed in World War II. At present, in a struggle to achieve global supremacy, the two superpowers are engaged in fierce confrontation. The nuclear arms race between them is expanding from land, sea, and air to outer space. Their arms have developed from conventional arms into nuclear arms and even space arms. The scale and seriousness of the past arms race and the degree to which it threatened world peace and human existence do not compare to the current one. Facts gravely remind us that there is still the danger of war. It is precisely this danger, particularly the danger of a nuclear war, that has given people a clear idea of the desperate situation and has mobilized them into unremitting struggle against war and for world peace. An unprecedentedly large-scale peace movement is taking root in the world and is developing in an in-depth manner. In addition, Third World countries and all peace-loving countries are making efforts to uphold world peace. There has never been such an extensive struggle before. This shows that the world's forces for peace are vigorously and rapidly growing.

Hegemonism, which is now being practiced by the superpowers, and the arms race between them constitute a major threat to world peace. To uphold world peace, it is first necessary to oppose hegemonism and any arms race.

To uphold world peace, it is first necessary to prevent hegemonism from impairing peace and to practice the five principles of peaceful coexistence. National security is inseparable from world peace. The violation of a certain country's independence and sovereignty in a certain sense means damage to world peace. Facts discovered in the post-war years have shown that, whether or not various countries have different social systems, only by strictly acting in accordance with the five principles of peaceful coexistence, respecting each others' independence and sovereignty, abstaining from interfering in others' internal affairs, and opposing power politics can they get along well with on another and bring about normal international relations. Otherwise, international relations will be characterized by tension and confrontation and world peace will be impaired or even ruined.

To uphold world peace, it is necessary to stop the arms race, the nuclear arms race in particular. History tells us that arms races between superpowers are a means by which they contend for supremacy and by which they can spark world wars. Today the superpowers' arsenals are saturated with nuclear arms that can destroy the earth several times over. It is difficult to guarantee that these huge stocks of nuclear arms will not be used, with diastrous consequences. Thus, the peoples of various countries should regard disaramament and the destruction of all nuclear arms as an important goal of their peace movement. Their demand for substantial reductions in the superpowers' nuclear arms is completely justified and reasonable.

World peace and the disarmament issue bear on the security of all countries and on the fate of mankind. On these major issues, we must not allow a few major powers to dominate the scene nor place our hopes exclusively on the talks between the superpowers. All countries in the world, large or small, powerful or weak, should have their say on these issues, and they are entitled to participation in discussing and settling the disarmament issue. Facts have proven that arms control talks between the two superpowers and their arms race are developing simultaneously and that the more frequent their talks are, the more nuclear arms with better quality they possess. The nuclear threat is becoming increasingly serious each day. Thus, to bring about genuine disarmament and to uphold world peace, it is necessary to rely on the joint struggle waged by world's peoples. As far as the two superpowers, who own 95 percent of the world's nuclear arms, are concerned, they should take the lead in substantially reducing their arms. This is their unshirkable duty.

China needs peace. The Chinese people have been working hard toward the goal of world peace. The Chinese Government has repeatedly raised disarmament proposals calling for the banning and destruction of all nuclear arms. We have repeatedly told the world that whatever the time and circumstances, we will not be the first to use nuclear arms. Last year, China voluntarily reduced the size of its army by 1 million officers and men. Now, by further elaborating on the Chinese Government's consistent position on disarmament and peace, Premier Zhao Ziyang has pointed out to the world the Chinese people's determination to oppose any arms race. In addition, he has officially announced that China will conduct no more nuclear tests in the atmosphere. This shows that concerning peace and disarmament, China has its own positive ideas and it has taken practical actions.

The International Year of Peace proposed by the United Nations will undoubtedly contribute to mobilizing people into opposing war, upholding world peace, and stopping the arms race between the superpowers. One can believe that as long as the world's peoples unremittingly uphold world peace, they will eventually earn it.

EUROPEAN TROOP CUT TALKS END WITHOUT PROGRESS

["European Troop Reduction Talks End With No Progress (by Li Chunliang)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Vienna, March 20 (XINHUA) -- The 38th round of central European troop reduction talks wound up here today with no solution to the East-West stalemate emerging in this session of the world's longest marathon negotiations lasting more than 12 years.

Speaking at a press conference today, negotiators from both the Warsaw Pact and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) stated they had done their best in the talks and called on the other side to take a realistic attitude.

In the current round of talks, which opened in January, the NATO representatives put forward a series of verification measures based on its proposal made on December 5 last year. The measures include the setup of permanent checkpoints through which withdrawing troops would pass, and the establishment of 30 on-the-spot inspections annually for each side during the three years following the withdrawal. The NATO negotiators insisted that breakthrough should be made in the verification measures, the key to the resolution of all problems in the talks. They supported their argument by citing Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's indication in his recent disarmament proposal that he was ready to reach an accord with the West on "rational verifications."

The Warsaw Pact representatives, however, dismissed NATO's verification measures as "exaggerated and unrealistic." They instead stressed that the paramount issue in the talks was to reduce the troops and military equipment. The Warsaw Pact, in a counterproposal on February 20, suggested that the Soviet Union and the United States withdraw 11,500 and 6,500 troops respectively from central Europe within a year and that the pullout be followed by a three-year freeze on troop levels by either side. It also proposed that each side inform the other of any military maneuver involving more than 20,000 troops.

At today's press conference, Dutch chief delegate Jan van de Mortel said that in view of the Warsaw Pact's intransigent stance, NATO should not change its stand embodied in the December 5 proposal. Meanwhile, a Warsaw Pact spokesman told reporters that NATO's "take-it-or-leave-it" attitude is an ultimatum rather than a proper negotiation manner.

The current round of talks, attended by 19 countries, started amid an optimistic atmosphere buoyed by the U.S.-Soviet Geneva summit last November and Soviet leader Gorbachev's new initiative in January which called for phased reduction of nuclear arms until a total elimination by the end of this century. The enthusiasm, however, became cooled as the bargaining between the two alliances intensified in the talks. It is obvious that the marathon would not yield any encouraging results in the foreseeable future. The negotiations, known in the West as the Mutual and Balanced Force Reduction talks, began October 30, 1973, with the goal of slashing the estimated two million soldiers and airmen in Holland, Belgium, Luxembourg, Federal Germany, Democratic Germany, Poland and Czechoslovakia. The next round of talks is scheduled for May.

WEINBERGER SAYS U.S. WILL 'NEVER GIVE UP' SDI

LD220341 Beijing XINHUA in English 1830 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] Wuerzburg, Federal Germany, March 21 (XINHUA) -- The United States would never give up its Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) in any arms control agreement or accept a ban on nuclear testing, U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger insisted at a news conference here today. SDI was "one of the very highest priorities of our government," he told the reporters after a two-day nuclear planning meeting of 14 NATO defense ministers in this Bavarian town. He reiterated the United States remained opposed to a comprehensive nuclear test ban "as long as we have to rely on nuclear weapons, and until we get a strategic defense."

In a communique issued at the meeting, the NATO defense ministers said they strongly supported the U.S. arms negotiation stance and charged that a massive Soviet nuclear missile buildup far exceeds the Kremlin's defense requirements. The meeting wound up today was dominated by American briefings on technological advances in SDI and assurances to the European allies that Washington was studying ways to shield them from short and medium-range Soviet missiles.

UN CONCERNED OVER IRAQI CHEMICAL WEAPON USE

[Text] United Nations, March 21 (XINHUA) -- The U.N. Security Council in a statement today expressed its profound concern over the use of chemical weapons by Iraqi forces against Iran, and strongly condemned "this continued use of chemical weapons in clear violation of the Geneva Protocol of 1925." The statement was issued in the name of the president of the Security Council after three-day consultations among its members of the council.

Last February, U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar sent a team of socialists to Iran to investigate the Iraqi use of chemical weapons most recently in the course of the present Iranian offensive into Iraqi territory. The team was composed of Dr. Gustav Andersson, head of the analytical chemicstry section of the Swedish National Defense Research Institute; Dr. Manuel Dominguez, colonel of the Spanish Army Medical Corps; Dr. Peter Dunn, superintendent of Materials Research Laboratories of the Australian Defense Department; and Dr. Oberst Imobersteg, former chief of nuclear, biological and chemical weapons defense of the Swiss Defense Ministry.

In a report to the U.N. secretary-general on March 6 by the team after concluding a four-day investigation in the Iranian cities of Tehran and Abadan, the four specialists unanimously concluded that "on many occasions Iraqi forces have used chemical weapons against Iranian forces" in the areas of Abadan and Al-Faw; and that "the agent used has mainly been mustard gas although on some occasions nerve gas was also employed."

The statement of the Security Council president demanded that the provisions of the Geneva Protocol of 1925 which prohibit the use in war of chemical weapons "be strictly observed." It also expressed concern over "the risk of an extension of the conflict to other states in the region." The statement stressed "the urgent need" for full compliance by both parties with Resolution 582 adopted by the Security Council last February, which "would open the way for a prompt, comprehensive, just and honourable settlement of the conflict."

WORLD BANK ASSISTS ANHUI IRRIGATION PROJECT

[Text] Hefei, March 24 (XINHUA) -- Improvement work has started on China's largest irrigation network in central western Anhui Province with the aid of loans from the World Bank. With an investment of 712 million yuan, including 92 million U.S. dollars (294 million yuan) of foreign funds, the five-year scheme on the Pishihang-Chaohu Lake irrigation network is expected to improve irrigation on 918,000 hectares of farmland.

The area, with a rural population of 8,200,000, has suffered serious flooding every three or four years for the past 37 years. Since 1958, the state has invested 700 million yuan to dig canals and build reservoirs there. Under the present scheme, more canals and ditches will be dug, and pump stations and sluice gates built.

U.S. CONDUCTS UNDERGROUND NUCLEAR TEST

[Text] Washington, March 22 (XINHUA) -- The United States today conducted an underground nuclear weapon test at the Nevada test site, the U.S. Department of Energy announced today. The nuclear device exploded 2,000 feet beneath the Nevada desert at 11:15 a.m. EST with the power of explosion between 20 and 150 kilotons, energy department spokesman James Boyer told reporters. The test looked "real fine and normal," he said.

Yesterday, some members of Congress called on President Ronald Reagan to cancel the test, but the Reagan administration refused to hold up the test. It was reported that it was an early test for a nuclear warhead.

JOURNAL EXAMINES REAGAN'S STATE-OF-THE-UNION ADDRESS

HK220355 Beijing SHIJIE ZHISHI in Chinese No 5, 1 Mar 86 pp 2-3

[Article by Peng Di [1756 6611]: "Trends in U.S. Policies As Seen From Reagan's State of the Union Address"]

[Text] Reagan's State-of-the-Union address, delivered on 5 February, revealed unconditional optimism toward the world situation and strict adherence of principles. Generally speaking, his usual conservative tone was maintained.

On the world situation, Reagan asserted that there must be a "safer and sounder world." He hoped that the U.S.-Soviet summits would continue and lead to "steadier U.S.-Soviet realations," and that the Geneva arms-control talks might lead to an accord on nuclear disarmament. However, his emphasis was more on the conditions for realizing this target.

One of the conditions was that the Soviet Union be true to its word, refrain from deceit, and stop making threats. He said: "We have spent 3 years narrowing a dangerous gap resulting from illusion and negligence, and we have achieved some important results. However, the threat is still great due to the USSR's tactical and strategic forces, their pursuit of domination through force, increased espionage, and national terrorist activities." He added: "I hope our Geneva fireside summit and the future U.S. visit by Gorbachev will lead to relatively better relations." He stressed, however, that "we should not stroll innocently into the future. The differences are profound and long-standing between us and the system which has openly declared that it has the so-called right to dominate other people's lives and export its ideology by force, and has done so. Logic and history have forced us to acknowledge that relations between us must be based on realism. Our representatives to the Geneva arms control talks have proposed that we mutually and honestly reduce offensive forces by a large percentage. They have strongly emphasized that it is essential for the Soviet Union to observe the letter and spirit of such an agreement. If the Soviet Government wants an agreement that truly reduces nuclear arms, there will be an agreement." Reagan added: "The Soviets must know that if America reduces its defenses, it will be because of a reduced threat, not a reduced resolve."

These remarks were rather strong both in content and tone; at the same time, he has put the ball back in the Soviet Union playing field. Initial Soviet reaction to Reagan's address was not good. It seems it will take some time before the results of the U.S.-Soviet "soccer game" are known.

Reagan's second condition was that of "expanding the family of free nations." Here, his conservative tone was all the more apparent. He said: "Arms-control will not take the place of peace."

"To make preparations for peace, we cannot depend only on disarmament, but do our best to promote prosperity, freedom, and democracy with whatever means, no matter where," Reagan went on to expound on this point at great length, explicitly announcing that the United States would support "freedom fighters" in various countries, including Afghanistan and Cambodia, which are subject to foreign invasion, as well as such sovereignt states as Angola and Nicaragua. As for the question of what kind of social system Nicaragua should have, Reagan took it upon himself to decide. He stressed that for the sake of "peace and security" in the Western Hemisphere, "nothing is more important than achieving democracy in Nicaragua and protecting its democratic neighbors. When you compared this to his condemnation of the Soviet Union for "exporting its ideology by force," as quoted above, it becomes obvious that President Reagan has put himself into a self-contradiction.

The third condition was the need for the United States to continue to strengthen its military buildup, which Reagan held to be an indispensable condition for realizing world peace and security. He urged Congress to increase defense spending and to approve the administration's defense projects and budget, including his "Strategic Defence Initiative," or Star Wars. In his budget proposal for fiscal 1987, Reagan asked for Pentagon authority to spend $311.6 billion, an 8.2 percent increase over this year's $278.4 billion. Spending for star wars would increase 75 percent, to $4.8 billion. This has already created a great dispute in the United States. The President faces an arduous battle.

Reagan's annual State-of-the-Union Address did not touch upon other important international issues, including such hot spots as the Middle East, which he seemed to avoid perhaps because of its complications.

As for domestic issues, Reagan focused on the serious situation due to the annual financial deficits of 200 billion, He said: "The federal budget is broken; it doesn't work," and expressed his intent to eliminate deficits by 1991 by adhering to the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Deficit-Reduction Act. But the Reagan administration is also faced with many difficulties and contradictions in solving this problem. Reagan maintained that the defense and economic policies adopted since he took office had been successful, and that they must continue. First, spending for defense should not be chopped, but rather increased. Second, in order to stimulate the economic growth of enterprises, tax increases must continue to opposed. Thus, to reduce the deficits, the only remaining measure would be government spending cuts, expenditures for social welfare. That is a very contentious issue and there is little likelihood of agreement.

Anotehr major problem affecting the national economy is the annual unfavorable balance of 150 billion in foreign trade. Factors contributing to this unfavorable balance are many, apart from the ever-aggravating international competition.

One of the causes is the high currency-exchange rate of the dollar, which has reduced the competitiveness of U.S. exports. Reagan failed to propose any good, specific measures to deal with this. All he did was to issue a general call to "double efforts to realize trade on a freer and fairer basis" and a proposal for an international monetary conference to coordinate the economic and trade policies of its trading partners.

Regarding the general U.S. economic situation, Reagan talked about the accomplishments scored during the current economic revival, including continuous economic growth for 37 successive months, 9 million more jobs, and a drop in the inflation rate from the 1980's 12 percent to the present 4 percent. He did not say much about developing trends in the world economy or the problems facing the United States.

On other domestic issues, he advocated prayer in schools and opposed abortion, basing these on his own religious views. He touched on the difficulties of the poor, while opposing welfare receipients' dependence on federal programs. Reagan showed concern for the contradictions facing some U.S. families, stressing that "the breakup of families, the most basic support system, has developed to an alarming degree, leading to poverty for many women and children, abandoned children, terrible crime, and worsening conditions in schools." On the problems facing teenagers, Reagan said: "Because young people are subjected to all kinds of temptation, characteristic of an unrestrained society, sometimes supernatural willpower is necessary. However, the hope of the future is so strong and the challenge so great, we cannot afford to get lost or retreat into the dead end of self-destruction, drugs, and desperation." In pointing out these problems, Reagan did not propose any specific solutions.

President Reagan's address was of course full of optimistic rhetoric, claiming that the United States was flourishing and marching ahead, full of confidence for the future. However, no new ideas were presented in the address. With the exception of reaffirming that research into Star Wars would continue, no other major initiatives were mentioned. Upon hearing the President's address, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill remarked: "As usual, his words are optimistic. However, his message was on the same old track and is disappointing." Being a Democrat, O'Neill's comment was probably biased. However, as a House speaker who has presided over the delivery of 10 State-of-the-Union addresses, his opinion expressed the view of many Americans.

WEINBERGER CHARGES USSR WITH SALT, ABM VIOLATIONS

[Text] Bonn, March 20 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger today accused the Soviet Union of violating the SALT II and ABM (anti-ballistic missile system) Treaties. In a report to NATO's 39th Nuclear Planning Group Conference which opened today in Wurzberg, Federal Germany, Weinberger said the Soviet deployment of SS-25 missiles and the establishment of the powerful radar station at Krasnoyarsk are violations of the two treaties, diplomatic sources said.

According to the sources, the U.S. defense secretary also assured allied defense ministers attending the opening session of the conference that European security will be integrated in the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI), the so-called "Star Wars" program.

The Pentagon's SDI Office Director, U.S. Air Force General James Abrahamson briefed the conference on the progress of the "Star Wars" research, saying the technology research was making "tremendous progress", especially in the fields of high powered lasers and new infrared systems, reports from Wurzburg said. The Pentagon official said SDI will be able to track and intercept Soviet medium- and short-range missiles. This capability, he said, is vital to the security of Western Europe.

Observers here said the conference is likely to put doubt on the "zero option" proposal which calls for the withdrawal of all medium-range nuclear weapons deployed in Europe by both the U.S. and the Soviets . Withdrawal of medium-range missiles by both sides would still leave the Soviet Union with an advantage in conventional weapons on the European front.

Ambassadors from Spain, Greece and Turkey and defense ministers from eleven other NATO countries are participating in the two-day meeting amid tight security.

U.S. DISARMAMENT OFFICIAL DEFENDS SDI PROGRAM

OW220802 Beijing XINHUA in English 0741 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Text] Washington, March 21 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency Director Kenneth Adelman today called the Soviet criticism of the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) as a propaganda trick with "same words, different tunes."

In a speech before the U.S. Congressional Advisory Board in Florida, Adelman said that the great majority of criticisms and objections that the Soviets have put forward on SDI "are virtually identical to the criticisms and objections that they put forward against NATO's intermediate nuclear forces deployment from 1979 to 1983." He called the Soviet criticism on SDI as the "Soviet anti-Star Wars campaign" which are "essentially standard propaganda themes." He said the Soviet proposal for general and complete disarmament was the "dominant theme of Soviet arms control proposals in the period of the 1950s."

The proposal for general nuclear disarmament by the year 2000 also "bears an especially strong resemblance to a particular proposal" that the Soviet Union made in 1959 at the United Nations, when neither side had a large force of ballistic missiles, said Adelman. He added while a number of details in the two proposals clearly differ, "the basic three-stage format and the basic sales pitch of general and complete disarmament at the end of a prescribed period in both cases is the same."

He said the Soviet Union attempts to gain unilateral advantage in arms control and the U.S. should not offer to the Soviet Union "unilateral concessions" in arms talks. "It has always been our will to keep our own defenses strong that has brought the Soviet Union to the bargaining table, as we have seen most recently with SDI," said Adelman.

Adelman said the U.S. is moving toward "the goal of stability" by three routes -- by strengthening deterrence through its defense modernization, by exploring the feasibility of defensive systems through SDI, and by seeking mutually stabilizing agreements and real reductions in offensive weapons through arms control talks.

Rockefeller is now chairman of the bank's International Advisory Commission.

At the meeting, Wang praised Rockefeller's efforts at developing the good relations between the Chase and the Bank of China and hoped such relations would continue to develop.

Wang also briefed the visitors on China's economic and financial situation.

Rockefeller and his party arrived here March 22 as guests of the Bank of China. They will attend the celebrations of the fifth anniversary of the opening of the Beijing office of the Chase Manhattan Bank.

PRESIDENT REAGAN SAYS NO IMMUNITY FOR MARCOS

OW231028 Beijing XINHUA in English 0911 GMT 23 Mar 86

[Text] Washington, March 22 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan said he did not plan to grant former Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos immunity for violations of American law. The U.S. President made the remarks in an interview with the NEW YORK TIMES to be published on Sunday.

Asked if they believed Marcos should escape prosecution if he were charged with corruption, Reagan said he would let the law take its course.

"I have said that I think the laws of not only our nation, but the Philippine Government and international law ... should be observed."

This means he would not protect Marcos with his power if Marcos is to be prosecuted by the Philippine Government.

Marcos, who stays in Hawaii now, has been accused by the new Philippine Government of looting billions of dollars in public funds during his 20 years in office. A Philippine Government commission is now investigating Marcos' fortune in the United States.

On arms control talks with the Soviet Union, Reagan accused the Soviet leadership of never having "displayed speed" in that issue. However, Reagan said he remained hopeful of a summit with the Soviet Union in June or July.

No date has yet been agreed on for the summit proposed by Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in Geneva last November. Observers said that the Soviet Union has insisted that the summit be held later this year while Washington prefers a summit in the middle of this year.

Referring to Nicaragua, Reagan said he would continue to promote his request for 100-million-dollar aid to the anti-government forces in that Central American country. But, he said he would be willing to make "minor changes" in the request to get it passed in the Congress. He denied that his policy is aimed at sending U.S. troops to Nicaragua.

Asked about domestic issues, Reagan said that he will involve himself "deeply" in the congressional elections this year to support Republican candidates.

He repeated his pledge against tax increases, saying that such increases were "counter-productive and could threaten our economic recovery."

BEIJING RADIO ON S. KOREAN SIGNATURE DRIVE

OW211234 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1150 GMT 19 Mar 86

["International Current Events" program: "South Korean People Are Carrying Out a Campaign To Collect Signatures To Support Their Demand for Revising Their Constitution"]

[Text] The New Korea Democratic Party, South Korea's largest opposition party, and the Council for the Promotion of Democracy, an opposition group, announced that beginning 12 February a campaign to collect 10 million signatures to support the demand to revise the current Constitution would be conducted throughout South Korea. To promote the campaign, five opposition parties and groups announced the establishment of a united liaison organization for democratization in Seoul on 17 March in order to oppose Chon Tu-hwan's proposal that the Constitution be revised after his term of office as president expires in 1988. This is the first united action of major South Korean opposition parties and groups against the present regime since Chon Tu-hwan came to power in 1980.

The current South Korean Constitution was adopted on 22 October 1980. It provides that the president shall be elected by the electoral college, which is elected by the people. The opposition forces demand that the current Constitution be revised so that the president will be elected directly by the people. Democratic personages and students assert that there is no difference between the current Constitution and the reformist constitution of Pak Chong-hui's days and that the current Constitution provides a legal basis for the Chon Tu-hwan regime to strengthen its autocratic system.

The voice of the South Korean people for democracy has been getting louder and louder in recent years. The New Korea Democratic Party was founded in January 1984, and it is called the New Democratic Party for short. The party, which occupies 67 seats in the 12th Parliament, is the biggest opposition party in South Korea. The New Democratic Party, a new force which has suddenly come to the fore, has openly called for revising the Constitution, directly electing the president, enjoying freedom of speech by the people, and releasing political prisoners. It has also announced that it will mobilize 10 million people to sign their names to promote the campaign for revising the Constitution.

The campaign to collect 10 million signatures launched by the New Democratic Party and the Council for the Promotion of Democracy can be called a major move by opposition forces to achieve the goal of revising the Constitution. A joint statement issued by the New Democratic Party and the Council for the Promotion of Democracy on 12 February said: Since the current Constitution was promulgated undemocratically, it lacks legality; it disregards the basic principles of democracy and the principle of separation of the executive, legislative, and judicial branches. The campaign to collect 10 million signatures is aimed at displaying national aspirations for democracy.

According to press reports, 120 members of the New Democratic Party, 42 of whom are members of Parliament, and 97 members of the Council for the Promotion of Democracy, on 12 February affixed their signatures and seals to a book calling for revision of the Constitution. They include Yi Min-u, president of the New Democratic Party, who is very influential among the opposition forces in South Korea, and Kim Tae-chung and Kim Yong-sam, co-chairmen of the Council for the Promotion of Democracy. Other opposition groups and students also support the signature campaign. The reverend Mun Ik-hwan, president of the United Minjung Movement for Democracy and Unification, an opposition group, vigorously advocates revising the current Constitution and calls for formulating a democratic constitution.

As early as last October, university students in South Korea adopted a resolution to set up democratic and united headquarters for the constitutional revision campaign in various universities. Since early this year, united organizations to support the campaign to collect 10 million signatures have been set up in Seoul, Yonsei, Ewha, and Hongik Universities, and they have decided to carry out the campaign.

The South Korean authorities are opposed to any effort to revise the Constitution. They are even more opposed to the campaign to collect 10 million signatures. In his speech on state affairs delivered on 16 January, Chon Tu-hwan claimed that revision of the Constitution would be discussed after 1988. The ruling party, the Democratic Justice Party, said that it would adopt legal measures to obstruct the movement to revise the Constitution. After the campaign to collect 10 million signatures began in Seoul, the South Korean Authorities were panic-stricken, and immediately adopted repressive measures. On 19 February, they placed under house arrest and took into custody more than 200 key officials of the opposition parties. The next day, they once again surrounded and sealed off the New Democratic Party headquarters to prevent party members from holding a mass rally calling for a direct presidential election. Members of the opposition placed under house arrest and taken into custody by the police included all the leaders of the New Democratic Party and 77 National Assembly members. Kim Yong-sam, a democrat of the opposition party, was placed under house arrest four times within a period of ten days. Another well-known person, Kim Tae-chung, has been under house arrest since 12 February, with several hundred policemen surrounding his house and forbidding anyone to enter or leave the house at will. The South Korean authorities also twice searched the New Democratic Party headquarters by force, confiscated various documents and propaganda pamphlets concerning the 10 million signature campaign, and arrested many people who had signed. At the same time, the South Korean authorities searched 129 universities and colleges, confiscated a large quantity of printed materials, and made all kinds of excuses to expel and arrest several hundred students.

After adopting savage measures to repress the democrats, the South Korean authorities resorted to appeasement by releasing a number of democrats and politicians who had been placed under house arrest. They claimed that the issue of revising the Constitution would be discussed in 1989. They also agreed to set up a commission to study the Constitution directly under the president. However, the oppressive measures adopted by the South Korean authorities have not resulted in the surrender of the opposition. Nor have their measures to pacify the opposition been of any avail. The democrats of the largest opposition party -- the New Democratic Party -- and other organizations have expressed their firm determination to oppose the proposal made by the authorities to discuss the issue of revising the Constitution in 1989, and decided to pursue the campaign to collect 10 million signatures for the revision of the Constitution. On 11 March, several thousand members of the New Democratic Party held a demonstration in Seoul, calling for efforts to revise the Constitution. It is reported that this demonstration was one of the largest political rallies since Chon Tu-hwan assumed office in 1980. Democrat Kim Tae-chun recently expressed his determination to expand and strengthen the signature campaign. He condemned the proposal made by the authorities to postpone the revision of the Constitution until 1989 as a political ploy. He said that he and Kim Yong-sam have already gathered 500 signatures each and that they expect to collect one million signatures by the end of March and 10 million signatures by 15 August.

In addition to the fact that the existing Constituion established by the South Korean authorities is far from democratic, there are even more profound social causes triggering this movement to revise the Constituion. The South Korean economy was in a state of depression last year, and the economic growth rate dropped to the lowest level since Chon Tu-hwan assumed office. The nation was heavily in debt. All factories were operating under capacity, and the unemployment rate was extremely high.

The South Korean people hope to change this situation by revising the Constitution. It seems that, regardless of the results, this signature movement aimed at revising the Constitution will have an important impact on South Korea's progress toward fostering democracy.

DPRK PRESS REFUTES SOUTH'S INVASION RUMORS

[Text] Pyongyang, March 22 (XINHUA) -- The Korean press today condemned South Korean authorities for spreading lies that the Northern part of Korea will "invade the South." Yi Ki-paek, "defence minister" of South Korea, reportedly announced at a press conference Thursday that the next two or three years are to become "a period with the biggest danger of war on the Korean peninsula," because the North might launch military invasion of the South to impede the Seoul Olympic Games and the Tenth Asian Games.

The Korean papers NODONG SINMUN, MINJU CHOSON and PYONGYANG SINMUN published commentaries today censuring the South Korean authorities for "distorting the existing relations of military strength between the North and the South." NODONG SINMUN said the South Korean authorities had on many occasions spread rumours about the "southward invasion". No such "invasion" ever occured. MINJU CHOSON said that the South Korean rumour-mongering propaganda campaign was aimed at diverting the target of the people's struggle against the Seoul authorities following the Philippine events so as to prevent the same fate that befell Philippine ex-President Ferdinand Marcos. PYONGYANG SINMUN pointed out that the main purpose of the South's propaganda was to get more military aid from the U.S.

QIAN LIREN FETES NODONG SINMUN DELEGATION

[Text] Beijing, 21 Mar (XINHUA) -- Qian Liren, director of RENMIN RIBAO, hosted a banquet at the Great Hall of the People on the evening of 21 March to warmly welcome the Korean NODONG SINMUN delegation headed by Yi Song-pok, member of the WPK Central Committee and editor-in-chief of NODONG SINMUN.

At the banquet, held in a cordial and friendly atmosphere, director Qian Liren and Yi Song-pok, head of the delegation, exchanged toasts. They agreed that Chinese and Korean journalists have contributed to enhancing the friendship and friendly cooperative relations between the parties and peoples of the two countries. Sin In-ha, DPRK ambassador to China; Li Zhuang, and Tan Wenrui, editor-in-chief and deputy editor-in-chief of RENMIN RIBAO, were present at the banquet.

The delegation arrived in Beijing on the morning of 21 March at the invitation of RENMIN RIBAO. Li Zhuang, editor-in-chief of RENMIN RIBAO, greeted the delegation at the railway station.

DPRK URGES U.S. NOT TO HAND FILM-MAKERS TO SEOUL

OW211220 Beijing XINHUA in English 1158 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] Pyongyang, March 21 (XINHUA) -- The Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) today warned the United States not to transfer to Seoul former South Korean film director Sin Sang-ok and his actress wife Choe Un-hui because they misappropriated a large sum of DPRK state fund. The General Bureau of Film of the DPRK Ministry of Culture and Art said in a statement today that such a handover would "aggravate the confrontation between the North and the South and throw a wet blanket over the resumption of North-South dialogue."

Sin and his wife, who escaped from South Korea in 1978, had "closely cooperated" with the DPRK in cinematography and "freely traveled" in both East and West European countries, the statement said. On March 13, however, the couple disappeared in Vienna, Austria. Four days later the U.S. Embassy in Austria announced that they sought "assistance" there and the U.S. authorities accepted their request accordingly. The DPRK statement pointed out that the couple's act cannot be regarded as "seeking asylum" or "defection" since they have been living in exile.

The couple's flight into the U.S. Embassy was not politically motivated, but was promoted by the criminal motive to usurp 2.3 million U.S. dollars the DPRK had provided to them for making a film with a Hungarian film studio, the statement said. Although the DPRK does not care whether they go to any other country, the statement said, it can never allow them to illegally misappropriate a large sum of its state fund. The statement noted that the South Korean authorities are now working to take over the couple.

If the U.S. authorities truly want to guarantee the basic human rights of Sin and his wife, the statement said, they must not defend their criminal attempt to usurp the money or hand them over to the South Korean authorities. On March 18, the DPRK Embassy in Austria in a statement expressed the willingness to discuss with Sin about the money problem at any place.

HU YAOBANG MEETS VISITING KOMEI PARTY DELEGATION

[Text] Beijing, March 23 (XINHUA) -- General Secretary of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee Hu Yaobang described Sino-Japanese relations as good on the whole, hoping that bilateral relations would continue to develop in a good direction. Hu made these remarks at a meeting with a delegation from the Japanese Komeito (Komei Party) headed by its secretary-general Junya Yano here this afternoon.

During the meeting, Hu stressed that it is China's set principle to pursue the policy of opening to the outside world and have longstanding friendship with Japan. Junya Yano conveyed to Hu an oral message from Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone expressing his heart-felt hope for Japan-China friendship. Junya Yano told Hu that Japan is willing to accept more Chinese students and to help Chinese enterprises update technology and improve management. Hu expressed thanks for this, saying that these are the friendly expressions of the Japanese Government and public for the Chinese people.

Hu praised the Komeito for its outstanding contributions to the cause of Sino-Japanese friendship. When Junya Yano asked Hu to comment on China's deficit in Sino-Japanese trade, Hu said that the reduction of Sino-Japanese trade deficit is a problem of concern to both sides. Sino-Japanese trade would continue to expand only when the trade deficit is reduced, he said.

Hu and the Japanese visitors also exchanged views on some international issues. Speaking of the Kampuchean question, Hu said that the unity and development of the three patriotic forces of Kampuchea and their fighting principle conformed with the interests of the people of all Asian countries, adding that their positions were fair and reasonable. Vietnam said that the three patriotic forces of Kampuchea would disappear themselves, Hu added, this was absolutely a lie. He reiterated China's firm support to the just struggle of the Kampuchean people and their armed forces till their final victory.

Junya Yano said that the Komeito held that Vietnam should withdraw its troops from Kampuchea and hoped that the three parties of Kampuchea would unite and hold talks with Vietnam for the solution of the Kampuchean problem.

On the U.S.-Soviet summit, Hu said that China welcomes the summit talks between the U.S. and Soviet leaders and hopes that both sides should have sincerity and talk well. The talks would not succeed without sincerity, Hu added. Hu asked Junya Yano to convey his greetings to Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone, Komei Party Chairman Yoshikatsu Takeiri and "Sokagakkai" honorary President Daisaku Ikeda. Among those present on the occasion were Xia Yan, president of the Chins-Japan Friendship Association and Zhang Wenjin, president of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries.

Delegation Meets Peng Zhen

[Text] Beijing, March 24 (XINHUA) -- Peng Zhen, chairman of China's National People's Congress Standing Committee, said here today that China will devote the coming two years to consolidating its achievements in the economic reform. China's main task in the first two years covered by the Seventh Five-Year Plan for Economic and Social Development (1986-1990) is to lay a foundation so that great progress can be made in the following three years, he said.

Peng made these remarks at a meeting here today with a delegation from Japan's Komei Party, led by Secretary-General Junya Yano. He told the visitors that the fourth session of China's Sixth National People's Congress, which is scheduled to begin tomorrow, would review China's work during the Sixth Five-Year Plan and examine its Seventh Five-Year Plan. Although problems have arisen in China's economic restructuring in the past five years, Peng said, they were problems arising out of progress and development. They have either been solved or are in the process of being solved, he said. Generally speaking, he said, great achievements have been made, more than what had been expected.

Peng said that it is the overall situation and main trend which play decisive roles in affairs in this world. "Therefore, we should take into account the overall situation and the main trend when considering Sino-Japanese relations," he added. Furthering the friendly relations between the two countries, he said, reflects the common wishes of the two peoples and is conducive to peace in the Far East and the world as a whole. "This is an inevitable trend of historical development as well as a popular demand. It is our hope there will be no twists and turns in the development of Sino-Japanese relations. However, it is not disastrous if twists and turns do occur; we'll just straighten them out," he said. He also praised Chairman Yoshikatsu Takeiri and other friends of China from the Komei Party for their consistent efforts in promoting friendship between the two countries.

Yano said that it was necessary for both Japan and China to promote their friendship. Both the Japanese Government and people definitely wish to take the whole situation into account to develop Japan-China friendship, he pointed out. He pledged that the Komei Party, led by Takeiri, would oppose anything unfavorable to the Japan-China friendship and work for such a friendship so that it can be carried on from generation to generation.

Yano, who is also a member of Japan's House of Representatives, conveyed to Peng Zhen a letter from Michita Sakata, speaker of Japan's House of Representatives, and greetings from Takeiri.

Peng said that he was expecting Sakata to visit China at an early date, and asked Yano to convey his best regards to Takeiri. The Japanese visitors will leave here tomorrow for other parts of China.

Feted By Wang Zhen

[Text] Beijing, March 21 (XINHUA) -- Wang Zhen, honorary president of the China-Japan Friendship Association, met and feted a delegation from the Komeito of Japan headed by its Secretary-General Junya Yano here this evening. Among those present on the occasion were Wang Zhaoguo, China's chief representative on the 21th Century Committee for China-Japan Friendship, Xia Yan, president of the China-Japan Friendship Association, and Zhang Wenjin, president of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship with Foreign Countries. The Japanese guests arrived here this afternoon on a visit to China at the invitation of the China-Japan Friendship Association.

Deng Yingchao Hosts Luncheon

[Text] Beijing, March 24 (XINHUA) -- Deng Yingchao, chairman of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference, today met a delegation from Japan's Komeito (Komei Party), here at noon time today. The delegation, headed by its Secretary-General Junya Yano, is the fourteenth one sent by the Komeito to visit China.

Deng warmly greeted the Japanese visitors when they arrived at the meeting hall. Junya Yano thanked Deng for her meeting with them in the midst of her pressing affairs. Deng told the visitors that as the fourth session of the CPPCC National Committee is now in session, and the fourth session of the sixth National People's Congress is to open tomorrow, she did be busy. "But no matter how busy I am, I should spare time to meet you because you are our old friends," Deng said.

Deng highly spoke of the contributions made by chairman Yoshikatsu Takeiri and other friends of the Japanese Komeito to the promotion of friendly relations between China and Japan, and the friendship of the two peoples. She added, "They have done a lot of work and played important roles at the critical moment of the normalization of relations between China and Japan."

Junya Yano conveyed the respects for Joshikatsu Takeiro and "Sokagakkai" honorary president Daisaku Ikeda to Deng and Deng also asked him to convey her best wishes to them. After the meeting, Deng hosted a luncheon in honor of the Japanese visitors.

NAKASONE SAYS JAPAN SHOULD DEFEND ITSELF

[Text] Tokyo, March 23 (XINHUA) -- Japan should effectively strengthen its defense forces so as to be able to "defend itself with its own hands," Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone said here today.

Addressing the 30th commencement ceremony at the National Defense Academy, Nakasone said that world peace and security is essential for Japan's continued prosperity and further advance in the 21st century. Although the U.S.-Soviet summit meeting in last autumn offered bright prospects for East-West relations, the international situation is still grim, Nakasone stressed.

NEW ZEALAND'S LANGE BEGINS OFFICIAL VISIT

Arrival In Guangzhou

OW2201810 Beijing XINHUA in English 0750 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Text] Guangzhou, March 22 (XINHUA) -- David Lange, prime minister of New Zealand, and Mrs. Lange arrived here at noon today by hovercraft from Hong Kong for an eight-day official visit to China at the invitation of Premier Zhao Ziyang. This is the first leg of Lange's China tour. He will also visit Guilin, Guiyang and Shanghai before going on to Beijing.

The prime minister and Mrs. Lange were greeted by Wu Wenying, chairman of the Chinese Government reception committee and Textile Industry Minister; Yang Deyuan, deputy governor of Guangdong Pronvince; and Zhu Senlin, mayor of Guangzhou City, at the wharf where the flags of China and New Zealand were fluttering. Two children presented the visitors with bouquets.

Wu Wenying conveyed messages from General-Secretary Hu Yaobang of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, and Premier Zhao Ziyang to Lange. In his message, Hu, who had visited New Zealand last April, sent his warm regards to Lange. Zhao, on behalf of the Chinese Government and people, extended a warm welcome to the visitors. Both of them wished the New Zealand visitors a pleasant tour and said they were expecting to meet them in Beijing.

Lange told Minister Wu that his visit to China was to further cement the friendship and cooperation between New Zealand and China. He also hoped to explore the possibility of the expansion of bilateral trade and of the reinforcement of peace and stability in the region.

On March 26 the Chinese Government will give a grand welcoming ceremony for Lange at the plaza east of the Great Hall of the People.
It was learned that Chinese leaders will confer with Lange on bilateral relations andsome important international issues as well.

This evening the People's Government of Guangdong Province was to give a welcoming banquet for Lange and his party.

Feted by Guangdong Government

[Text] Guilin, March 23, (XINHUA) -- David Lange, prime minister of New Zealand, and Mrs. Lange arrived here this morning by plane from Guangzhou.

The distinguished guests went on a sight-seeing cruise on the Lijiang River and visited the "reed flute" cave today.

In the evening, they were honored at a banquet given by Zheng Yi, vice-chairman of the people's Government of the Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region and mayor of Guilin.

David Lange is scheduled to leave here tomorrow morning for a visit to Guiyang.

REPORTAGE, COMMENTARY ON SRV REJECTION OF PROPOSAL

Interview With CGDK Leaders

BK211440 Beijing in Cambodian to Cambodia 1030 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] On the evening of 20 March, Samdech Norodom Sihanouk, president of Democratic Kampuchea, Son Sann, prime minister of the CGDK, and Khieu Samphan, vice president of Democratic Kampuchea in charge of foreign affairs, granted an interview to the correspondents of Beijing radio, television, and various newspapers of China at the residence of Samdech Sihanouk in Beijing.

Following is the recording of the questions and answers between the Chinese correspondents and the three leaders of Democratic Kampuchea [begin recording]

[Sihanouk] My respects and saluations to all brother and sister representatives of the PRC's press, radio, and television. Tomorrow morning, His Excellency Son Sann, prime minister of the CGDK, His Excellency Khieu Samphan, vice president of Democratic Kampuchea, His Excellency Son En, His Excellency Bun Say, and other personalities and Heroes who have come from the Cambodian battlefield will leave the great city of Beijing and return home after fulfilling their very important mission with me here. This afternoon, therefore, we have the great honor and satisfaction of welcoming all of you, dear Chinese friends, and we will give sincere answers to whatever you want to know. Thank you very much.

Before giving you an opportunity to raise your questions, we would like on behalf of Democratic Kampuchea as a whole, to express our gratitude to the glorious, prosperous, and beloved PRC for kindly according us firm and resolute support. This support is extremely effective, and the whole world, the whole international arena now echoes the support of the PRC for our proposal to peacefully and politically resolve the Cambodian question, that is the eight-point proposal that we have just made on 17 March. The 100 percent support of the PRC for our eight-point proposal is very significant as it has greatly boosted our morale in the struggle for national liberation and for the settlement of the Cambodian question. We express thanks from the bottom of our hearts to the PRC. Now, dear friends from the PRC's press, radio, and television, please begin your questions. The three of us are very honored to answer your questions.

[Unidentified correspondent] I am a correspondent of Radio Bejing. I have one question. Please, Samdech, tell us about the preparation of the eight-point proposal for the settlement of the Cambodian problem just put forward by the CGDK. Please tell us about the process of making this proposal.

[Sihanouk] Please allow His Excellency Khieu Samphan, vice president of Democratic Kampuchea, to represent His Excellency Son Sann, the prime minister, and myself, the president of Democratic Kampuchea, in answering this question, for he very actively discharged the task in his capacity as minister of foreign affairs concurrently with his position as vice president. He is fully qualified to explain it to you. Thank you.

[Khieu Samphan] Let me tell you that the eight-point proposal for a political solution to the Cambodian question by the CGDK is the result of the work done by all of us. This proves that, first, the combatants of our tripartite resistance forces are fighting well on the battlefield and have the goodwill to settle the Cambodian question politically and, secondly, it proves that the CGDK with Samdech Norodom Sihanouk as president and His Excellency Son Sann as prime minister is politically united. We love each other, maintain solidarity with each other, and have a unity of political views.

[Sihanouk] Thank you, Your Excellency Vice President Khieu Samphan. I am certain that his excellency the prime minister also agrees with His Excellency Khieu Samphan and I am also of the same opinion. Let me inform you that the three of us have a unity of mind and idea. It can be said today that each one of us will be answering questions on behalf of the three of us as well as in the name of the CGDK. Now, please allow his excellency Khieu Samphan to add to what he has said.

[Khieu Samphan] The process of preparing the draft political solution to the Cambodian problem was just as I told you, but the essence of the idea has been discussed for quite some time by all three of us. The Samdech has mentioned it in his statements to the press and his addresses to the United Nations. His Excellency Son Sann, too, has broached the idea. Now, what we have done is merely sum up the ideas and put them together in the eight-point draft proposal.

[Sihanouk] Thank you, sir. Now, let us have questions.

[Unidentified correspondent in Mandarin] What is the historical significance of the eight-point proposal for a political settlement of the Cambodian question, the Samdech says:

[Sihanouk] Allow me to make some explanation of this matter. After I have finished, should His Excellency Prime Minister Son Sann have something to add to my statement, he should feel free to do so, or else we may let His Excellency Vice President Khieu Samphan explain the whole thing.

As for countries that firmly support us like the PRC, such as the ASEAN countries, they have already stated their position one after another. Yesterday, I learned that many ASEAN leaders said that our proposal is excellent. As a last word, I would like to add that we cannot be more accommodating toward Vietnam and the Heng Samrin group. Vietnam has unjustly invaded and occupied my country in violation of the UN Charter, and the Heng Samrin group, whom does it represent? Certainly not the Cambodian people. Heng Samrin -- the Heng Samrin group -- represents Vietnam, Vietnamese colonialism, and the Soviet Union. It represents nothing else. We have gone as far as possible. Because we love peace, we have been polite and compromising. The United Nations demands that Vietnam withdraw all its troops unconditionally from Cambodia. This is what the United Nations demands, but we even accept that Vietnam does not have to withdraw all its troops at once. It can do this in two phases. Vietnam can withdraw part of its troops first and then we could negotiate and have a cease-fire. As for Heng Samrin, we did not refer to him before, but now we wish to negotiate with him and to establish a government with him. We agree to change our tripartite government into a quadripartite government. We allow the Heng Samrin group of traitors to enjoy the same rights as we do in the tripartite government to run in a free election. I cite only two examples to show that we cannot make any more concessions. This is what I have to explain. Now let His Excellency Son Sann and His Excellency Khieu Samphan make further comments.

[Son Sann] I would like to clarify that the Tripartite Coalition Government has made many concessions. Moreover, let me say that it is not because we have lost to the Vietnamese on the battlefield that we are calling for negotiations. At the present time, many of the Coalition Government's combatants have gone deep into the interior of Cambodia. Some strong units are even operating around Phnom Penh and some major cadres in Phnom Penh also side with us. However, all of us in western Cambodia sincerely want to put a speedy end to the Cambodian conflict through political negotiations in accordance with the UN resolutions. In sporting terms, the ball is now in the Vietnamese court. They must answer. We knew beforehand that they would say no. However, we still made the proposal because we firmly believe that in so doing the international community, especially the United Nations, would pass the judgment that we are right and the Vietnamese are wrong.

[Sihanouk] There were some mistakes in the proposal, but we worked to improve it for a peaceful settlement of the problem. This is in order to drive the Vietnamese into an impasse to deprive them of any excuses to reject our proposal and also to show our goodwill to the world, the United Nations, the international community, countries that support us, and countries that have not yet understood the misery of the Cambodian people. In our meetings in Cambodia's liberated zone, in Thailand, and in Beijing, we always held discussions to see what was still needed and we have kept adding more concessions. For this reason, in this proposal we said that since it is difficult for the Vietnamese to immediately and completely withdraw their troops as demanded by the United Nations, we agree that they can withdraw troops in two phases, pulling out part at first and keeping the rest for another withdrawal later and in the meantime holding reconciliation negotiations with Vietnam and Democratic Kampuchea in preparation for the end of the conflict. As I said just now, in the past we did not talk to Heng Samrin, but now we accept that Heng Samrin and his followers could hold talks with us and then, together, we must organize and establish a quadripartite government and free elections. These are some examples refelcting our efforts to improve our proposal to meet all the prerequisites set by Vietnam. Just as His Excellency Prime Minister Son San said, suppose Vietnam rejected this proposal. The world as a whole would support us and condemn Vietnam. Vietnam would then become more isolated and weakened. One day, then, Vietnam would be forced to negotiate to settle this problem peacefully as desired not only by us, but also by all of mankind. For the whole world, except Vietnam, the Soviet Union, and the Soviet satellites, wants to see us resolve the problems peacefully, politically.

[Correspondent] I am a correspondent of Radio Beijing. After the CGDK put forward this 8-point proposal, how many governments in the international arena have decided to support it?

[Sihanouk] Thank you for asking this question. We are very happy and satisfied with the warm reaction in the international arena to our 8-point proposal for a political, peaceful settlement of the Cambodian question. The reaction is good, especialy that of the PRC, of the ASEAN countries, and so on. Some ASEAN leaders have already expressed their feelings toward this proposal.

The international press, the newspapers in some countries, and the news agencies of some countries have also made good comments about it. They said this proposal is good and contains many new features showing that the CGDK is very flexible. We are flexible in order to find a solution to the problem. In short, all of the reaction is excellent. As for Vietnam, when first asked by the press, it said it had no knowledge of that. Later on, some Hanoi officials, not the Hanoi government officially, said they did not care and that they were not impressed. Well, beside Vietnam which is the aggressor of my country and which practices colonialism, the reaction of the majority of countries and peoples who love justice, peace, and freedom -- countries and peoples who are not necessarily our friends -- have given a good reaction to this proposal. Thank you.

[Announcer] After answering questions raised by the correspondents of Radio Beijing, television, and RENMIN RIBAO, Samdech Sihanouk answered questions of other Chinese reporters in English as follows:

[Sihanouk in English superimposed by Cambodian translation] Our proposal is fair. The leaders of our three factions have been more flexible in the settlement of the conflict between Cambodian and Vietnam. We can make no more concessions. I assure you that Cambodia in the future will be a neutral and nonaligned country and will establish relations with Vietnam. We have conceded many conditions favorable to Vietnam. In the pst, Vietnam frequently demanded that we give it assurances that we would not be a Chinese satellite. Now, we are giving assurances. It is my opinion that our proposal is approved by the people at large. Vietnam's rejection of our proposal shows its lack of sincerity. They do not keep their word, showing to the whole world that Vietnam threatens peace and stability in the world, especially in Southeast Asia, and has undermined the charter and resolutions of the United Nations. [end recording]

Commentary on SRV Position

["Commentary: Vietnam's Unjustifiable Refusal by Tang Tianri" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, March 21 (XINHUA) -- In a statement issued by its Foreign Ministry on March 19, Vietnam rejected the eight-point proposal put forward by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea for a political solution to the Kampuchean problem. On March 20, Vietnam repeated this point in its party paper NHAN DAN. These actions lay bare Vietnam's unjustifiable position and the arbitrary logic of an aggressor.

Acknowledging the fact that there are 180,000 to 200,000 Vietnamese occupation troops in Kampuchea, the Coalition Government in its proposal calls on Vietnam to enter into negotiations with it in order to discuss the process of withdrawing those troops. Moreover, it allows Vietnam to withdraw its forces from Kampuchea in two phases. In addition, in the spirit of fostering unity and conciliation among Kampucheans the proposal also allows for the Heng Samrin regime to join the resistance in a four-party government that would later hold free elections under the supervision of the United Nations.

With its aim of making Kampuchea an independent peaceful, neutral and non-aligned country ready to co-exist with Vietnam, the proposal is in keeping U.N. resolutions on Kampuchea and reveals the sincerity of the coalition government in its quest for a political solution to the Kampuchean problem. It is also conducive to the peace and stability of the Southeast Asia as a whole.

In the statement, the Vietnamese authorities attacked the proposal saying it is a "a comedy" aimed at "insulting Vietnam" and "hampering the rapid development of the dialogue in the region." The statement claimed that Vietnam would only recognize the Heng Samrin regime in Phom Penh and refuses to hold any negotiations with the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea.

The newspaper commentary repeated once again the so-called prerequisites for withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea: an end to weapons supplies for the Democratic Kampuchean resistance forces, the closing of all "refugee camps" in Thai territory, and the end of "foreign interference in the internal affairs of Kampuchea.

All these showed that Vietnam has no intention at all to withdraw its troops from Kampuchea, and no sincerity in seeking a political solution to the Kampuchean problem.

The new proposal has received wide support and respect from just and peace-loving countries, while the Vietnamese refusal of the plan goes completely against the wish of the world's people for peace.

SRV's 'Stubborn Stand'

BK210408 Beijing in Cambodian to Cambodia 1030 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Ya Ming commentary: "The Vietnamese Authorities' Stubborn Stand in Adhering to the Aggression Has Been Laid Bare"]

[Text] On 19 March, the Vietnamese authorities rejected the reasonable proposal for a political settlement of the Cambodian problem offered by the CGDK. This rejection clearly shows that the Vietnamese authorities still stubbornly adhere to their stand of clinging on to an armed aggression against Cambodia and lack the good intention to solve the Cambodian problem through peaceful means.

The Cambodian problem is one of the hot spots in the current international situation. Vietnam's aggression against Cambodia has destroyed Cambodia's peace and security and posed a grave threat to peace and stability in Southeast Asia and the Asia-Pacific region. To get rid of this heat, the world community hopes for a political settlement of the Cambodian problem as soon as possible. The resolution demanding the withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Cambodia which was adopted at every UN General Assembly in the past years and the declaration of the International Conference on Kampuchea held in 1981 have proposed correct measures for political settlement of the Cambodian problem. The CGDK's proposal for a political solution to the Cambodian problem made on 17 March is fully in accord with the spirit of these international documents. This proposal calls on Vietnam to negotiate with the CGDK in order to discuss the withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Cambodia. The proposal also states that the total withdrawal of Vietnamese may be done in two phases within a definite period of time; after the first phase of the Vietnamese troops withdrawal, Heng Samrin and his faction begin negotiations with the tripartite CGDK in order to set up a quadripartite coalition government of Cambodia with Samdech Norodom Sihanouk as president and His Excellency Son Sann as Prime Minister in conformity with the spirit of the great national union and national reconciliation. This clearly indicates the CGDK's opposition to war and its desire for peace. It also displays the CGDK's sincerity in seeking a political settlement for the Cambodian problem. This is a fair offer to Vietnam.

According to a REUTER correspondent, diplomats believed that it would be difficult for Hanoi to promptly reject this CGDK proposal But the Vietnamese authorities are more obstinately clinging to their aggression than anyone had expected. Hanoi promptly rejected this proposal.

This obstinate behavior of the Vietnamese authorities has convinced others that Vietnam's repeated statements in the past that it was willing to seek a political settlement to the Cambodian problem were just lies.

During the past years, the Vietnamese authorities repeatedly declared that to solve the Cambodian problem through political means, it is necessary to eliminate the DK resistance forces. They wanted to use this means for political settlement of the Cambodian problem as a tool to sow discord among the tripartite patriotic forces and preserve their aggression against Cambodia as a fait accompli. But his Vietnamese maneuver has failed. The CGDK Cabinet meeting held recently in Beijing has fully displayed the unity of the tripartite patriotic forces. The press communique of the CGDK cabinet meeting clearly indicated that as long as Vietnam refuses to negotiate with the tripartite CGDK to settle the Cambodian problem by political means, the CGDK will continue to carry on resolutely its unswerving patriotic struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors. To advance the struggle more effectively and progressively, the cabinet has decided to set up a military coordination committee to enhance military cooperation among the resistance forces of the three parties on the battlefield. With the broad support and sympathy of the international community, their just struggle will certainly be crowned with final victory.

CGDK Plan 'Fair and Reasonable'

HK220634 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese 22 Mar 86 p 6

[Commentator's article: "Fair and Reasonable Proposal"]

[Text] On 17 March, at the cabinet meeting presided over by Prince Norodom Sihanouk, chairman of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, which was held in Beijing, the three sides of the coalition government, after sufficient discussions, unanimously agreed and jointly put forward an 8-point proposal on the political settlement of the Cambodia question. The meeting fully showed the unity of the three sides of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea and expressed the will and wishes of the Cambodian people to oppose the aggressive war, win national independence and seek peace. It was a meeting of great historical significance. The proposal put forward by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea has won support from the ASEAN countries and the concern of all the countries in the world.

The 8-point proposal on the political settlement of the Cambodia question put forward by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea is not only fair but also reasonable. It has expressed the sincerity of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea in seeking a political settlement of the Cambodia question. The proposal called on the Vietnamese Government to hold negotiations with the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea on the process of the withdrawal of the Vietnamese troops from Cambodia, which is a most practical step forward to solve the Cambodia question. The main problem in the Cambodia question is Vietnam's invasion of Cambodia. Only when the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, which is now leading the Cambodian people in their fight against the Vietnamese aggressors for their national independence, and the Vietnamese authorities, which are directly involved in the Cambodia question, sit together and negotiate, will the Cambodia question be solved. That Vietnam withdraws all its troops from Cambodia is the key to the settlement of the Cambodian question and is the strong demand and wish of the international community and the people of all the countries in the world. In its 8-point proposal, the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea suggested that Vietnam withdraw its troops in two stages. This suggestion is a new effort made by Democratic Kampuchea to solve the Cambodia question.

The proposal also suggested that after the first stage of Vietnam's troop withdrawal from Cambodia is completed, the Heng Samrin regime be allowed to participate in negotiations with the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea so as to form a quadripartite coalition government headed by Prince Norodom Sihanouk as the head of state and Son Sann as the prime minister in the spirit of national reconciliation. The four forces in Cambodian will all have their respective right to become a political force in Cambodia.

Vietnam is the aggressor and Cambodia is the victim of aggression. The Heng Samrin regime is a puppet regime forced upon the Cambodian people by the Vietnamese authorities, which has not been recognized by the international community. The Cambodian people have the absolute right to demand an immediate, unconditional, and total withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Cambodia and the absolute right to refuse to allow the Heng Samrin regime to participate in the process of the national reconciliation. However, the proposal put forward by the three sides of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea has proceed from reality and taken into account the overall situation and is aimed at seeking unity of the nation and national reconciliation. The proposal has shown the generosity of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea.

The proposal put forward by the Coalition Government of Demoractic Kampuchea reaffirmed that the future Cambodia will be an independent country with territorial integrity, and a free, democratic, peaceful, neutral and nonaligned country with no foreign troops stationed there. The proposal also agrees that Cambodia will sign a peace and non-aggression pact with Vietnam, peacefully get along with Vietnam, and establish economic and trade relations with Vietnam. All these have fully shown that Democratic Kampuchea proceeds from the fundamental interests of the nation in seeking a settlement for the Cambodian question, and is generous and realistic without forcing anything upon any one in seeking a settlement to the Cambodia question. The proposal shows the sincerity of Demoractic Kampuchea in seeking a political solution to the Cambodia question.

However, although the Vietnamese authorities have repeatedly expressed their willingness to seek a political solution to the Cambodia question and widely publicize their sincerity in holding "negotiations" and "dialogues", they attack the 8-point proposal put forward by the Coalition Government of Demoractic Kampuchea as "not worth considering" and refused the proposal without carefully studying it as soon as the proposal was put forward. The Vietnamese authorities also issued statements attacking the reasonable proposal and terming the proposal as a measure to "stop the dialogue" and a "farce" and so on. All these have thoroughly exposed the fact that the Vietnamese authorities are not sincere in seeking a political solution to the Cambodia question. The "negotiations" and "dialogues" widely publicized by the Vietnamese authorities are nothing but deceitful "political tricks."

The Cambodia question is not only a question concerning Cambodia, but a question concerning peace and safety in Southeast Asia and the Asia-Pacific region. So the Cambodia question has aroused the concern of the international community. The United Nations has passed a resolution concerning the Cambodia question with an overwhelming majority, expressing the wish of the people of all the countries in the world to seek a resonable solution to the Cambodia question. The 8-point proposal put forward by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea conforms with the wishes of the people of all the countries in the world, so it will surely win more and more support in the international community.

The Chinese Government sets a high value on the 8-point proposal put forward by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea and thinks that the proposal is a fair-sighted policy for eliminating the hot spot of war in Southeast Asia and for easing the tension in Southeast Asia and seeking peace and stability in the region. We firmly support the strenuous efforts made by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea in seeking a political solution to the Cambodian question. However, if the Vietnamese authorities continue to carry out their stubborn policy of aggression towards Cambodia, the Chinese Government and people will, as they have done in the past, support the Cambodian people's just struggle in saving their country until it achieves the final victory. This is the firm stance taken by the Chinese Government and people.

Plan Shows 'Political Unity'

LD220329 Beijing XINHUA in English 1830 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] Bangkok, March 21 (XINHUA) -- Two top Kampuchean resistance leaders said today that the recent eight-point proposal for a political settlement of the Kampuchean problem which was put forward by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea (C.G.D.K.) demonstrated the political unity and unanimity of the tripartite government.

C.G.D.K. Prime Minister Son Sann and Vice-President of Democratic Kampuchea Khieu Samphan made the statement in an exclusive interview with XINHUA after a recent meeting of the Council of Ministers of C.G.D.K. in Beijing. They pointed out that Vietnam's quick rejection of the proposal only proved that Vietnam is not sincere when it says it desires peace.

Prime Minister Son Sann said that the C.G.D.K. Armed Forces did quite well on the battlefield this year but they want to find a political solution to the Kampuchean problem by giving Vietnam a chance to solve the problem politically, through negotiations. Vice-President Khieu Samphan stated that the eight-point proposal was a result of the efforts made by the three-party coalition government under the leadership of Samdech Norodom Sihanouk and of their united struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors. The C.G.D.K. will stick to the proposal and fight in line with the proposal, he said.

Khieu Samphan also said that the protracted war was harmful to Vietnam and an immediate and reasonable solution would be good for Vietnam. He called on the Vietnamese people to join the Kampucheans in their search for a solution to the Kampuchean problem, so that the friendly ties between them can be restored. He also disclosed that the C.G.D.K. has decided to set up a military coordination committee and a committee for press and information.

Thailand Welcomes Proposal

[Text] Bangkok, March 21 (XINHUA) -- The Thai Foreign Ministry said here today that the eight-point proposal offered by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea on March 17 is "reasonable, equitable and not difficult to accept."

Foreign Ministry spokesman Saowanit Khongsiri told a news conference that the proposal seeks to arrive at a fundamental solution to the Kampuchean problem: Vietnam withdraws all its troops from Kampuchea and let the Kampuchean people decide their own destiny and choose their leaders through free elections. He pointed out, "In its proposal, Democratic Kampuchea suggests that on condition of total withdrawal, Vietnam may pull out its troops from Kampuchea in phases and that four factions, including Heng Samrin, should all take part in seeking a solution to the Kampuchean problem."

"The proposal itself proves that it was adopted by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea free from outside interference," he added.

Saowanit said, "Vietnam has turned down the proposal of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea but people will recognize that the Vietnamese rejection is totally unjustifiable." Vietnam's stand proves that it is not willing to pull its troops out of Kampuchea but wants to control the whole of Indochina, Saowanit added.

[Text] Canberra, March 23 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Cultural Minister Zhu Muzhi left Sydney for home today at the head of a five-member government cultural delegation, after a 12-day visit to Australia. During his stay in Canberra, Zhu held talks with Barry Cohen, minister of arts, heritage and environment, on promotion of cultural exchanges between the two countries. He also met with John Brown, minister for sport, recreation and tourism.

Besides Canberra and Sydney, the Chinese delegation also toured Perth, Adelaide and Melbourne, visiting cultural institutions, museums, schools and arts centers. The delegation visited the Philippines before coming to Australia. It was the first foreign delegation to visit the Philippines since President Corazon Aquino assumed office.

PRC DIPLOMAT IN LIAOWANG ON SINO-UK COOPERATION

OW221250 Beijing XINHUA in English 1236 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Text] Hong Kong, March 22 (XINHUA) -- The satisfactory results of the recent meeting of the Sino-British Joint Liaison Group showed that close cooperation between China and Britain for maintaining Hong Kong's prosperity and stability is imperative. This remark was made by Ke Zaishuo, director of the Hong Kong and Macao Affairs Office of the Chinese Foreign Ministry, in an interview here, which is carried in the latest issue (no. 12) of the overseas edition of the Chinese magazine "OUTLOOK WEEKLY".

He said the liaison group had finished its first "cycle" of work by holding meetings in London, Beijing and Hong Kong respectively.

The Joint Liaison Group was established in accordance with the Sino-British Joint Declaration on Hong Kong's future for ensuring a smooth transfer of government in 1997 and for the effective implementation of the joint declaration.

Ke was head of the Chinese delegation to the third meeting held here between March 11 and 14.

The third meeting achieved its good results on the basis of its previous meetings, which were also successful, he said. He added that both the Chinese and British representatives were satisfied with the achievements of the meeting and Hong Kong's public opinion also showed good repercussion. Ke recalled that the two sides had at the third meeting reached an identity of views on how to ensure the continued participation of Hong Kong as a special administrative region in the GATT (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade).

The two sides also reached agreement on the terms of a right of abode endorsement which will be born as a note on the travel documents of Hong Kong residents. Ke said the Chinese delegates to the Liaison Group are willing to cooperate with their British counterparts and seek feasible solutions by taking flexible measures so long as the principle of sovereignty is observed and Hong Kong's needs and prosperity and stability are taken into consideration. If there lacked full consultation and cooperation between the two sides, he said, there would be no such achievements. Only through mutual understanding, accommodation and trust can the two sides maintain their friendly cooperation, he said.

The satisfactory solution to a few difficult and delicate problems at the group meetings, he said, not only showed the progress of the group's work but also indicated that the tasks contained in the Sino-British Joint Declaration can certainly be fulfilled. The tasks include maintaining Hong Kong's prosperity and stability, making Hong Kong's current social and economic systems as well as life style remain unchanged and retaining Hong Kong's status of free port, separate customs territory and international financial center.

Ke said that the Chinese and British joint effort to maintain Hong Kong's prosperity and stability through close cooperation is in accordance with the two countries' basic interests and all the liaison group's work serves the long-term and basic interests of the Hong Kong residents. China and Britain will cooperate not only during the transitional period of Hong Kong but also in the years after 1997, he noted.

HONG KONG, U.S. END TEXTILE TRADE TALKS

[Text] Hong Kong, March 21 (XINHUA) -- The two-day talks between Hong Kong and the United States on Hong Kong's textile exports ended here Thursday with little results, according to a Hong Kong trade department spokesman. Commenting on the talks, the spokesman said that the U.S. side had explained the problems as they saw them posed by the imports of MFA (the Multi-Fiber Arrangement) and non-MFA products, and had proposed a more restrictive regime based overall on 1985 trade levels.

In response, the Hong Kong side had queried the rationale for selecting Hong Kong for specially restrictive treatment. They stressed that based on past statistics, Hong Kong's contribution to the increase in the U.S.'s MFA imports over the period 1981-85 was only four percent. Moreover, 95 percent of Hong Kong's MFA apparel exports to the U.S.A. were already under specific quota limits, with very low growth rate averaging about one percent. The Hong Kong side also made it clear that such a regime would be incompatible with the progressive liberalization in textiles being sought in the MFA negotiations, and with the aims of the proposed new GATT (the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade) round of multilateral trade negotiations, the spokesman said. Nor was it compatible with the 1982-87 bilateral textiles agreement between Hong Kong and the United States, he added. Both sides indicated their willingness to continue a dialogue on how the MFA negotiation and any associated bilateral problems could be brought to a satisfactory conclusion, he said.

[Text] Beijing, March 24 (XINHUA) -- China welcomed Danish Prime Minister Poul Schlueter with a 19-gun salute and cheers by 300 youngsters. Schlueter arrived here yesterday for a week-long official visit to China as the guest of Premier Zhao Ziyang.

Zhao presided over today's welcoming ceremony at the Plaza East to the Great Hall of the People where the national flags of China and Denmark fluttered. As the Danish prime minister accompanied by Minister of Civil Affairs and Chairman of the Chinese Government's Reception Committee Cui Naifu, came to the plaza, Premier Zhao stepped forward to shake hands with him and exchanged greetings. Two children presented the prime minister and his wife with bouquets.

At about 8:35 hours cannons boomed a 19-gun salute as Schlueter and Zhao stood at attention for their national anthems and then reviewed a guard of honor formed by the three services of the People's Liberation Army. Present on the occasion were State Councillor and Minister of Foreign Affairs Wu Xueqian and leading members of various government departments. Later Zhao and Schlueter entered the Great Hall of the People and had a cordial talk there.

Zhao, Schlueter Hold Talks

[Text] Beijing, March 24 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang and Danish Prime Minister Poul Schlueter met here today, and expressed satisfaction over the development of trade and co-operation between their countries. They reached broad agreement on a wide range of international issues and on ways of expanding bilateral relations.

During the talks, Zhao said tension in East-West relations had relaxed to some degree following the U.S.-Soviet summit. China welcomed this. However, the two superpowers had made no progress on key issues, and had not changed their attitudes towards their rivalry for military superiority. China welcomed the willingness expressed by the United States and the Soviet Union to reduce nuclear arms drastically. "However, since they still have great differences, we demand that they carry out serious negotiations and reach a real agreement, drastically reducing nuclear weapons, without sacrificing the interests of any third country," he added.

Zhao warned there was a danger the arms race would escalate, and said China opposed the militarization of space. "Although the danger of war still exists, we are not pessimistic because the forces for world peace are also growing." he said. He believed that through the common efforts of peoples of all countries, world peace could be maintained. Hearing Schlueter's remark that both China and West Europe were playing important roles in world affairs, Zhao said that the strengthened co-operation between a China pursuing an independent policy and a united and powerful West Europe with its destiny in its own hands could act as a strong factor in the promotion of world peace and stability.

Turning to Kampuchea, Zhao said China supported the recent proposal of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea for a political solution to the troubles there. Their "reasonable" proposal demonstrated the Coalition Government's sincerity, and would also test the Vietnamese authorities' sincerity about a political solution in Kampuchea. Zhao spoke highly of the Danish Government's "just demands" for the withdrawal of foreign troops from Kampuchea and Afghanistan.

Both men expressed the wish to expand friendly co-operation between their countries, and agreed there was great potential. Zhao said it was China's policy to develop trade and economic and technical co-operation with West European countries. Schlueter replied that he was proud of the great importance China attached to developing relations with his country. Denmark was willing not only to exchange products with China, but also to work together with China to explore new fields of co-operation. Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian and Minister of Civil Affairs Cui Naifu were present at the meeting.

[Text] Mogadishu, March 21 (XINHUA) -- Chinese President Li Xiannian arrived here this afternoon for a three-day state visit on the fourth leg of a five-nation Asian and African tour.

Li, 77, the first Chinese head of state to visit Somalia, arrived at the Somali airport from Luxor, Egypt, where he had made a one day stopover.

The president was warmly greeted at the airport by Somali President Mohamed Siad Barre, the First Vice President Mohamed Ali Samantar, Second Vice President Hussein Kulmie Afrah and other high ranking government officials. The Chinese president said in an arrival statement that there exists a time-honored traditional friendship between China and Somalia. "Through my current visit our friendly relations and cooperation will further develop on the present basis," he said.

On his way to the State House, where Li will stay during the visit, the Chinese president laid a wreath at the Dhagahtuur "stone-throwing" monument, which commemorates the struggle for Somalia's national independence in 1949. The Chinese president is expected to hold talks with his counterpart on bilateral and international issues of common concern, and an agreement on loans provided by China to Somalia will be signed during the visit.

Visits Mogadishu Stadium

[Text] Mogadishu, March 22 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese President Li Xiannian was given a warm welcome this morning when he visited the Mogadishu Stadium and a revolutionary youth center at Afgooye in the suburbs of Mogadishu. President Li came to the stadium, which was built from 1975 to 1977 jointly by the two countries, at 10:15 a.m. together with President Siad Barre. Hundreds of young people cheered and danced outside of the stadium to express their warm welcome to the visiting Chinese president. Young people beat drums and shouted in rhythm "welcome, welcome" in Chinese.

An official from the Ministry of Labour and Sports told President Li that the stadium is a vivid symbol of the friendship between the two countries. The stadium can accommodate 30,000 spectators with a tournament ground and grounds for track and field, football, basket-ball, volley-ball and tennis.

After his visit to the Mogadishu Stadium President Li proceeded to the revolutionary youth center at Afgooye, 30 kilometers of the city. Thousands of young people waited at the roadside to welcome the visiting Chinese president. The youth center is a welfare organization run by the Somali Government to give education to orphans and children from poor families. At noon President Barre gave a luncheon at Afgooye in honor of President Li and his party. Somali artists performed folk dance under the shadow of trees for the Chinese guests. First Vice President Mohamed Ali Samantar and Second Vice President Hussein Kulmie Afrah were present on the occasion.

Li, Siad Barre Hold Talks

[By reporters Zhu Shaohua and Teng Wenqi]

[Text] Mogadishu, 22 Mar (XINHUA) -- PRC President Li Xiannian and Somali President Siad Barre held official talks this morning at the People's Hall in Mogadishu. At the beginning of the talks, President Siad Barre extended a warm welcome to President Li on his visit to Somalia. For years, he said, Somalia has all along felt that China is a friend at all times, and the people rejoice heartily at President's Li's visit.

President Li said: China and Somalia are very friendly countries. The Chinese Government and people are happy to see that the Somali Government and people have striven ceaselessly to find a road of development suited to their national conditions; have made unremitting efforts to overcome natural disasters, promote economic growth, and improve the people's living standards; and have achieved gratifying results in this regard. President Li continued: In international affairs, the Somali Government pursues a nonalignment policy; opposes imperialism, colonialism, racism, and power politics; supports the southern African and Arab people in their just struggles; and stands for the establishment of a new international economic order. It has made valuable contributions to safeguarding the Third World's rights and interests as well as global peace. China expresses admiration and appreciation for this.

President Li thanked President Siad Barre and the Somali Government and people for their warm welcome. He said that President Siad Barre is the Chinese people's old friend, who has always worked for the development of friendly relations between the two countries. President Li added: "The purpose of my current visit is to see the old friend and to exchange views with the president on bilateral relations and on international issues of common concern. I am confident that this visit will help develop the friendly and cooperative relations between our two countries and the friendship between our two peoples."

After the talks between President Li and President Siad Barre, Chinese State Councillor Chen Muhua and Somali Foreign Minister Jama Barre carried out their talks. During the talks, both sides expressed satisfaction with the identity of their views on a wide range of major international issues and with the smooth development of their bilateral relations of friendship and cooperation. Both sides said that they would make joint efforts to further expand and step up the economic and technical cooperation between the two countries.

Chinese Vice Minister of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Lu Xuejian and Somali Vice Minister of National Planning Yusuf Ali Usman conducted specific consultations on questions concerning bilateral economic and technical cooperation. The talks proceeded in a sincere and friendly atmosphere. Others attending the talks on the Chinese side were Vice Foreign Minister Qi Huaiyuan, Assistant Foreign Minister Tang Longbin, and Chinese Ambassador to Somalia Shi Chengxun. Attending the talks on the Somali side were First Vice President and Minister of Defense Samantar, Second Vice President and Minister of National Planning Kulmie Afrah, Minister of Juba Valley Development Habib Ahmed, Minister in the President's Office Ahmed Addou, and Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Ali Hamid.

Siad Barre Hosts Banquet

[Text] Mogadishu, March 22 (XINHUA) -- Somali President Mohamed Siad Barre today described the current visit to Somalia by Chinese President Li Xiannian as "a historic occasion for the development of Sino-Somali relations."

Speaking at a state banquet in honor of the Chinese president, who is the first Chinese head of state to visit Somalia, President Siad Barre noted that there is no easing of tensions in the current world situation and said the responsibility for world peace and security lies with the big powers, especially the nuclear powers. He said that Somalia welcomes the resumption of U.S.-Soviet arms reduction talks and "urges them to save the world from nuclear holocaust which is becoming ever more real day after day."

Referring to the problem of the Horn of Africa, he said the leaders of Somalia and Ethiopia have recently met in Djibouti to define the basic differences between the two countries and to recommend solutions to those differences, which should take into consideration the rights and aspirations of all parties. He condemned the South African authorities for their illegal occupation of Namibia and for their arrogant obstruction of Namibia's independence. "The international community should take all possible steps, including the strict application of mandatory economic sanctions against the apartheid regime," he said.

The Somali president called for the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Afghanistan and Kampuchea so that their peoples could determine their own future without outside interference. On the Middle East question, Siad Barre pointed out, "There can be no peace in the Middle East without Israeli withdrawal from all occupied Arab territories, including the holy city of Jerusalem, and without the realization of the rights and aspirations of the Palestinian people."

Chinese President Li said in his reply that "Peace and development are where the interests of the people of the world lie. To pursue development in peace and promote peace with development has become an irresistible trend of history." Li spoke highly of the position taken by the 21st Organization of African Unity (OAU) summit -- to strengthen through unity -- and believed that with wide-spread support of the international community, the African countries will surely make steady progress in their efforts to restore and develop their economy. Li said Sino-Somali friendship has stood the test of time and is full of vitality. China is ready to constantly explore and open up new fields of cooperation on the basis of equality and mutual benefit. He said, "Through the efforts of both parties, our friendly relations and cooperation will surely bear still richer fruit."

The Chinese president arrived here yesterday for a four-day state visit, the fourth leg of his current five-nation Asian and African tour, which has taken him to Bangladesh, Sri Lanka and Egypt. He will leave for Madagasgar next Monday.

The visiting president was speaking at a banquet given in his honor by Somali President Mohamed Siad Barre. Li Xiannian, who arrived here for a four-day visit to Somalia, expressed his thanks to President Mohamed Siad Barre and the Somali Government and people for their warm welcome and hospitality. In his speech he traced Sino-Somali traditional friendship back to the mid-15th century when the famous Chinese navigator Zheng He sailed across vast oceans and visited Somalia several times. He said that after the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries, the then Chinese Premier Zhou Enlai paid a visit to Somalia and President Mohamed Siad Barre also visited China twice, thus laying a solid foundation for the smooth development of Sino-Somali friendly relations and cooperation. Referring to Somalia's development and progress, Li Xiannian said that the Somali Government and people have made "unremitting efforts in overcoming natural disasters, promoting economic development and improving the living standards of the people and have achieved gratifying results."

On international affairs, he said, Somalia has pursued a policy of non-alignment, opposed imperialism, colonialism and racism, supported the just struggles of the southern African and Arab peoples, stood for the establishment of a new international economic order and done much useful work for safeguarding the Third World's rights and interests and world peace. Li Xiannian said that China has firmly pursued an independent foreign policy of peace, opposed hegemonism of all descriptions and worked to establish or develop normal relations with various countries on the basis of the five principles of peaceful coexistence. "We will, as always, strengthen unity and cooperation with other Third World countries, support the African people in their struggle against racism practised by the South African authorities, and support the just struggle of the people of other countries," he added.

He noted that the 21st OAU summit meeting has listed the resolving of Africa's economic difficulties as a major agenda item and adopted appropriate resolutions to this end. He believed that the African countries, with the support of the international community, will surely make steady progress in their efforts to restore and develop their economy, making still greater contributions to world peace and development.

[Text] Mogadishu March 23 (XINHUA) -- Chinese President Li Xiannian visited a hospital and a university here this morning in the company of Somali President Mohamed Siad Barre. At 10:15 a.m. President Li Xiannian arrived at the Benadir Maternity Hospital from his residence, Villa Somalia. Hundreds of people including members of the Chinese medical team working there, welcomed him at the gate.

Presidents Li Xiannian and Siad Barre broke the ground and laid a foundation stone in the compound for the extension project of the hospital, which was inscribed with words "this hospital is a symbol of friendship between the Chinese people and the Somali people." Built in 1977 with Chinese assistance, this hospital has departments of maternity, internal medicine, pediatrics and surgery. At present the hospital has 300 beds and will have 120 more beds after extension. After touring the hospital the two presidents proceeded to the faculty of political science of the Somali National University which was built by a contracted Chinese construction company and completed in 1985.

Agreements Signed

[Text] Mogadishu, March 23 (XINHUA) -- An agreement on Sino-Somali cooperation in economics and technology was signed here this afternoon at the People's Hall after the conclusion of talks between visiting Chinese President Li Xiannian and Somali President Mohamed Siad Barre. An official of the Chinese Foreign Ministry told XINHUA that the two sides in their talks had identical or similar views on major international issues. "The relations of cooperation and friendship between the two countries are developing. Both sides are satisfied with the results of their talks," he noted.

In the talks President Li once again expressed his thanks to president Siad Barre, the Somali Government and people for their warm welcome and hospitality, the official added. The agreement was signed by State Councillor of China Chen Muhua and Somali Foreign Minister Abdurahman Jama Barre on behalf of their respective governments. After the signing ceremony Chen and Jama Barre exchanged notes on the granting to Somalia of 20,000 suits of children clothes by China. Chinese officials present at the talks and signing ceremony were Deputy Foreign Minister Qi Huaiyuan and Deputy Minister of Economy and Trade Lu Xuejian. Attending on the Somali side were Second Vice-President Hussein Kulmie Afrah and Minister of Information and National Guidance Mohamed Omar Jess.

Li Television Interview

[Text] Mogadishu, March 23 (XINHUA) -- China welcomes and supports the recent meeting of Somali President Siad Barre and Ethiopian head of state Chairman Mengistu on the peaceful resolution of their conflicts. This statement was made here today by visiting Chinese President Li Xiannian in an interview with Somali television reporters. Li said that their meeting would certainly help the cause of peace and stability in the Horn of Africa.

In a reply to a question about China's views on the situation in southern Africa, the Chinese president stated, "the stand of the Chinese Government on the problems in southern Africa has always been consistent. We support resolutely the just struggles of the Namibian people for independence and the South African people against apartheid." He said "we have always believed that the South African authorities should abandon their system of apartheid and policy of destabilizing their neighbours, end their illegal occupation of Namibia and implement Resolution 435 of the U.N. Security Council." "We hope that the international community will adopt effective measures and exert pressures on the South African regime," Li added.

Li, in his reply to a question by Somali television on the situation in southeast Asia, noted "The Chinese Government has always spared no efforts to preserve peace and stability in this region. We resolutely support the just struggle of the Kampuchean people under the leadership of the Kampuchean national united government against foreign military aggression and occupation."

On his current civit to Somalia, the Chinese president said that the two countries have signed an agreement of cooperation in economic and technological fields. He said he believes his visit would promote the development of cooperation and deepen the understanding and friendship existing between the two countries.

Chinese Deputy Foreign Minister Qi Huaiyuan today also gave an interview to Somali national news agency. On the Middle East question Qi stated "the nucleus of the Middle East question is the problem of Palestine. Without resolution of this problem the Middle East cannot have peace. The principled stand of the Chinese Government on Palestine is that an assurance must be guaranteed to restore the inalienable national rights of the Palestianian people including their rights of returning to their homeland, for self-determination and to build their own country."

On African drought and desertification, the Chinese deputy foreign minister said: "China has always been concerned about and sympathized with the African drought vitims. The Chinese Government has made efforts within its power to provide various kinds of assistance including grain, farm tools and medicine to relieve the situation. We shall continue to help African countries overcome the effects caused by drought." As for the desertification, he noted "China itself has the similar problem. We would like to exchange experiences in cooperation with African countries to contain desertification."

Li Hosts Banquet

[Text] Mogadishu, March 23 (XINHUA) -- Chinese President Li Xiannian said today that the joint efforts of Somalia and China will ensure the further development of friendly relations and cooperation between the two countries. This remark was made by Li at a return banquet given by him and his wife Lin Jiamei in honour of Somali President Mohamed Siad Barre and Mrs. Siad Barre. The Chinese president arrived here on March 21 for a four-day state visit.

President Li said, "In the past few days, thanks to the thoughtful arrangements made by the Somali Government, we have seen something of the gratifying achievements of the Somali people in developing the economy and building up the country, and felt deeply the friendly sentiments of the fraternal Somali people towards the Chinese people." "I am happy to see that some Chinese engineers and technicians are working shoulder to shoulder with their Somali brothers and sisters," the president added.

Siad Barre, in his reply at the banquet, said "the friendship and cooperation between our two countries goes well beyond mere sentiments and is deeply rooted and broadly based. The reason for this is not hard to grasp. It stems from the mutual trust and confidence that had always characterized the relations between our two countries and peoples." He stated that the efforts of the two countries in the development of cooperation in the political, economic, trade, cultural and other fields have always been characterized by realism, seriousness and effectiveness. President Siad Barre stated "the two countries have taken further steps in advancing and promoting their common endeavour for mutually beneficial and fruitful cooperation."

Present at the banquet from Somalia were First Vice President and Minister of Defence Ali Samatar, Second Vice President and Minister of National Planning Hussein Kulmie Afrah, Minister of the Interior Ahmed Suleiman Abdalle, Minister of Mining and Water Resources Ahmed Mohamed Farrah and Minister of Foreign Affairs Abdurahman Jama Barre as well as Chairman of the National People's Assembly Mohamed Ibrahim Ahmed. Chinese State Councillor Chen Muhua, Deputy Foreign Minister Qi Huaiyuan, Deputy Minister of Economy and Foreign Trade Lu Xuejian and Chinese Ambassador to Somalia Shi Chengxun were present.

XI ZHONGXUN, OTHERS ADDRESS PREVIEW OF CPPCC, NPC

OW231041 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1653 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 22 Mar (XINHUA) -- The CPC Central Committee invited non-Communist Party personages to attend a forum at Huairentang in Zhongnanhai this morning. Xi Zhongxun, Tian Jiyun, Chen Pixian, and Wang Zhaoguo, leading comrades of the CPC Central Committee, happily gathered under the same roof with more than 60 people from all walks of life who are non-Communist Party members. In a democratic and warm atmosphere they fully consulted with each other on matters concerning the forthcoming Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC and Fourth Session of the Sixth National CPPCC Committee.

Xi Zhongxun, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee, presided over the forum. He said: Before the opening of these two important meetings, the CPC Central Committee invites you to hold this forum so as to consult with you on the principal guidelines of the two meetings. This has been our party's tradition and style as well as one of the weapons with which our common cause wins victories. He then asked Chen Pixian, member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, to report to the forum participants on the CPC Central Committee's ideas on the principal guidelines of the two meetings.

Chen Pixian said: China's present political and economic situation is truly very good. Our reforms have made important headway. We have fulfilled the Sixth 5-Year Plan. Along with the economic development, the living standard of the people both in cities and the countryside has greatly improved. China's economy continues to develop steadily in a coordinated way, and we are enjoying further political stability and unity. Our party style and general mood of society are continuously changing for the better. Some negative phenomena are being eliminated. Of course, there are still shortcomings in our work and difficulties in our way ahead. Our party style and general mood of society still fail to fundamentally improve. Factors causing instability in economic life still exist. Our reforms still call for further coordinated efforts and perfection. In a word, quite a few things still do not turn out as we wish. We need to make more efforts.

He said: The goals we want to achieve in the last half of the 1980's are the principal topic to be discussed at these two sessions. Generally speaking, the coming 5 years will be crucial, 5 years which will determine the prosperity or decline, the success or failure, of our cause. If we do well in these 5 years, we will be able to lay a solid foundation for development in the next 5 years or even for a longer period to come. He said: The Seventh 5-Year Plan is a great blueprint for laying a firm foundation to fully achieve the strategic objectives set by the 12th CPC National Congress and an action program for mobilizing the people throughout the country to devote themselves heart and soul to structural reform and bringing about progress in socialist modernization. It is the first time a 5-year plan is submitted to the NPC Session in the first year of the 5-year period for examination and approval.

Chen Pixian described the process of formulating the draft of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. He said: A major characteric in formulating the Seventh 5-Year Plan is that extensive work was done to have experts and scientists in various fields join the work and take part in studying and discussing problems. They offered suggestions and pooled their wisdom, and played a very good role in elevating the scientific level of the plan. Rich in content, the Seventh 5-Year Plan clearly sets forth the fundamental tasks and principal goals of economic and social development as well as the orientation, targets, policies, and measures for the work in all fields during the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Then he stated several principal goals contained in the draft Seventh 5-Year Plan.

Chen Pixian said: The Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC will examine and approve the final state accounts for last year and the state budget for this year. In addition, it will examine and approve this year's national economic and social development plan. These are also of great importance. The Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC will examine several important draft laws, namely, the draft General Principles of the Civil Law, Compulsory Education Law, and Law of Enterprises With Foreign Investment, he said.

He said: After enacting several laws aimed at adjusting civil relations, the NPC and its Standing Committee are now able to draw up the General Principles of the Civil Law and work out rules governing an array of issues of the same nature. Enactment of the General Principles of the Civil Law will help safeguard and promote the program of the four modernizations and is a matter of great concern both at home and abroad. The enactment of the Compulsory Education Law was proposed in the CPC Central Committee's decision on reform of the education system. It meets the urgent requirements of building the two civilizations and is of great strategic importance to improving the scientific and cultural quality of the whole nation. The Law of Enterprises With Foreign Investment is a significant law which will enable our country to expand its economic cooperation and technological exchange with foreign countries and encourage foreign investors to establish enterprises in our country solely with their own investment.

He said: Striking at serious economic crimes is an important question about which all people throughout the country are presently concerned. The forthcoming NPC Session will, according to law, hear and examine the work reports of the Supreme People's Court and the Supreme People's Procuratorate. Examination of these two reports at the session will give powerful support and a mighty impetus to the judicial and procuratorial departments in furthering their work of dealing blows at economic and all other crimes.

After Chen Pixian's talk, Xi Zhongxun briefed the forum on a number of important issues which will be discussed and decided on at the NPC and CPPCC sessions. He said: Concerning the questions to be discussed and decided on at the NPC and CPPCC sessions, the CPC Central Committee hopes that, in order to solve them with joint efforts, everyone will say everything he knows and say it without reserve.

As soon as Xi Zhongxun finished his briefing, many people vied with one another to the take the floor.

Zhou Gucheng, vice chairman of the Central Committee of the Chinese Peasants and Workers Democratic Party, said: During the Sixth 5-Year Plan, China's national economic development was indeed encouraging. If we can formulate a good Seventh 5-Year Plan and bring into full play the enthusiasm and creativity of the millions upon millions of people, China's economy will surely take a giant step forward.

Qian Changzhao, vice chairman of the Central Committee of the Chinese KMT Revolutionary Committee, said: From now on, in our national construction, we must control population growth; do a good job in compulsory education, eliminating illiteracy, and literary and art work; raise management levels; stress electric power construction; introduce science and technology to the countryside; pay attention to the quality of products; promote cooperation; and raise work efficiency. He suggested that in formulating the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we must particularly stress "steadiness."

Fei Xiaotong, vice chairman of the Central Committee of the China Democratic League, said: During the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we must pay attention to helping the national minority areas in their economic and cultural development and attach particular importance to solving the population question.

He said: In solving the population question, first, it is necessary to control the size of the population; second, it is necessary to raise the quality of the population; and third, it is necessary to pay attention to the proper distribution of the population. It is an important issue of concern to the coming generations.

Sun Xiaocun, vice chairman of the Central Committee of the China Democractic National Construction Association, said: Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the CPC Central Committee has been carrying forward its democratic tradition and sincerely listened to views from various quarters. This is very admirable. The line, principles, and policies adopted by the party since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee have won the people's wholehearted support. In particular, the party's style of seeking truth from facts and its spirit of seeking self-perfection have given the people encouragement. The Chinese people's tremendous achievements under the leadership of the CPC during the Sixth 5-Year Plan have been universally acknowledged. It is only normal that some problems have emerged in economic construction. This is understandable. After hearing the explanations given by Comrade Chen Pixian, we can see that in the draft Seventh 5-Year Plan, attention is directed at problems that appeared during the Sixth 5-Year Plan, and effective measures have been worked out to deal with them. This shows that the current CPC Central Committee has a clear idea about these problems. Therefore, we are fully confident with regard to the formulation and implementation of the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

Seypidin Aizezi, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, said: The party Central Committee has attached great importance to economic and cultural development in national minority areas. The comrades of minority nationalities welcome comrades of the Han nationality in helping them develop economic and cultural undertakings. I believe that the economy and culture in the national minority regions will flourish under the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

The forum conducted consultations on personnel questions to be discussed and decided on at the forthcoming sessions.

At the end of the meeting, Xi Zhongxun said: The views all of you have expressed are very good. They touch on many important and key issues and are of valuable reference for the work of the CPC Central Committee and the two sessions. He extended thanks to the old friends attending the meeting on behalf of the CPC Central Committee. Attending the meeting were responsible persons of the NPC Standing Committee, the CPPCC National Committee, and various democratic parties; nonpartisan personages; and responsible persons of various people's organizations and departments concerned. They included: Peng Chong, Ngapoi Ngawang Jigme, Wang Hanbin, Yang Qingren, Burhan Shahidi, Zhou Shaozheng, Yang Zhengmin, Peng Qingyuan, Li Ganliu, Chu Tunan, Gao Tian, Ye Duyi, Wang Guoquan, Feng Tiyun, Jiang Daning, Chen Xunli, Ge Zhicheng, Fang Rongxin, Zhang Shiming, Xu Zhimeng, Lu Rongshu, Zhou Peiyuan, Sun Chengpei, Zhao Weizhi, Li Chunqing, Xu Mengshan, Hu Ziang, Gu Gengyu, Sun Fuling, Huang Liangchen, Fan Taozhai, Wang Kenzhong, Peng Tengyun, Cheng Jian, Zhang Qiao, Cheng Siyuan, Zhao Junmai, Wang Li, Zhang Fuyou, Li Yuanchao, Wang Qingshu, Zhuang Mingli, Cheng Yuan, Wei Jianxing, Bai Zhimin, Yan Mingfu, Li Gui, Li Ding, Ping Jiesan, Ismail Amat, and Ren Wuzhi.

CPPCC OFFICIAL ANNOUNCES MEETING AGENDA

[Text] The Fourth Session of the Sixth CPPCC National Committee is scheduled to open at 1500 on 23 March in the Great Hall of the People and will last about 20 days, said Sun Yiqing, deputy secretary general of the CPPCC National Committee, at a news conference held yesterday, 22 March, concerning the inauguration of this session.

Sun Yiqing briefed the Chinese and foreign reporters on new developments of the work of China's patriotic united front and the CPPCC over the past year. He said: Compared with 1984, 155 local organizations and more than 70,000 new members have been added to the CPPCC. CPPCC organizations at all levels have made ceaseless efforts to open new areas of work for the sake of the four modernizations and the cause of reunification of the motherland, resulting in a new, unprecedented, lively, and vigorous situation.

He said: When the Third Session of the Sixth CPPCC National Committee was held, there were 2,025 National Committee members. From that time to the present, the membership has been reduced by 66 due to resignation and death from illness of some members. With recommendations and consultations made by the CPC, various democratic parties, democratic personages without party affiliation, people's organizations, and departments concerned, 61 new members were elected at the 11th meeting of the Standing Committee of the 6th CPPCC National Committee.

Deputy Secretary General Sun Yiqing stated the main items on the agenda of the Fourth Session of the Sixth CPPCC National Committee. The session will hear, examine, and discuss a work report of the Standing Committee of the Sixth CPPCC National Committee and will examine and discuss work reports on handling of motions, foreign affairs, and literary and historical source materials. The CPPCC National Committee members will attend the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC as observers. Additional vice chairmen of the CPPCC National Committee, additional members of its Standing Committee, and a new secretary general will also be elected.

Discusses Taiwan Contacts

[Excerpts] Beijing, March 22 (XINHUA) -- New vice-chairmen of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference (CPPCC) will be elected during the 20-day fourth session of the Sixth National Committee to begin tomorrow. This was announced by Sun Yiqing, spokesman for the session, at a press conference here this afternoon.

Answering a question about the CPPCC's role in resolving the Taiwan question, the spokesmen said promoting the reunification of the motherland has been one of the three major tasks of the CPPCC. In addition to doing work among relatives of Taiwan compatriots on the mainland, the CPPCC has also enhanced contacts with compatriots in Taiwan, Hong Kong and Macao and Chinese nationals residing abroad. Sun described it as an important task of the CPPCC to increase friendship with people of other countries in contribution to world peace. In the past few years, the CPPCC has established links with similar institutions in eight countries including Korea, Thailand and Romania. More people-to-people contacts with other countries will be carried out in the future. the spokesman promised. In the past year, more than 70,000 new members and 155 local organizations have been added to the CPPCC. So far, CPPCC organizations have been established in more than 2,800 counties with a total membership of more than 250,000 nationwide.

Hu Ziang Work Report

OW240545 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1424 GMT 23 Mar 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 23 Mar (XINHUA) -- Hu Ziang, vice chairman of the CPPCC National Committee, delivered a report on the work of the Standing Committee of the Sixth National Committee of the CPPCC this afternoon at the opening ceremony of the Fourth Session of the Sixth National Committee of the CPPCC. He said that in the past year CPPCC organizations at all levels across the country have continuously opened up new domains of work around the tasks of the four modernizations and reunification of the motherland; and a lively, new situation never seen before has emerged.

In his report, Hu Ziang reviewed in particular the main work of the CPPCC National Committee in the past year:

-- Actively participated in the consultations and discussions of major national policies. Before the National Congress of Party Delegates was convened in September 1985, the CPC Central Committee sponsored a forum on the main topics of the congress to solicit opinions. Some 50 vice chairmen and Standing Committee members of the CPPCC National Committee in Beijing attended the forum by inviation. They discussed the question of further readjusting the members of CPC leading organs and the "proposal of the CPC central committee for the Seventh 5-Year Plan for national economic and social development (draft)." They unanimously expressed their ardent support and offered many valuable suggestions with regard to the drafting of the proposal for the Seventh 5-Year Plan. In October of the same year the Standing Committee of the CPPCC National Committee held its 10th meeting to hear a report by Li Peng, member of the Political Bureau of Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee and vice premier, on drafting the proposal for the Seventh 5-Year Plan and the question of further readjusting the members of the CPC leading organs.

-- Made new contributions around the tasks of reform and construction. By closely centering on the problems in reform and construction crying for solution, during the past year, the CPPCC organized its members to conduct 14 investigations of special subjects, and conducted studies and inspections in nine provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions. It also sponsored 71 forums on special topics covering matters regarding reform of the economic structure that are of interest to workers, reform of the structure of higher education, reform of the science and technology management system, the problem of grain production, lightening of the peasants' burden, development of tertiary industry, monetary management, development of postal and telecommunications services, and energy.

-- Carried out new explorations in promoting spiritual civilization.

-- Strengthened ties with and guidance over local CPPCC work. To further push forward local CPPCC work, the CPPCC National Committee successively sent five investigation groups to nine provinces and municipalities in the second half of 1985 to inspect local CPPCC work.

-- Made new progress in the work of promoting reunification of the motherland. By "inviting them in" and "going abroad ourselves," the CPPCC National Committee further expanded its contacts during the past year with compatriots in Taiwan, Hong Kong, and Macao as well as Overseas Chinese. These efforts have yielded rather good results in enhancing their understanding of the motherland and the scientific conception of "one country, two systems."

-- Carried out people-to-people diplomatic activities in different ways and through different channels while conducting friendly exchanges with counterpart organizations in some foreign nations.

Hu Ziang said: The tasks of the CPPCC in the last 4 years of the 1980's are to serve the three major tasks focusing on socialist modernization. The emphasis of our work is to promote economic structural reform and the socialist spiritual civilization while continuing to help the Chinese Communist Party and the government develop economic construction.

He proposed that the CPPCC National Committee pay special attention to the following four tasks this year. Offering advice for smooth implementation of the Seventh 5-Year Plan and the economic structural reform by further bringing into play the role of political consultation and democratic supervision and by taking advantage of its galaxy of talent; devoting more efforts to pushing ideological construction forward and contributing more to the development of the socialist spiritual civilization while continuing to expedite cultural and educational understandings; fully mobilizing the enthusiasm of committee members and giving play to their special skills and other favorable qualifications to make them serve the policy of opening to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy and contribute to the reunification of the motherland and to people-to-people diplomacy. The CPPCC national organizations should play an exemplary role for CPPCC organizations at all levels across the country.

In conclusion, Hu Ziang said in his report that we have achieved rather good results in our work during the past year. In the new year we must further carry forward the fine CPPCC traditions and work style as well as the spirit of the foolish old man, to keep up the practice of building up the country through thrift and hard work, unite as one, work hard in a down-to-earth manner, and contribute more to achieving the Seventh 5-Year Plan, implementing the economic structural reform, and bringing about a fundamental turn for the better in party work style and social conduct.

Yang Chengwu Reports

[Text] Beijing, March 24 (XINHUA) -- China's People's Political Consultative Conference organizations have collected historical data totalling 500 million characters since 1959, the Fourth Session of the CPPCC National Committee was told here today. More than 200 types of selected historical data and 100 titles of special data have been published, Yang Chengwu, vice-chairman of the National Committee, said in a report to the session. Most CPPCC organizations have set up offices in charge of collecting historical data, and 100 types of data books and journals are published every year, he said. CPPCC is an organization for political consultation and democratic supervision. Its members include public figures, scientists, professors, scholars and specialists.

Yang said that CPPCC has cooperated with other departments in compiling data on celebrated people including Xu Beihong, Yang Hucheng, Tan Kah-kee, Deng Boashan, Deng Yanda, Zhang Zhizhong, Fu Zuoyi, Wei Lihuang and Li Jishen and on the Huangpu [Whampoa] Military Academy.

CPPCC is now preparing a series of books based on personal experiences of former Kuomintang generals, which report most of the major operations fought by Kuomintang troops during the war of resistance against Japanese aggression (1937-45).

Yang said that CPPCC will organize former industrialists and business people into collecting data relating to foreign trade, finance, banking and Sino-Foreign joint venture to meet the need of the current economic restructuring. It will also collect data among compatriots in Hong Kong Macao and Taiwan as well as Chinese nationals residing abroad, he added.

In another report on people's diplomacy, Vice-Chairman Cheng Zihua said, CPPCC has sent 11 delegations to visit eight countries over the past three years. Meanwhile, it has invited nine foreign delegations to visit China and received 1,100 people from 50 countries together with other departments. In addition to delegations, CPPCC will send specialized groups abroad for academic exchanges in the future, Cheng told the meeting.

Today's meeting was presided over by Vice-Chairman Liu Lantao.

RENMIN RIBAO EDITORIAL HAILS CPPCC OPENING

OW222130 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1815 GMT 22 Mar 86

[RENMIN RIBAO 23 March editorial: "New Plan. New Tasks, New Horizon — Greeting the Opening of the Fourth Session of the Sixth CPPCC National Committee"]

[Text] Beijing, 22 Mar (XINHUA) -- The Fourth Session of the Sixth National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference [CPPCC] opens today in Beijing. We extend our warm congratulations on the opening of the session.

The session is convened at a time when we have successfully completed the Sixth 5-Year Plan and have just launched the Seventh 5-Year Plan. The last 5 years have been 5 years of brave advances by the Chinese people of all nationalities under the leadership of the CPC and along the line decided upon by the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. They have been 5 years of great achievements scored on China's political, economic, scientific, educational, cultural, national defense, and diplomatic fronts, as well as 5 years of substantial growth in the organization and work of the CPPCC.

Over the past 5 years, the work of the CPPCC has grown beyond large and medium-sized cities to all parts of the country. As of the end of 1985, there were some 2,800 CPPCC organizations at various levels with a total of 350,000 members throughout the country. Both are record figures. The closer and more extensive ties between CPPCC organizations and the masses of people in various circles amply reflect the development and growth to maturity of the patriotic united front in the new era. What is more important is that, adhering to the principle of seeking grand unity and reunification under the banner of patriotism in an energetic, active, realistic, and innovative spirit in all fields, the CPPCC National Committee and CPPCC organizations at all levels have instilled unprecedented vitality into the work of the CPPCC, thereby playing an increasingly important role in the great undertaking of building socialism with Chinese characteristics. The some 2,800 CPPCC organizations and their 350,000 members have worked painstakingly both in formulating and implementing major policy decisions and promoting undertakings beneficial to the people, opening the country to the outside world and invigorating the domestic economy, persistently making reforms to accelerate economic development and improving party work style to facilitate the building of spiritual civilization, and in stepping up contacts between the compatriots in Hong Kong and Macao in the interior areas, and exchanges between the sons and daughters of the Chinese nation on the two sides of the Taiwan Straits, as well as in developing friendly relations with people of other countries. The work of the CPPCC is unprecedentedly extensive, lively, and full of a vigor never seen before.

The CPPCC is a patriotic united front organization led by the CPC. It is a major form of socialist democracy in Chinese political life. A review of the history of the CPPCC over the past 3 decades shows that the destiny of the CPPCC is closely linked with that of the entire country. Only when the country is strong can the CPPCC exist, and only when the CPPCC prospers can it promote prosperity in the country. The three major tasks in the 1980's and 1990's -- intensifying the building of the two civilizations, promoting the motherland's reunification, and safeguarding world peace -- require us to bring into further play the role of the CPPCC. Under the new situation, CPPCC organizations at all levels are facing heavier tasks and carrying out work on a larger scale. It is necessary to further develop and improve the work of the CPPCC.

This year is the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, as well as a year of implementing the principle of consolidating, digesting, replenishing, and improving the economic structural reform in order to continue to carry it out in a solid manner. This year's work will directly affect the work for the next 4 years. The new plan and new tasks have opened up a new horizon for CPPCC organizations at all levels. Chairwoman Deng Yingchao once said: The CPPCC is a comprehensive reservoir of talented personnel consisting of a large number of highly qualified and experienced personnel specializing in various fields. We believe that the CPPCC National Committee and CPPCC organizations at various levels will surely make even better use of their advantages in the coming year to transform the gigantic energy stored in this comprehensive resevoir of talented personnel into a powerful force to benefit the motherland and its people.

During the session, the members will discuss a work report by the Standing Committee of the CPPCC National Committee, as well as attend, as observers, the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC and hear and discuss the government work report and other reports. We hope that the members will carry forward the fine tradition to "treating each other with all sincerity and sharing weal or woe," bring into full play the functions of political consultations and democratic supervision, freely air their views, and pool the wisdom of all to ensure the success of the session.

CHEN PIXIAN: NPC TO OPEN 25 MARCH, LAST 17 DAYS

[Text] Beijing, March 24 (XINHUA) -- The Fourth Session of the Sixth National People's Congress (NPC) to open tomorrow will last 17 days, Chen Pixian, vice-chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, told a preparatory meeting here this afternoon. The meeting was attended by 2,666 deputies. The number of NPC deputies now stands at 2,974, with four more to be elected by their electoral units.

Outstanding on the agenda adopted for the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC are deliberation of China's Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-1990) and the adoption of three draft laws, namely, the General Principles of the Civil Code, the Compulsory Education Law and the Law Concerning Enterprises With Sole Foreign Investment. The session will also examine the 1986 plan for economic and social development and 1985 final state accounts and 1986 state budget, as well as reports on the work of the NPC Standing Committee and the Supreme People's Court and the Supreme People's Procuratorate.

Today's meeting also elected a 161-member presidium and elected Chen Pixian secretary-general of the session. It decided that diplomatic envoys to China will be invited to sit in the session's plenary meetings, which will also be open to foreign correspondents in Beijing. Later, the presidium met to elect 20 executive chairpersons for the session and decided on other matters.

NPC SPOKESMAN GIVES PRE-SESSION PRESS CONFERENCE

[Text] Beijing, March 24 (XINHUA) -- Zeng Tao, spokesman for the forthcoming National People's Congress session, today told Beijing-based foreign journalists that requests have been submitted to leading members of the State Council to meet them and answer their questions. If these arrangements materialize, he said, this will provide a new opportunity for foreign newsmen to get more authoritative information about China. As in previous sessions foreign correspondents will be invited to a number of NPC meetings.

In response to the question whether a huge water conservancy project along the Yangtze gorges will definitely go ahead, Zeng Tao hinted that the question will be answered in one of the intended press conferences given by State Council leaders. Questions concerning the special economic zones and other matters will probably be answered at these conferences, he said.

Asked to confirm whether different opinions exist among NPC deputies, Zeng Tao said that differences do exist, as in any other countries. The practice of the NPC is, he went on, that deputies air their views in the course of deliberations and, through consultations, arrive at agreement. This is what we call socialist democracy, he said. He told the audience that when a draft decision is put to voting, sometimes there are votes against or abstentions. But he denied that there are any differences among NPC deputies over the fundamental policies.

A reporter asked why Zhou Erfu, who was dismissed from official posts because of violating the discipline in foreign affairs, remains a member of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference. Zeng replied that anyone who commits mistakes should not be necessarily negated entirely. In my view, this is a good policy, Zeng added.

The nine topics put on the agenda by the NPC Standing Committee will be submitted to the preparatory meeting of the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC for a final decision.

TIAN JIYUN ON MAINTAINING PRICE STABILITY, REFORM

OW221808 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0017 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, 22 Mar (XINHUA) -- Tian Jiyun, vice premier of the State Council, recently pointed out that the main objective of price-related work this year is to make resolute efforts to keep overall prices basically stable. Tian Jiyun said this recently in a written statement to a reporter of the journal ZHONGGUO JINGJI TIZHI GAIGE [CHINA'S ECONOMIC RESTRUCTURING]. This journal will carry the full text of Tian Jiyun's talk on price reform in its issue no 3, to be published on 23 March.

Tian Jiyun said: The principle for carrying out reform of the economic system this year is to "consolidate, assimilate, replenish, and improve" the reform measures we have already taken, eliminate the bad and play up the good, and concentrate efforts on solving conspicuous problems. This is also the principle for price reform this year. He said: Price reform should be carried out step by step in a well-planned manner. Fairly great progress was made in price reform last year. In view of the state's financial capability, the enterprises' assimilative ability, and the masses' acceptance level, it is necessary to keep the prices basically stable without taking drastic reform measures this year. Only a few upward or downward readjustments will be made for some unreasonably priced commodities. These readjustments are primarily designed to consolidate, assimilate, replenish, and improve the reform measures being applied. Resolute efforts should be made to avoid unjustified price hikes. On no account should the following situation be allowed: We take no extensive reform measures in prices this year, but stir up quite a few "little commotions" which create bad influences instead of leading to solution of any problems. Tian Jiyun emphasized that this issue should be raised to draw the people's attention. Governments and departments concerned at all levels should regard maintaining the basic stability of prices as an important task which should be earnestly implemented.

Turning to the measures for maintaining the basic stability of the overall prices this year, Tian Jiyun said: Keeping the overall prices basically stable this year is an arduous task. Efforts should be made in all spheres, and special attention given to the key points. First, key measures should be adopted to strengthen and improve macroeconomic control, and resolute efforts should be made to check the unbridled increases in the size of investment in capital construction and in consumption funds. Meanwhile, it is necessary to actively produce readily marketable products to satisfy market needs. Second, key areas, large and medium-sized cities like the three municipalities, and the provincial capitals in particular, should receive proper attention. Third, it is necessary to pay attention to stabilizing the prices of key categories of products, namely vegetables and nonstaple foods. The masses will be satisfied when the three nonstaple foods -- vegetables, meat, and eggs -- are in good supply and their prices are stabilized. We should do our best to ensure the basic stability of vegetable prices, which are the crux of the key point. Places that registered steep rises in vegetable prices last year should endeavor to bring prices down. Decontrolling vegetable prices will arouse the peasants' enthusiasm for growing vegetables and more vegetables will be available on the market. Meanwhile, keeping in mind the lesson we learned last year, we will make improvements in our work.

Tian Jiyun required that the pricing departments tighten control and resolutely combat, rather than accommodate, unreasonable demands to raise prices. He said: All measures for readjusting prices should be judged in terms of their effect on the overall situation. Some readjustments may seem reasonable from a local standpoint, but become problematic if viewed from an overall standpoint. It is imperative to subject partial interests to overall interests, and minor principles to cardinal principles. Price supervision and inspection should be tightened. After the prices of some commodities are decontrolled, instead of leaving things unattended, we should give guidance, coordinate efforts, and exercise supervision and control where necessary. These will serve as measures for smoothing things out, along with supplemental measures for making improvements. Resolute efforts should be made to check random price hikes and to punish sternly price policy violators. Necessary guidelines should be given for prices in trade fairs, and businesses run by individuals should be supervised more closely. Tian Jiyun noted that the state represents everyone, not just some of the people. It undertakes to safeguard the interests of the people as a whole, and is equally responsible to the producers, dealers, and consumers. Prolonged stability and unity will be guaranteed only when everyone lives and works in peace and contentment.

After reviewing China's price reform, Tian Jiyun said: Two things should be clarified. First, China's current price system should be reformed, otherwise, it will be impossible to straighten out the relationships between various economic sectors; our economy in general will not experience long-term, healthy development; and the many contradictions in our economic life, instead of being overcome, will be aggravated. Therefore, from a long-term point of view, the current price system, if not changed, will hinder economic development and improvement in the people's living standard. Second, although problems of one kind or another do exist in our actual work, price reform in recent years has been basically successful as a whole. We should make further efforts to perfect our reform in order to solve problems arising in the process of reform, for there is no reason to turn back. These two points are the basic understanding we should have regarding the problem of prices and their reform. Only when we grasp this understanding can we reinforce our confidence in making the price reform a complete success. This is very important.

Then Tian Jiyun talked about the prospects for price reform in China. He said: Despite difficulties in price reform, we are off to a good start. We have acquired a more comprehensive, uniform understanding of price reform in practice and have won the support of the masses. Meanwhile, thanks to the effort to strengthen and improve macroeconomic control, the destabilizing factors that surfaced in the previous stage of our economic life are being gradually eliminated. All this has paved the way for successfully carrying out price reform in the future. He said: "I am convinced that if we constantly sum up experiences and lessons, carefully organize our work, and make unremitting efforts, we can achieve the goal of maintaining basic stability of prices this year. From now on better preparations and plans will be made in price reform compared with the previous years, and better results will be achieved. We should have full confidence in this."

FOREIGN TRADE OFFICIAL ON 1986 PROSPECTS, PLANS

HK210743 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION No 11, 17 Mar 86 p 13

[Article by Gu Wenfu: "China's Foreign Trade Will Develop Further -- Shen Jueren, Assistant Minister of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Answers LIAOWANG Reporters' Questions"]

[Text] A few days ago, Shen Jueren, assistant minister of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade, answered some questions concerning China's foreign trade asked by LIAOWANG reporters.

Question: What are the prospects for China's foreign trade this year?

Answer: According to the Central Committee's proposals concerning the Seventh 5-Year Plan, China's total import and export volume in 1990 will be 40 to 50 percent more than in 1985, and the average annual increase will be 8 to 10 percent. Moreover, China will energetically expand its use of foreign capital and imported advanced technology. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, China's economic relations and trade with foreign countries made relatively great progress. This created favorable conditions for a good start to the Seventh 5-Year Plan this year. At present, China's economy is developing in a sustained, steady, and coordinated manner, and a series of profound policies and measures adopted by the state to encourage exports are being implemented. This situation will certainly provide necessary sources of goods for export and will lay a material foundation for a sustained increase in exports. I am convinced that the impetus from the policy of opening to the outside world, enlivening the domestic economy, and reforms will certainly enable us to remove various unfavorable facts and bring further development in China's exports so long as we work solidly and fully arouse the enthusiasm of staff members and workers in enterprises. Besides, in order to accelerate the progress of modernization and to develop industrial and agricultural production, we will continue to import technology, crucial equipment, necessary raw materials, and other materials. In order to solve the problem of insufficient funds for the country's construction, the scale of absorbing foreign capital will also increase. In short, China's foreign economic relations and trade will further develop and will have bright prospects this year.

Question: China's adverse balance of foreign trade increased and its foreign exchange reserves decreased last year. Will the import of sedan cars, color television sets, refrigerators, and other high-grade durable consumer goods be banned from now on?

Answer: Last year the adverse balance of foreign trade did indeed increase significantly, and foreign exchange reserves also dropped to a certain extent. However, this situation will not affect China's normal foreign economic relations and trade. Import contracts which we have signed will be fulfilled as usual. The import of mechanical and electrical equipment and raw materials and technology needed for the development of production and the import of an appropriate amount of consumer goods have continued in a normal manner and will continue in the future. With the increase in exports, imports will also increase.

Since China is modernizing itself, the shortage of foreign exchange will not be over soon. We must use our limited amount of foreign exchange for importing what is badly needed. Of course, we must restrict the blind importation of color television sets, refrigerators, sedan cars, and other high-grade durable consumer goods, plus importing duplicate production lines. But this does not mean banning imports. This kind of restriction is needed in China's foreign exchange management, foreign trade management, and macroeconomic control.

Question: Will the on-going work to crack down on economic crimes affect China's economic relations and trade with other countries?

Answer: No. As we all know, the policy of opening to the outside world is China's basic national policy. It is China's firm principle to further enhance economic relations and trade and technological exchanges with various countries of the world, including the developed and developing countries in accordance with the principle of independence, equality, and mutual benefits. Cracking down on economic crimes will enable us to better implement the policy of opening to the outside world and stimulating the domestic economy.

This will also allow us to strengthen and develop China's economic relations and trade with developing countries and other countries in an even healthier manner. Therefore, while upholding the policy of opening to the outside world and stimulating the domestic economy, we must perfect our legal system and act according to the law. We will continue to crack down on economic crimes.

PLA IMPROVING TRAINING OF NEW RECRUITS

OW231055 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1624 GMT 22 Mar 86

[By reporter Zhao Su]

[Text] Beijing, 22 Mar (XINHUA) -- The PLA will institute a system under which new recruits will undergo a 4-month rigorous, systematic, and regular training regiment before they are assigned to serve in PLA units.

At present, the PLA has set up training regiment whose primary task is to train new recruits and squad leaders. The first group of new recruits has completed training by a training regiment. To train new recruits by a training regiment is a measure to meet the strategic change in guiding principles of Army building. It will make the PLA training system more scientific and further improve the PLA'a training standards. The new recruits of the first group trained by a training regiment show that they are better than other new recruits trained in previous years in terms of political and ideological understanding, military skill, work style, discipline, and physical condition. Recently, the General Staff Department held an on-the-spot meeting in northern China on training activities of PLA training regiment. The meeting participants comprehensively inspected the new recruit training conducted by three training regiments -- a specialized, an infantry, and an artillery training regiment -- under a group army of Beijing Military Region. The new recruits scored good marks in all their 33 training subjects. The meeting participants said that the transformation of civilians into qualified soldiers in such a short time was rare in PLA history.

ZHAO ZIYANG, OTHERS PRAISE HAINAN DAO LAND POLICY

[By reporters Qi Xiu and Chen Jiang]

[Excerpts] Guangzhou, 21 Mar (XINHUA) -- After working hard for 34 years, land reclamation enterprises in Hainan Dao have made great contributions to the development of this treasure island. During a recent inspection tour of the island, Comrades Zhao Ziyang, Hu Qili, and Tian Jiyun praised the land reclamation enterprises for their achievements, and encouraged their 900,000 workers and staff members to carry forward their hardworking, pioneering spirit in making even greater contributions to the motherland.

Currently, there are 92 state farms, devoted mainly to rubber production and covering a total of 3.4 million mu in rubber plantations, on the island. Over the past 3 decades, they have produced 1.1 million metric tons of rubber for the state. Annual rubber output constitutes 60 percent of the total rubber output for the country. Output last year reached 126,500 metric tons. The land reclamation enterprises have grown on large areas of land, sugarcane, tea, pepper, coffee, pineapple, and other tropical cash crops. They have also set up salt and freshwater fish breeding and livestock farms, as well as factories making rubber products and processing farm and subsidiary produce. Last year, their total industrial and agricultural output value exceeded 1 billion yuan.

Along with the implementation of the policies of opening to the outside world and invigorating the domestic economy, important breakthroughs have been made in Hainan Dao's economic development over recent years. Acting on the party Central Committee's instruction on work in Hainan Dao, the land reclamation enterprises have readjusted the economic structure and, while paying attention to rubber production, actively grown all kinds of tropical cash crops, developed a diversified economy, and stepped up horizontal economic cooperation with other localities and foreign countries, thereby transforming the semi-self-sufficient "closed" economy into an "open" commodity economy. Land reclamation enterprises have also made major reforms in the management system. Since 1984, over 100,000 family farms have been established under the state farms, which have given strong impetus to the labor productivity of the farm workers. Family farms are signing contracts with the state farms and will gradually become financially independent economic units under them.

GU MU INSPECTS NINGBO, URGES DEVELOPMENT

[By ZHEJIANG RIBAO reporter Weng Renmao and XINHUA reporter Guo Shuochuan]

[Text] Ningbo, 20 Mar (XINHUA) -- Gu Mu, state councillor and head of the Ningbo economic development coordination group of the State Council, is on an inspection tour of Ningbo City. On 21 March, he was briefed on Ningbo's arrangements for construction during the Seventh 5-Year Plan and its opening to the outside world. Comrade Gu Mu pointed out: The party Central Committee and the State Council attach great importance to Ningbo's development and construction. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan, Ningbo has a very difficult construction task to perform. It must do a still better job in reform and in opening to the outside world, and make all necessary preparations for large-scale development and construction.

Gu Mu said: Since it opened to the outside world, Ningbo has done a great deal of work and made tremendous achievements. Now it is facing a new and more arduous construction task. Situated in the middle of China's coastal area, Ningbo is in a good geographic location. It has a good deepwater harbor, a vast and rich hinterland, and the advantage of being the native town of many Overseas Chinese. The state plans to build a number of key projects here. In the future Ningbo can truly become a major eastern port in China. Then Ningbo will play an even more important role in China's modernization and in Zhejiang Province's economic development.

Gu Mu emphatically pointed out: From now on, Ningbo City should be fully prepared for a high tide in development and construction. At present, it should first do the following four things well. First, it should formulate an overall development and construction plan. Second, it should complete auxiliary projects undertaken by the province and the city in support of key state construction projects on schedule and according to quality requirements. Third, it should train management personnel in a planned way, and transfer a number of cadres and specialized personnel to participate in the construction of their native town, welcome them to invest in operating factories in Ningbo, and welcome them to offer advice on Ningbo's construction.

Gu Mu also listened to a briefing on Wenzhou City's opening to the outside world and its economic construction. During his stay in Ningbo, Gu Mu has successively inspected Xikou of Fenghua, Beilun Harbor, the Ningbo economic and technological development zone, Ningbo University, the Ningbo No 5 radio plant, and the Ningbo condenser plant.

HE KANG ON JILIN'S MARKETABLE GRAIN PRODUCTION

SK240255 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Excerpts] From 12 to 21 March, He Kang, minister of agriculture, animal husbandry, and fishery, conducted investigations on the construction of our province's marketable grain base counties. He pointed out: As a major marketable grain producer, Jilin Province occupies an important position in China's grain production. It should give full play to its advantage in grain production and build the 13 key grain-producing counties along the railways in the eastern part of the province into export-oriented, high-yield, fine-quality, and stable grain production bases so as to make greater contributions to the state. The construction of marketable grain bases in our province started in 1983. With the concern and support of the central authorities, great progress has been achieved after 3 years of efforts. After fully affirming the achievements we have already scored, He Kang said: Grain production has been pushed forward to a new stage, in which we should rely not only on policies, science, and technology but also on increased input. Commodity production is different from production for self-sufficiency purposes in that facilities and means, as well as intensified construction, are required. Without new input, not only will grain production fail to increase but also it will fall. Last year's grain reduction as a result of disasters showed that the foundation for agriculture is still very weak, and the conditions for production are very backward. The construction of marketable grain base counties should be further consolidated and improved on the basis of the achievements already scored.

Speaking on the principles for the construction of marketable grain base counties, He Kang said: We should still focus on grain production, which is an asset. We can achieve affluence through farming, forestry, or animal husbandry, and should also develop crops, breeding, and processing simultaneously. We should popularize this experience in achieving prosperity. We should not discard our own assets and try to find something else on which to rely. We should develop animal husbandry, raising more cattle and sheep. You have superior conditions for this. Fine varieties of animals and poultry, such as cattle and sheep, should also be imported to improve their strains, and facilities for slaughtering, processing, storage, and other services should be built. We should also develop forestry. Trees will not only protect farmland but also constitute a source of wealth. Township enterprises should engage mainly in the processing of farm and sideline products. In this way, farming, forestry, and animal husbandry, and crop growing, breeding, and processing will promote each other, and attain self-sustained growth. The road for development will thus broaden.

CHEN YUN, OTHERS MOURN DEATH OF YAN WEIBING

OW211251 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1320 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 20 Mar (XINHUA) -- Comrade Yan Weibing, former member of the Cultural and Historical Data Research Committee of the CPPCC National Committee and a retired cadre, died of illness at the age of 68 in Beijing on 15 March. Comrade Yan Weibing was an outstanding member of the CPC as well as a loyal fighter of the proletariat. She was loyal to the party and the revolution. She was cruelly persecuted by the "gang of four," but she carried out an unyielding and tenacious struggle against them. When Comrade Yang Weibing was seriously ill, Chen Yun, Deng Yingchao, Xi Zhongxun, and other central leaders, as well as several vice chairmen of the CPPCC National Committee, personally visited or sent special personnel to visit her at the hospital. After her death, leaders extended their sympathy to Comrade Lu Dingyi and their children.

NEW SECRETARY CHEN GUANGYI MEETS FUJIAN LEADERS

OW240101 Fuzhou FUJIAN RIBAO in Chinese 13 Mar 86 p 1

[Text] The CPC Central Committee has approved Comrade Chen Guangyi as secretary of the provincial CPC Committee. Comrade Chen Guangyi took office a few days ago. He met with leaders of the provincial CPC Committee, the provincial Advisory Commission, the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission, the provincial People's Congress, the provincial government, the provincial CPPCC Committee, the provincial Military District, and the PLA Air Force stationed in Fujian, as well as retired cadres of the Army and local authorities last night.

Comrades Hu Ping, Hu Hong, Zhang Zongde, Xiang Nan, and Chen Guangyi spoke at the meeting.

Hu Ping, Hu Hong, and Zhang Zongde expressed their support for the CPC Central Committee's decision on changes in the positions of Comrades Chen Guangyi and Xiang Nan. It was their unanimous view that when Comrade Xiang Nan was in charge of the work in Fujian, he accomplished a great deal and scored achievements by joining efforts with other members of the provincial CPC Committee, and resolutely implementing the central authorities' line, principles, and policies. They pledged to actively support Comrade Chen Guangyi's work, safeguard stability and unity, and develop the excellent situation.

Xiang Nan, former secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, expressed firm support for the party Central Committee's principle of replacing old with new members of leading bodies, and its decision to assign Comrade Chen Guangyi as secretary of the Fujian Provincial CPC Committee. He said: Fujian is a famous home of Overseas Chinese as well as an important showplace for the open policy. Comrade Chen Guangyi will certainly join efforts with other members of the provincial CPC Committee and the people of Fujian, persist in making reform and opening to the outside world, and strive to make Fujian advance in the van of the four modernizations drive by the end of this century. I believe that the party, government, military, and people, as well as the democratic parties and groups in Fujian will also support the work of Comrade Chen Guangyi and the provincial CPC Committee, safeguard stability and unity, promote a sustained, steady, and coordinated growth of the economy, and further develop the excellent situation.

In his speech Comrade Chen Guangyi said: Fujian is a land of treasures. Fujian's geological location, political status, and economic growth have unusual significance for the entire nation. The people of Fujian have glorious revolutionary traditions and possess fine qualities such as diligence and intelligence. In more than 3 decades since the founding of new China, especially since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, Fujian has implemented the special and flexible policy of opening to the outside world, thus bringing about great progress in political, social, and economic aspects. At present Fujian is now more stable and united politically, its economy is developing steadily in a sustained and coordinated manner, and the people's living standards have improved considerably. Like other parts of China, the overall situation is one of the best since the founding of new China. This remarkable achievement is due mainly to the sincere concern and vigorous support of the party Central Committee and the State Council. It is also the reslt of the joint struggle of party and government organs at all levels and the large number of cadres and masses, and of the efforts of the provincial CPC Commitee and the provincial government to earnestly implement the central authorities' line, principles, and policies, and to make innovations and exertions. In the past 5 years, since Comrade Xiang Nan took charge of the provincial CPC Committee, a great deal of work has been done. This has helped promote and develop the excellent situation in Fujian.

The major task of cadres and the masses in the province is to continue to implement thoroughly the guidelines of the National Conference of the Party Delegates; earnestly implement the tasks formulated at the fourth provincial conference of party delegates in July last year; persist in carrying out reform, opening to the outside world, and stimulating the economy; make serious efforts to correct party style and social conduct; promote the development of the "two civilizations"; speed up economic growth; and strive to fulfill the goal laid down by Comrade Hu Yaobang: "I hope Fujian will advance in the van of the four modernizations drive." To fulfill this task, party and government organs at all levels should adhere to the guiding thought of promoting unity to work for the four modernizations, arouse all the positive factors, unite all forces that can be united, stabilize the leading bodies at all levels and the contingent of cadres, maintain the continuity and stability of the party's policies, fully exploit the present advantages and opportunities, blaze new trails, forge ahead, and make our work in all fields more successful. In a word, we want "unity, stability, pioneering spirit, and progress."

In the final analysis, we should persistently demonstrate the spirit of fighting in unity, waging hard struggle in a down-to-earth manner, strive to live up to the party Central Committee's wishes and demands as well as the expectations and trust of the people of the whole province, work conscientiously with one heart and one mind, unite, go all out, improve our work, and develop the excellent situation in Fujian.

Comrade Chen Guangyi arrived in Fuzhou on 10 March. In the past few days he has visited revolutionary comrades, patriotic Overseas Chinese, and nonparty personages in Fuzhou; investigated and familiarized himself with Fuzhou City proper and the Mawei Development Zone; and called on PLA fighters working on the tunnel on Fuma Road.

JIANGXI LEADERS LEAVE FOR NPC, CPPCC SESSIONS

OW240001 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Text] Wan Shaofen, Xu Gin, Zhao Zengyi, and 65 other NPC deputies from Jiangxi Province left Nanchang by a special plane for Beijing this morning to attend the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC Session. Also on the same plane were 17 members of the CPPCC National Committee from Jiangxi, who will attend the Fourth Session on the Sixth CPPCC National Committee in Beijing.

On 18 March the NPC deputies from Jiangxi Province gathered at the Jiangxi Guesthouse to study relevant speeches by central leading comrades. Wan Shaofen, secretary of the provincial party committee, spoke at the study session. (Wang Ying), chairman of the Jiangxi Provincial Planning Committee, briefed the deputies on the province's economic situation.

Before their departure, Liu Fangren, deputy secretary of the provincial party committee, and Jiang Zhuping, Standing Committee member of the provincial party committee and vice governor, called on the deputies at the guesthouse to bid them farewell.

JIANGXI LEADERS DISCUSS OLD REVOLUTIONARY BASES

OW210547 Janchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Excerpts] The provincial meeting on building the old revolutionary base areas ended in Nanchang this afternoon. Provincial party and government leaders attending today's meeting were Wan Shaofen, Liu Fangren, Ni Xiance, Xu Qin, Jiang Zhuping, (Pei Dean), (Liu Zhonghou), and (Sun Xiyun). Xu Qin presided over today's meeting. Jiang Zhuping made a summary report at the meeting.

In his report, Jiang Zhuping made several suggestions on how to do a good job in building the old revolutionary base areas and make significant progress in improving the conditions of those areas this year. The main points include the question of implementing policies, the question of properly managing and using funds, the question of making plans, the question of establishing links among various units to provide needed assistance, and the question of strengthening leadership and improving work style.

Jiang Zhuping also pointed out a number of specific measures which must now be well understood. First, it is necessary to conscientiously sum up the experiences of typical examples of changing from poor to rich conditions in various localities. Second, it is necessary to promote circulation and effectively solve the difficulties people in the old revolutionary base areas have in buying and selling things. Third, it is necessary to pay attention to relief work during difficult periods in the spring and summer.

Wan Shaofen also spoke at the meeting. She asked the participants to implement seriously the guidelines of this meeting and work with concerted efforts to do all work well in order to bring about a significant change in the old revolutionary base areas.

JIANGXI'S WAN SHAOFEN, OTHERS WATCH FLYING DISPLAY

OW210625 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Text] A flying demonstration of Chinese-made aircraft for civilian use was held in Nanchang this morning. The demonstration was organized by the Ministry of Aviation Industry. Three types of Chinese-made civilian aircraft took part.

They are the Yun-7 type aircraft for medium and short distance transportation, which was designed and produced by the Xian Aircraft Manufacturing Company; the Yun-12 small multipurpose aircraft, which was designed and produced by the Harbin Aircraft Manufacturing Company in the early 1980's; and the (Haiyan) aircraft for agricultural use, designed and produced by the Nanchang Aircraft Manufacturing Company.

The Yun-7 has 52 seats. The Yun-12 can carry 17 passengers. The (Haiyan) agricultural aircraft can be used for crop-dusting, sowing, petroleum and fishery surveys, geological exploration, and fighting forest fires. The three types of aircraft have proven, through repeated test flights, to be of good quality. They can take off and land on a cement, asphalt, gravel, or grass strip.

Provincial party and government leading comrades, as well as responsible comrades of departments concerned, saw the demonstration. They included Wan Shaofen, Liu Fangren, Ni Xiance, Xu Qin, Bai Dongcai, Jiang Zhuping, (Pei Dean), (Zhao Zengyi), (Li Sheng), (Liu Zhonghou), (Sun Xiyun), (Wang Guande), and (Wu Yunzhong).

ZHEJIANG'S WANG FANG CALLS FOR BETTER WORK STYLE

OW210601 Hangzhou Zhejiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 18 Mar 86

[Text] According to our reporter Chai Wueyue, the Zhejiang Provincial CPC Committee convened a meeting today to discuss the work of party construction in the province, to relay for implementation the central authorities' instructions on rectifying party style and improving cadres' work, and to study and discuss measures to strengthen the building of the party ideologically and organizationally.

Wang Fang, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, made an important speech at the morning session. He pointed out: The key to success in rectifying party style is for the leadership at all levels to set an example in starting the work of rectification with itself.

The CPC Central Committee has stressed that the central organs should set an example for the whole country. Similarly, our provincial CPC Committee and the provincial organs should set an example for the whole province.

In view of the fact that some unite use words rather than deeds in rectifying party style, Wang Fang called for efforts to grasp the key issues and do more tangible work. He stressed that efforts to rectify party style should be combined with the central tasks for the various periods and the work of various departments, to achieve the goal of rectifying party style and, at the same time, ensure the smooth progress of reform and work in other fields. He asked party committees at all levels to take a firm, clear, and unambiguous attitude and resolutely remove all obstacles to support discipline inspection as well as political and legal departments in investigating and dealing with major and important cases. Such cases should be handled in accordance with party discipline and state law, no matter who is involved, he added. Regarding promotion and utilization of cadres, in strict accordance with the principle set by the party, with a view to further strengthening the leading bodies at various levels, Comrade Wang Fang pointed out: It is imperative to put the requirement of being revolutionary in first place. The principal political norms are a cadre's ability to work for the interests of the people, to develop productive forces, and to make postive contributions to the socialist cause. We should guard against the practice of giving the same treatment to all people of the same age, and taking the school diploma as the sole criterion for jugding a person's education. We should attach importance to the method of appointing cadres by selecting the best from among those comrades who have been tempered in practical work.

Touching on strengthening ideological and political work, Comrade Wang Fang asked the comrades to devote more effort to studying, enhancing, and improving this work. It is imperative, he said, to seek truth from facts, change the practice of lying, bragging, and making empty talk, and find out the appropriate way to conduct ideological and political work readily acceptable to the masses to replace the preaching method, whereby the listeners parrot whatever the preacher says.

In conclusion, Comrade Wang Fang asked all localities to carry the work of party rectification successfully through to the end, step up the consolidation of grass-roots party organizations, and do well in investigating the three types of persons [persons who rose to prominence by following the counterrevolutionary cliques of Lin Biao and Jiang Qing in rebellion, those who are seriously factionalist in their ideas, and those who indulged in beating, smashing, and looting].

Attending the meeting were responsible persons from various prefectural, city, and county party committees, discipline inspection commissions, organization departments, and propaganda departments; from various organizations at the provincial level, including provincial departments, commissions, offices, and bureaus; and from the provincial military distruct, provincial factories, mines, and other enterprises, as well as institutions of higher learning in the province.

GUANGDONG SMUGGLING CASES FEWER BUT BIGGER

HK211153 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 21 Mar 86 p 3

[By staff reporter Nie Lisheng]

[Text] Guangzhou -- The Guangdong Provincial Customs uncovered more than 15,500 smuggling cases last year and confiscated 230 million yuan (about d72 million) worth of contraband goods, according to the latest statistics made available to CHINA DAILY.

The total number of cases declined slightly from 1984, but more of them were major crimes involving articles worth 10,000 yuan. The goods were being smuggled into or out of China's southern coastal province bordering on Hong Kong and Macao, said Zhou Decheng, vice director of the Anti-Smuggling Department of the Provincial Customs House.

Although major cases, such as these, accounted for only 6 percent of the total customs offences, Zhou said, yet they involved either highly valuable merchandise or large quantities of contraband goods, and thus constituted 86 percent of the year's total value of all smuggled items.

Zhou pointed out that the once widespread smuggling activities in Guangdong were brought under control in 1980, with the completion of the province's three-year drive to reinforce anti-smuggling personnel and equipment. But, he warned, an increase in customs violations was noted early this year. In January alone, he said, eight customs houses along the coast reported 52 smuggling cases involving cargo or fishing boats, almost 50 percent more than in the same month of 1985. The total number of cases involving sea smuggling in 1985 dropped to 478 from 683 in the previous year.

As more and more collectively-owned boats were contracted to coastal residents for private offshore fishing or transport, Zhou explained, the number of smuggling incidents involving the small craft rose. Since last December, for example, Zhou said, the Gongbei Customs found two boats smuggling 10,600 wrist-watches in the bottom of their hulls, while the Jiulong (Kowloon) Customs ferreted out more than 40,000 electronic watches secreted in the fuel tank of a local ship. A still more serious case was cracked by the Guangzhou Customs, which caught two smuggling boats carrying a total of some 2,200 Japanese-made cameras.

Other major smuggling cases in 1985 involved TV sets, audio and video recorders or tapes computers, nylon fabrics, motorcycles, cars, cultural relics and foreign currencies.

According to Zhou, the Guangdong Provincial Customs made special efforts last year to check the increased smuggling of farm products to Hong Kong, since this has put State-owned trade companies at a disadvantage in their competition with foreign firms in the region.

Since late last year, four major customs houses of Jiulong, Gongbei, Shantou and Huangpu have reported 45 cases of smuggling involving livestock and aquatic products, including 27 tons of frozen pork carcasses, 1.5 tons of lobsters or prawns and 9 tons of live fish. However, Zhou said that about 85 percent of all the smuggling cases reported in 1985 were actually cases involving foreign goods that were reported but incorrectly to get around regulations. For instance, he noted, there were 126 cases in which Chinese or overseas partners were caught smuggling to other areas of China raw material that they were allowed to bring into the country duty-free only for use at their cooperative factories. In another 370 cases, imported capital goods, such as cars, steel and building material, were smuggled out of special economic zones for sale in other parts of the country.

By the end of last October, the Haikow Customs House alone confiscated 221 imported cars to be sent from the Special Economic Area of Hainan Island to the mainland under the pretext of being a joint-venture operation to avoid payment of duties. And in the Chaozhou area, 105,000 yards of foreign fabrics valued at 690,000 yuan were illegally resold for profit.

According to earlier reports by the Anti-Smuggling Office under the Provincial People's Government, Guangdong has reinforced its anti-smuggling network along the coast and now has about 50 anti-smuggling patrol boats with more than 200 anti-contraband personnel.

HENAN URGED TO CRACK DOWN ON ECONOMIC CRIME

HK220303 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 20 Mar 86

[News center commentary: "It Is Necessary To Severely Crack Down on Serious Economic Crimes"]

[Text] Our province has scored great achievements in cracking down on economic crimes. This has contributed to guaranteeing the smooth progress of reforming our economic structure and speeding up the four modernizations. However, serious economic crimes have continued to run rampant and economic criminals remain very arrogant. Many serious economic criminals are still at large; their activities have not been investigated or examined legally.

Economic crimes have run rampant for the following reasons:

1. Some leadership organs and leading cadres do not sufficiently understand the long-term nature, importance, and urgency of cracking down on serious economic crimes.

2. The leaders of some units are too bureaucratic, or the system is so imperfect as to enable criminals to avail themselves of loopholes.

3. The law is not strictly enforced and penalties are not sufficient. A fine is imposed in lieu of severe punishment and party and government disciplinary actions are imposed instead of punishment in accordance with criminal law. Economic crimes are merely regarded as unhealthy trends, so that economic criminals are permitted to sneak away.

We must seriously solve these problem. We must recognize that cracking down on serious economic crimes is more complicated than cracking down on other serious crimes. CPC committees and governments at all levels must truly strengthen their leadership and do a good job in fighting this war. Public security departments, procuratorates, courts, and judicial departments at all levels must regard cracking down on serious economic crimes as one of their major tasks and support one another in cracking down on serious economic crimes by cooperating and coordinating with one another. Auditing, industrial, commercial, tax, and administrative and law-enforcing units must strengthen their work of investigating and dealing with economic criminal cases. All relevant units handling such cases must attach importance to the investigation and handling of these economic cases. The responsibility of unit leaders, who do not place a case on file for investigation, must be investigated and affixed. All economic crimes, no matter who is involved, must be investigated and dealt with in accordance with the law. We must ensure that everyone is treated equally in the face of the law.

We must investigate and deal with the big, important economic criminal cases in accordance with the law. We must mete out severe punishment, neither tolerating nor being softhearted toward the criminals. We must be resolute and prudent in handling such cases. We must pay attention to investigation and study, base everything on the facts, and use the law as the means of ensuring that there is no wrongdoing and connivance.

LI XIMING MEETS WITH BEIJING CHILD-CARE WORKERS

SK211425 Beijing BEIJING RIBAO in Chinese 6 Mar 86 p 1

[Text] On the morning of 5 March, Li Ximing, secretary of the municipal CPC Committee, extended festive greetings to more than 60,000 child-care workers on the preschool education front throughout the municipality. In his greetings, he stated: Preschool education undertakings, like other undertakings in society, have developed steadily. Hereafter, efforts should be made to mobilize the party and government leading organs to attach importance to the preschool educational work, to strengthen the training of teachers in this regard, to ensure supply of materials to this front, and to gradaully conduct reforms in the preschool educational work in order to continuously upgrade its quality.

Comrade Li Ximing's above-noted remarks were made at a meeting sponsored by the municipal child-care workers' association, the culture and education office under the munucipal people's government, the municipal education bureau, the municipal women's federation, and the municipal trade union council to mark the "8 March" Women's Day and to extend greetings to the personnel engaged in child-care work. Attending the meeting were Chen Haosu, vice mayor of the municipality, and more than 200 advanced representatives from the municipal nurseries and kindergartens and from similar facilities run by plants, mines, enterprises, establishments, organs, PLA units, neighborhoods, townships, villages, and households. These representatives include Jing Yanru, principal of the Donghuamen kindergarten, who has devoted more than 50 years to child-care work, and who is determined to make more contributions for children in her life; Wang Jainmei, teacher of the Guanzhuangcun kindergarten if Yaoshang township, Fangshan County, who has given up an opportunity for an urban job and voluntarily devoted herself to developing the intellects of rural children; and Ma Yan, daughter of senior educator Ma Xulun, who has voluntarily vacated her house to open a kindergarten in order to ease the apprehensions of parents.

ZHANG SHUGUANG APPOINTED NEI MONGGOL SECRETARY

[Text] On the evening of 21 March, the Nei Monggol Autonomous Regional CPC Committee held a telephone conference at which Comrade Zhou Hui read out the decision of the CPC Central Committee appointing Comrade Zhang Shuguang as secretary of the autonomous regional CPC Committee and transferring Comrade Zhou Hui to Beijing Municipality.

At the conference, Comrades Zhou Hui, Bu He, Cai Ying, and Zhang Shuguang delivered speeches in succession. In their speeches, Bu He and Cai Ying unanimously stated that they resolutely support the decision of the central authorities on the post changes concerning Comrades Zhou Hui and Zhang Shuguang. They held that Comrade Zhou Hui had done a great deal of work in resolutely implementing the central line, principles, and policies during his tenure of office in the region and scored marked achievements in his work. They asserted that efforts should be made to resolutely and actively support Comrade Zhang Shuguang in taking up the region's work, leading the people of various nationalities throughout the region to unite as one in waging struggles, and in further carrying forward the excellent situation in the region.

In his speech, Comrade Zhou Hui stated that he resolutely supports the decision of the central authorities appointing Comrade Zhang Shuguang as secretary of the regional CPC Committee. He urged the people throughout the region to support the work undertaken by Comrade Xhang Shuguang and to hold high the banner of unity and construction in order to better conduct the region's work.

In his speech, Comrade Zhang Shuguang stated: The region's foundation, based on party affairs, personnel affairs, and the people's affairs, is good and has long been tested by history. what should be noted in praticular is that during the 10-year turmoil, cadres, peasants, and the PLA units were loyal to the CPC Central Committee in Beijing. This has enabled the people of various nationalities throughout the region to be proud of it. The viewpoint in which the construction of the autonomous region always depends on the people, cadres, and the party's organizations is unshakable at any given time.

In his speech, Comrade Zhang Shuguang continued: The central authorities have correctly appraised and accurately evaluated the work done by the autonomous region. It is impossible not to link this achievement with that scored by the regional leading collectives and by Comrade Zhou Hui himself. The autonomous regional CPC Committee headed by Comrade Zhou Hui has scored outstanding achievements in bringing order out of chaos and in conducting reforms by leading the people of various nationalities and resolutely implementing the line, principles, and policies set forth during the period since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. It has created a period unprecedented in the past and a new situation in the region. The prominent indicators in this regard are as follows:

1. Efforts have been made to implement the party's political and organizational lines, to enforce the policy on cadres, to redress false and framed-up cases, to save the broad masses of cadres and the people who were persecuted during the 10-year turmoil, and to effectively bring order out of chaos. As a result, the people of various nationalities and the broad masses of cadres have united as one and the political situation of stability and unity in the region has taken shape.
2. Efforts have been made to implement the party's policies on the economy, and to better enforce the responsibility systems related to output among the households in rural and pastoral areas. As a result, a new and prosperous situation in the region's economy has been created.
3. Efforts have been made to readjust the policies on border areas, and to enhance the construction of border defense. As a result, a new, stable, and prosperous situation in the border areas has been created.

In conclusion, Comrade Zhang Shuguang stated that relying on the central leadership, the collective leadership, and on the broad masses of cadres and the people of various nationalities, he will be united with everyone in the region in carrying forward the excellent situation in the fields of politics, the economy, and culture throughout the region. He urged all cadres and the people of various nationalities to unite as one in marching forward in order to win a greater victory.

GAO DI ADDRESSES JILIN PEOPLE'S CONGRESS FORUM

SK210804 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Excerpts] The Standing Committee of the provincial People's Congress held a provincial forum on the People's Congress work from 17 to 20 March. At the forum, Wang Xianjin, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, delivered a report on relaying the spirit of the national work conference on political science and law. Participating personnel exchanged their personal understanding gained in implementing the directive issued by the central authorities on the People's Congress work and the spirit of the provincial conference on the People's Congress work sponsored by the provincial CPC Committee at the end of 1985. They were also asked about their opinions concerning the work of the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee.

Attending the forum were responsible persons from the People's Congress standing committees of various cities, autonomous prefectures, counties, and districts, and from the Baicheng office. Among those invited to the forum were responsible comrades from the departments concerned under the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial people's government, and from the provincial Higher People's Court and the provincial People's Procuratorate.

Attending the forum were Zhao Xiu, chairman of the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee, and vice chairmen of the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee, including Huo Mingguang, Liu Cikai, Cheng Shengsan, Wu Duo, Cui Lin, Wang Jiren, Yu Ruihuang, Dong Su, Renqinzhamusu, and Xu Yuancun.

At the forum, participants reviewed the work they had done in the past and then unanimously held that since the conference on the People's Congress work sponsored by the provincial CPC Committee at the end of 1985, the work in this regard had improved and the party committees of various localities and the broad masses of cadres and the people had gained new understanding regarding the work. Meanwhile, the construction of democratic and legal systems had been enhanced and the party committees of various localities had put the People's Congress work on their routine schedule and strengthened their leadership over the work. The people's governments at all levels, the people's courts at all levels, and the people's procuratorates at all levels had actively reported their work to the people's congresses and supported the congresses to exercise their supervisory right in line with the law. The people's congresses at all levels had also enhanced their self-improvement, upgraded the enthusiasm of their leaders and working personnel, and strengthened their confidence in making a success in the People's Congress work.

In concluding the forum, Comrade Zhao Xiu delivered a speech.

The provincial CPC Committee has attached great importance to the forum. During the forum, Gao Di, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee; Gao Dezhan, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and governor of the province; and Wang Zhongyu, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, visited the meeting hall and delivered speeches.

In his speech, Comrade Gao Di stated: The People's Congress work is very important. What we have stressed at present is that the entire party should study the law and do everything in line with the law. The people's congresses at all levels and their standing committees should all the more carry out their work around the construction of legal systems and do everything in line with the law in order to conduct the province's work in the best manner possible.

PHILIPPINE TOURISM MINISTER COMMENTS ON TIES

OW240419 Taipei CNA in English 0303 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Text] Taipei, March 22 (CNA) -- A ranking official with the Philippine Government said here Saturday that he is convinced that the substantive relations between the Republic of China and his country will be further developed in a positive way under the leadership of President Corazon Aquino.

Tourism Minister Jose Antonio U. Gonzalez told a press conference this afternoon that the Aquino government will also expand exchanges of visits and bilateral trade with the ROC in years to come because the Philippines can provide the ROC with its abundant raw materials and the ROC has technologies and agricultural expertise needed by his country.

Gonzalez, in his capacity as the personal emissary of President Aquino, arrived in Taipei Thursday for a four-day visit. The 48-year-old former businessman has been the first Philippine cabinet minister to visit the country after the new Philippine Government was formed in late February.

He said besides expressing her appreciation to world media for a role they played "in our initial achievement by their unbiased reporting on developments in our country," President Aquino also asked him to solicit the support of world media, particularly the ROC media, in the Philippines tourism development.

Gonzalez noted that Vice President Lee Teng-Hui, Foreign Minister Chu Fu-Sung, Communications Minister Lien Chan, Vice Foreign Minister Ding Mou-shih and Director General of Tourism Bureau Yu Wei all have expressed the ROC's goodwill towards the Philippines in their respective meetings in the past three days.

While refusing to comment on political affairs, the toursim minister said Agriculture and Food Minister Ramon V. Mitra is scheduled to visit the ROC in the near future and this will be "the best footnote to the Sino-Philippine relationship."

Gonzalez said he is looking forward to coming to this country again soon so as to attract the prosperous ROC nationals to visit his beautiful archipelago nation. He noted that the crime rate in the Philippines has dropped by 60 percent in the first three months of this year and foreign tourists will be safe when sightseeing there.

His ministry, in cooperation with the Ministries of Foreign Affairs and Justice, will strive to eliminate other barriers that keep most of the ROC nationals from traveling to his country, he added.

PREMIER STRESSES DEFENSE DESPITE BUDGET CUT

OW220323 Taipei CNA in English 0232 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Text] Taipei, March 21 (CNA) -- The decline of funding for national defense and foreign affairs in the Fiscal 1987 budget will not weaken national defense, Premier Yu Kuo-hwa of the Republic of China said Friday. The budget reduction has nothing to do with the ROC's purchases of U.S. arms, Yu said at a egislative Yuan meeting when answering interpellations by Legislators Hwang Tsu-wen and Cheng Yu-cheng.

The budget for national defense and foreign affairs will account for 37 percent of the Central Government's total outlay for Fiscal 1987. The budget reduction was made possible because of some savings in the routine maintenance costs and in the reduction to troops, Yu told the legislators. He did not elaborate.

He said the budget for miltary research and the development of the national defense industry will continue to increase.

Meanwhile, the Premier said that, in order to stimulate private investment willingness and accelerate economic development, the Government will increase public investment and allow tax reductions in FY '87. As a result, the Government budget deficit will amount to NT dollar 65 billion (U.S. Dollar 1.63 billion) next year.

The total spending for 1987 will amount to NT dollar 433.25 billion (U.S. dollar 10.84 billion), an increase of 5.1 percent over 1986. The budget deficits will be covered by Government bonds and the savings of government funds to be carried over from the current year, he said.

JOURNAL VIEWS TIANANMEN ANNIVERSARY, NPC AGENDA

[Article by Chiang Wei-wen: "Beijing's Situation on the Eve of the NPC Meeting -- Hong Kong's Capitalist System May Be Maintained for 200 Years"]

[Text] Beijing to Commemorate 10th Anniversary of Tiananmen Incident

"In April this year, there will be a rally in Beijing to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the 5 April Tiananmen Incident."

This reporter was told this by a friend in the know soon after arriving in Beijing. This is a fresh and interesting matter that has aroused much attention: Why should Beijing's official quarters mark the event at this moment?

An Unusual and Important Event

Seeing that I was astonished, my friend said: It is nothing strange, because this is an unusual and important event! To the great sorrow of the people, Zhou Enlai died 10 years ago, throwing the whole country into mourning. However, the "gang of four" seized this opportunity to further upgrade the movement to "strike back with the right-deviationist wind of reversing correct decisions" and to "vigorously pursue and fiercely maul" Deng Xiaoping. In January of that year, Hua Guofeng conveyed an instruction of Mao Zedong, in which Deng was described as "not knowing Marxism-Leninism" and "insisting on this theory of white cats and black cats." In order to usurp state power, the gang of four directed their spearheads at the "capitalist roaders" and launched the movement to "criticize Deng and strike back with the right-deviationist wind of reversing correct decisions," thus throwing the nation into great disorder. But all this made the people greatly detest the gang of four, deeply cherish the memory of Zhou Enlai, and sympathize with Deng Xiaoping.

Thus, beginning in March 1976, in a spontaneous move, people began to prepare for the mourning of Zhou Enlai. Then, during the 10 or more days before the Qing Ming Festival, people sent floral wreaths and silk banners inscribed with poems to the martyr's monument on Tiananmen Square. The gang of four soon noticed these activities of the masses. They quickly decided on a policy to suppress the masses and set a trap for them. Facts show that the essence of the protest movements to mourn Zhou and oppose Jiang, which happened later and were represented by the Tiananmen Incident, was a show of support for Deng Xiaoping's line. These movements laid a solid foundation for the ensuing efforts to smash the Jiang Qing clique. During the first 10 days of October in the same year, the Jiang Qing clique collapsed and the disastrous "Great Cultural Revolution" ended. It is appropriate to say that without the Tiananmen Incident, Deng Xiaoping and Hu Yaobang would not have been able to resume their duties, and China would not be in a good situation today. Nor would the current policy of opening up and reform exist.

My friend said all this with fervor and assurance. Finally he said: In fact, if official quarters do not commemorate this event, the people will do it themselves. But it would be better to have the former hold a ceremony for it.

There Will Be a Special Report With New Ideas at the "NPC"

Since the 10th anniversary of the Tiananmen Incident will also be during the fourth meetings of the NPC and the CPPCC, many reporters will have gathered in Beijing. But what on earth will be the problems for discussion at the meeting?

A reliable source said that apart from Zhao Ziyang's report on the work of the government, the meeting will also adopt a "law on cumpulsory education," The problem of talent is a key problem affecting China's reform and development, and education is an undertaking affecting the quality of future Chinese generations. Thus, it is suitable for the meeting to put forth the problem of universal education.

In Beijing, this reporter often heard people talking about China's current policies, such as: Is China's situation good or bad? Has anything gone wrong in implementing the policy of opening up and reform? What course will China's foreign trade and monetary policy have to follow? And will foriegn currencies be allowed to circulate freely in the market? There were lots of opinions and hearsay; even some senior cadres could not tell what was true and what was not. I asked a friend who knew the ins and outs, and he told me that at this NPC meeting, there will be some new arrangements, such as inviting some experts to lecture on some special topics about foriegn trade, enterprises, finance, banking, currencies, and so forth, to answer questions raised by the delegates, and listen to their opinions. He said that this will be a new characteristic of the coming NPC meeting, and a good method for unifying the people's understanding. However, the results will be known only after the meeting.

In addition, problems concerning rectification and the efforts to crack down on economic crimes and those concerning the children of senior cadres will also be major problems to discuss at group meetings.

Other problems that may evoke controversy are probably the development of the Three Gorges area and the second phase of the Gezhouba project.

A New Controversy Over the Development of the Three Gorges Area?

Last year, CPPCC members gave all kinds of reasons in strongly opposing this development, but many experts have insisted on damming the river and further exploiting the hydropower resources of the Chang Jiang. On 28 February this year, CANKAO XIAOXI [REFERENCE NEWS] reprinted an article carried in the February issue of KUANG CHIAO CHING, entitled "Sanxia Province Seems Ready To Come Out Soon." Later, on 2 March, RENMIN RIBAO carried a report on its front page, saying that good results had been achieved since the Gezhouba project went into operation and the people's confidence was enhanced in further exploiting the Chang Jiang. It seems that the second phase of the Gezhouba project will soon be started. However, my friend told me that things are not as simple as that. Since the development of the Three Gorges, a grand project demanding more than $20 billion, will affect our descendants throughout the ages and bring an enormous change in the entire natural environment, it cannot be done hastily. Instead, it is necessary to listen to the opinions of various sectors. It is said that China's Vice Premier Li Peng suggested that a period of 2 years be set aside to carry out further research on several questions, such as ecological questions and those concerning silt, navigation, catastrophes, and the usefulness of the project, and to work out a report on the feasibility of the project, before the whole matter is finally decided. At the coming NPC and CPPCC meetings, it is quite possible that efforts will be made to collect opinions on this question.

My friend also revealed that although there will be great changes in personnel matters in the next 1 or 2 years, it will not be discussed at the coming NPC and CPPCC meetings.

Policy May Be Further Relaxed, but Still "No Three-Legged Stool!"

It seems that the question of Hong Kong and Macao will not be a major topic for discussion at the NPC meeting.

Of course, people have been following with great interest the negotiations on the future of Macao, Hu Yaobang's planned visit to England and the Queen's visit to China, the relationship between Hong Kong and Shenzhen, and the Hainan Island question. Hong Kong's Urban Council, District Board elections, and the third meeting of the Sino-British Joint Liaison Group have just ended. Taiwan has also held a symposium on the Hong Kong question. All this will naturally affect Hong Kong's future.

Some days ago, at a banquet hosted by Xu Jiatun for members of Hong Kong's Executive and Legislative Councils, Sze-yuen Chung proposed that China should recognize the two councils, but Xu said that respect does not mean recognition. What on earth is Beijing's view on this question? I inquired of a friend in the know about this, and he held: Whether people like it or not, everything must go on in accordance with the "joint declaration." Recognition is a matter for both governments. At present, it is impossible for China to issue a special statement on recognizing the two councils. Therefore, it is no use to try and pressure China on this matter. It is also impossible to have a "three-legged stool" too. In the future, following the restoration of the sovereignty of Hong Kong, the current executive and legislative councils, which are entrusted power by royal instructions and letters patent and which have a colonial flavor, will certainly not be kept intact. There are no unchangeable political structures in the world. As to what political structure Hong Kong will have in the future, this question will be made clear when the "basic law" is drafted. He revealed that there have been discussions and contacts between China and Britain in the Joint Liaison Group on the question of Hong Kong's future political system. Referring to the maintenance of prosperity and stability in Hong Kong, he said that this is a common task for both China and Britain. Anyone who makes contributions to the prosperity and stability of Hong Kong, especially well-known personages like Mr Sze-yuen Chung and who have a certain influence on the society, will always be remembered by the Chinese people.

Hong Kong May Maintain Capitalism for 200 Years!

My friend also revealed that China's current policy toward Hong Kong is even more relaxed than before. In the eyes of high-ranking central officials, a desirable situation in the future would be: peaceful competition under the condition of one country, two systems, through which both may learn from each other and make up each other's deficiencies. The period for Hong Kong to maintain the capitalist system will not be 61 years (the 11 years of the current "transitional period" plus the "50 years during which the system will remain unchanged"), but will be 100 years or even 200 years. This is by no means a casual idea but a reckoning based on careful consideration of China's national situation and world development trends.

I felt buoyed up on hearing this, as I believe this is important information.

Trends in USSR and Sino-Soviet Relations

The "27th National Congress" of the CPSU has just ended, declaring the formal arrival of the Gorbachev period. This general secretary of the CPSU wants to improve relations with China, but the latter has hinted that there has been no new development in Sino-Soviet relations. Arkhipov, first deputy premier of the USSR Council of Ministers, will pay a visit to China soon. Since Sino-Soviet relations are a matter attracting worldwide attention, I asked a friend who knew the situation whether the economic reform of the Soviet Union was an outcome of learning from China. He replied: No, it is all in the Soviet style. The USSR still emphasizes the planned economy, but is trying to make it more reasonable and perfect, such as trying to improve the quality of products.

He then gave an example: When delivering his lengthy political report at the "27th National Congress" of the CPSU, Gorbachev at one point digressed from the draft of his speech, saying that quite a few factories have merely produced products to be stockpiled. But these remarks won widespread applause from the audience. My friend held that the first step of Gorbachev's reform would be streamlining the overlapping organizations between the State Committee for Economic Planning and enterprises, granting the enterprises greater decision-making power while having the planning committee concentrate its efforts on working out long-term plans. This is a Soviet-style plan for the reform.

My friend held that Gorbachev has adopted a more flexible policy toward the Afghan question. The leading body of the CPSU will become younger and younger. If the reform is carried out in accordance with the current plan, the future of this neighboring country, which has rich natural resources and a vast territory, merits our attention. As for Sino-Soviet relations, even if they are improving for the future, such change is not directed against any third country (referring to the United States).

CENTRAL COMMITTEE TO APPOINT NEW CULTURE MINISTER

HK240936 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 24 Mar 86 p 1

[Special dispatch from Beijing: "Wang Meng To Be Appointed Minister of Culture"]

[Text] According to people in cultural circles here, Wang Meng, who is well-known for being open-minded and daring to air his views, will assume the office of minister of culture.

Cultural circles welcome this decision. They say that the minister of culture should be an expert as well as a sensible person. It is generally acknowledged that Wang Meng is the right man for the post. It has been reported that Wang Meng is urwilling to be an "officer," and he has tried to decline the appointment. He had to accept the post later because the CPC Central Committee made the appointment by issuing an order. Weng Meng is now a member of the CPC Central Committee and vice chairman of the Chinese Writers' Association.

The two vice ministers of culture are: First Vice Minister Gao Zhanxiang and Vice Minister Gao Di. The current minister of culture is Zhu Muzhi.

NEW RENMIN RIBAO CHIEF EDITOR REPORTEDLY APPOINTED

HK240158 Hong Kong TA KANG PAO in Chinese 24 Mar 86 p 2

[Special dispatch from Beijing: "Tan Wenrui Assumes the Office of Editor-in-chief of RENMIN RIBAO"]

[Text] It has been reported that the editor-in-chief of RENMIN RIBAO has changed. Tan Wenrui, deputy editor-in-chief of RENMIN RIBAO and concurrently editor-in-chief of its overseas edition, now assumes the office. Former Editor-in-chief Li Zhuang has left office because he has reached the retirement age limit. Not long ago, the CPC Central Committee removed Qin Chuan from the post of director of RENMIN RIBAO and appointed Qian Liren, head of the International Liaison Department of the CPC Central Committee, to take over the post.

LIAOWANG EXPLAINS CHINA'S FOREIGN POLICIES

HK240930 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 11, 17 Mar 86 pp 3-4

[Article by Peng Di: "Are There Changes in China's Foreign Policies?"]

[Text] Foreign policies should serve the just interests of a country and also benefit international peace. The two factors complement each other and are not contradictory at all. It is the power diplomacy which proceeds from onesided interests and imposition of one's will on others that will disrupt international peace and lead to world conflict.

Independence and maintaining peace are the basic principles of China's foreign policies. China manifests its boldness and courage by maintaining independence, sovereignty, and territorial integrity. It has launched indomitable struggles against aggression and threats, whichever direction they come from. Meanwhile, China also manifests its patience and restraint by safeguarding peace, taking the interests of the whole into account, clearing up historical misunderstandings, and promoting friendship among people.

Naturally, this does not mean that China's external work has been perfect at all times or on all issues. During the decade-long internal turmoil, that is, the "Great Cultural Revolution," both the domestic politics and foreign policies were thrown into confusion. There were mistakes and deviations including the ultra-"leftist" trend of thought and the mistaken idea of drawing distinctions with oneself as the criterion. Meanwhile, due to the complicated international relations and lack of practice and experience, China's analyses of the situation were sometimes inaccurate and incomprehensive. For example, for a time we put undue stress on the inevitability of a world war. On the whole however, China has never deviated from its basic principles of safeguarding the just rights and interests of the state and promoting world peace.

China's foreign policies were not acceptable by other countries at first. During the initial period after its founding, New China was maligned by certain big powers as an "aggressive and expansionist warlike element." Following the outbreak of the Korean war, some small and medium-sized countries which were unaware of the truth also cast doubts upon China. They did not know that before the Chinese People's Volunteers entered the war in Korea, China openly issued a warning and also notified the United States through a third country in an attempt to avoid the war imposed on China. Because the United States disregarded all warnings and advice, its troops pressed up to China's border, its airplanes intruded China's territorial airspace, and it fired shells at China's territory, China was compelled to dispatch troops to defend the country and never yield to might.

At the Bandung Conference held later, China's Premier Zhou Enlai disclosed the truth to the leaders of the Asian and African countries. Indian Prime Minister Nehru, who had passed the message to the United States, verified the facts on the spot. At that moment, the leaders of many Asian and African countries came to realize the truth.

Indeed, there is a process for other countries to observe, study, and gradually understood China. Along with the changes in the situation, China's foreign policies should also undergo a process of readjustment, adaptability, and maturity. In order to estimate China's diplomacy, it is necessary to first observe the characteristics of the founding of the PRC, its historical conditions, and the changes in international environment.

As a nation bullied and humiliated by foreign countries for a long time, the founding of New China marked the arrival of the high tide of an oppressed nation, which accounts for the majority of the world's population, moving toward independence and prosperity. Common destiny links China with the countries of the Third World. They share weal and woe and support each other. Their unity and struggle have changed the outlook of the world. The well-known Five Principles of Peaceful Coexistence, initiated and drafted by China, India, and Burma, originated in Asia. These principles first pushed the relations between Asian and African countries to a new level and were later generally acknowledged as the universal principles guiding the relations between all countries. The Bandung Conference, sponsored by the Asian and African countries, indicated that the Third World countries had become an independent international political force. Following the conference, the political force expanded rapidly and its internal unity enhanced continuously.

Owing to the complicated international relations, particularly the problems left over by history, and to the dissession sowed by certain big powers, not all the problems among the Third World countries could be solved reasonably. Nevertheless, China, on the basis of upholding the Five Principles of Peaceful Coexistence, established and promoted friendship with other Third World countries, sought common ground while reserving differences, treated others equally, helped each other, and offered aid to many countries without political conditions attached.

When differences arise with another country, China always tries to solve them through peaceful consultation. Even in case of provocations, China tries to reduce the conflicts to the minimum so as to resume normal relations as quickly as possible. As a result, although setbacks are unavoidable, the relations between China and the other Third World countries have improved with each passing day. China's relations remained tense only with Vietnam, which insists on aggression and expansion. China has never haggled over the breach of the Vietnamese leaders. The reasons for the tense relations between the two countries are Vietnam's occupation of Cambodia, trampling on a small nation, seeking hegemony, disrupting peace, frequently provoking armed conflicts along China's border, and menacing China's security. China has repeatedly declared that so long as Vietnam withdraws its troops from Cambodia, the relations between China and Vietnam can return to normal.

China has from the very beginning attached great importance to its relations with the weak and small nations in Asia and Africa. China has made special efforts to promote the establishment and expansion of the Third World as an independent international force. If we say that there are any changes in this respect, it would be the fact that China has attached even greater importance to the whole of the Third World countries in promoting world peace and development. As a member of the Third World, China has used its own practice to show its willingness to work with other members and to play its unique role for the sake of world peace and development.

On the basis of the Five Principles of Peaceful Coexistence, China has also strengthened its relations with the economically developed countries including Japan and West Europe. China was one of the countries that first supported a united Europe. On the whole, China has no conflict of interests with these countries. China suffered from the aggression of Japanese militarism in the past. If such an experience is remembered and properly handled, it will not become an obstacle to the friendly relations of the future generations. An agreement has been reached through consultation on the question of Hong Kong between China and Britain. The sovereignty of Hong Kong will be returned to China and the appropriate arrangements made will maintain Hong Kong's long-term stability.

In recent years, China has made further headway in its relations with the developed countries, enormous strengthening of cooperation in the fields of economics, trade, and science and technology. The specific problems or contradictions can be solved through peaceful consultation based on the principles of equality and mutual benefit. There are bright prospects for such cooperation. The new developments in the relations between Europe and Asia will be of far-reaching influence to international peace and economic development.

As a big nation, China's relations with the two superpowers, which have a vital bearing on the international situation as a whole, are extremely important. Sometimes it is rather difficult for China to get along with the two superpowers. The matter is complicated but the reasoning is simple. If we lay aside the minute details, it can be simply summarized as the following: One attempts to outstrip the other, while the other remains neither humble nor pert.

Around the founding of the PRC, Mao Zedong, Zhou Enlai, and other Chinese leaders offered friendship to the United States. The reaction of the United States was a rigid attitude followed by interference, blockade, and threatening. Its interference in the Taiwan issue was particularly an act of hegemonism which evoked international criticism. At that time, the Chinese Government adopted the policy of "leaning on one side" and naturally strengthened friendly relations with the Soviet Union which treated us equally. Such a situation was forced and created by the United States. Thus, Sino-U.S. relations remained frozen for 20 years or so.

Even under such circumstances, China, with international peace and friendship toward the people in mind, started normal talks at the ambassadorial level with the United States in 1955 to relax the tense situation created by the United States over Taiwan, which indicated China's principle of resolutely safeguarding its national sovereignty and its patience in seeking a peaceful solution. The talks lasted for 15 years and were interrupted in 1970. Although the talks did not produce any results, both sides kept in touch with each other, which helped stabilize the international situation and was also the prelude to normalization of relations between the two countries.

The "ping pong diplomacy" of 1971 and Nixon's visit to China in 1972 indicated the drastic changes in the world situation and the boldness and foresight of the leaders of the two countries. Later, diplomatic talks continued, the two countries announced the establishment of diplomatic relations, and the leaders of the two sides visited each other on several occasions. With the efforts of both sides, Sino-U.S. relations were finally normalized. Both China and the United States acknowledged the principle of "one China" in the Shanghai Communique and the communique on the establishment of diplomatic relations. However, a pro-Taiwan force still exists in the United States which is always trying to make use of the "Taiwan Relations Act" to interfere in China's internal affairs and obstruct the normal development of Sino-U.S. relations. China has made unremitting efforts to eliminate this interference. It is willing to work with the United States to further develop the relations between the two countries.

Whether the relations between China and the United States are hostile or friendly, good or bad, has an important bearing on the gains or losses of each side and can also have a great impact on the international situation and world peace. It goes without saying that the relations between the two countries will have a far-reaching influence. However, will such relations develop into "strategic relations?" This is a question that has evoked much comment.

The relations between China and another superpower, the Soviet Union, have also experienced twists and turns. As a young socialist country which suffered pressure and threats from the United States, China maintained close relations with the Soviet Union at first and both sides concluded a treaty of alliance. This was also a result of historical conditions. However, China refused to be a dependency of any power because it had its independent guiding ideology and the line and principles suited to its national conditions. Obviously, this was incompatible with the guiding thinking and foreign policies of the Soviet leaders. Confronted with Soviet political and economic pressure, military encirclement, and even border provocations during the 1960's, China remained unyielding, upheld independence, and terminated its relations of alliance with the Soviet Union. Sino-Soviet relations became tense for a time because the expansionist policy of the Soviet Union impaired Sino-Soviet relations and also encroached upon other Third World countries, which created a tense situation in many regions and directly menaced China's security.

The world is facing turbulent changes and the situation is pressing. Many countries are readjusting their internal and external relations so as to adapt themsleves to the new situation. In recent years, the Soviet Union has suffered setbacks in its foreign policies and has restrained itself in expansion. Precisely at this period, Soviet leaders passed away and new appointments were made one after another. This is the opportunity for the Soviet Union to readjust its policies as a whole, including its relations with China. Although the Soviet Union has expressed its desire to improve relations with China, when the major issues that hinder Sino-Soviet relations, such as Vietnam's act of aggression in Cambodia, Soviet military occupation of Afghanistan, and massive forces stationed at the Sino-Soviet and Sino-Mongolian borders are involved, there has been no changes in the Soviet attitude so far. Despite these factors, the Soviet Union still attempts to draw China back to its "big family" strategy.

This shows that both shores of the Pacific Ocean and both north and south on the European continent have tentative ideas on and try to seek so-called "strategic relations." Through careful consideration, drawing lessons, and summing up experience, the Chinese government has decided to adhere to its basic principles of independence, safeguarding peace, nonalignment, seeking no hegemony, and opposing both big and small hegemonism. Only in this way can we maintain our independence and security and contribute to world peace. This shows that China's foreign policies are very mature.

In the world today, the force of peace is growing while the factors of war are being opposed and conditioned. Although the circumstances of each country differ from others, international peace and economic development have become a common objective demand. So long as we make joint efforts and seek common ground while reserving differences, there will be bright prospects for world peace and development. China's foreign policies, which are characterized by independence and peace, will play their proper role.

This brief review is only my personal observation and humble opinion. However, we can see from the review that China's diplomacy, based on the changes in objective situation and the deepening of subjective understanding, has developed and been readjusted somewhat in specific methods and focal points of work. Through historical trials, the uniformity and continuity of the basic principle and purpose of China's diplomacy show that it conforms to the interests of the people of China and other countries.

GUANGMING RIBAO ON U.S. AID FOR NICARAGUAN REBELS

HK240928 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 14 Mar 86 p 4

["International Commentary" column by Washington-based GUANGMING RIBAO reporters Wang Deming and Ding Ke: "Dangerous Obstinacy"]

[Text] Washington, 11 Mar -- Over the past 15 days or so, senior officals of the Reagan administration have been lobbying everywhere and putting pressure on the U.S. Congress in an attempt to compel the latter to comply with Reagan's request for $100 million in aid for Nicaraguan rebels.

At the end of this month, the program for giving $27 million in so-called "humanitarian aid" to Nicaraguan rebels, which was approved by the U.S. Congress last year, is due to expire. However, the Nicaraguan situation has not changed in the way the Reagan administration wants it to. Under such circumstances, President Reagan was forced to ask the U.S. Congress on 18 February to lift its restrictions on giving military aid to the Nicaraguan rebels. Shortly after that, on 25 February, President Reagan asked the U.S. Congress to approve his request for $70 million in military aid and $30 million in "humanitarian aid" for the Nicaraguan rebels. His request was cold-shouldered by the U.S. Congress, and the Democrats in particular raised strong objections to it.

However, the Reagan administration refuses to stop there. In order to obtain approval for Reagan's request, officials of the Reagan administration have doubled their efforts. On 3 March at a meeting with three leaders of the Nicaraguan rebels, Reagan openly tried to coerce the U.S. Congress into approving his request for $100 million in aid for the rebels, saying that failure to do this would lead to a "strategic disaster." On 2 March, Secretary of State Shultz said at a meeting that if the Nicaraguan rebels were not given further aid, the entire Western hemisphere "could become a hostage taken by despots." On 5 March, Buchanan, the White House director of communications, published an article in THE WASHINGTON POST. In this article, he alarmingly asks the following question: "Do the Democrats support communists or President Reagan?"

Buchanan's accusation evoked a strong reaction from Congress. Some Democratic Congressmen described this as a "revival of McCarthyism." Other Congressmen criticized the White House for arbitrarily criticizing others for their objections to Reagan's Nicaraguan policy.

On 7 March, Reagan announced the appointment of Habib as his special envoy to Central America, whose mission is to "achieve a diplomatic solution to the Nicaraguan issue with efforts accompanied by an increasing level of (military) pressure on the Nicaraguan Government." Newspapers here suggest Reagan did not concede by doing this. The purpose of Habib's appointment is to pacify Congress and public opinion.

Up to this point, neither the White House nor Congress is willing to budge from its original position. However, bargaining is going on behind the scenes. Senator Sasser, a Democrat from Tennessee, has proposed a compromise: while negotiating with the Nicaraguan Government, the United States should suspend aid to the rebels for half a year. However, Reagan has raised strong objections to this proposal. According to the 11 March WASHINGTON POST, given the likelihood of Congress' voting against his proposal, Reagan might compromise by delaying the supply of aid to Nicaraguan rebels.

The U.S. Congress is going to vote on Reagan's program and Reagan has decided to make his last effort by giving a nationwide television address. The majority of people here think that it is rather unlikely that Reagan's proposal will get through. On this issue, the U.S. Government has received neither help nor sympathy from other countries. On 9 March, President Betancur of Colombia described the U.S. proposal for $100 million in aid to the Nicaraguan rebels as "erroneous" and as "unable to produce desirable consequences." His view represents the position of various Central American countries. History tells us that eagerness to make a show of force and interference in others' international affairs are always condemned by forces upholding justice. The Central American issue and other international disputes should be peacefully settled through negotiations. The Contadora Group has always rightly advocated this.

U.S. OFFICIAL URGES TRADE 'THAW' WITH USSR

OW210838 Beijing XINHUA in English 0827 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] Washington, March 20 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Commerce Secretary Malcom Baldrige said today that "it was time for a thaw" in U.S.-Soviet trade relations. However, he warned against the view that trade alone could improve relations between the two countries without considering political and security factors. Speaking before a Washington conference of businessmen wanting to trade with the Soviet Union, Baldrige said the U.S. should cut the list of prohibited export items to the Soviets by "30 or 40 percent." He said that "whole list needs an overhaul."

Baldrige suggested that a commission be set up to rule on how to cut the list, which prescribes what items can and cannot be exported to the Soviet Union, without endangering U.S. national security.

The United States bans the sale of military-related items to the Soviet Union as well as some sophisticated computer systems and advanced technologies. The businessmen attending the conference urged the government to lift the ban on some of the currently restricted items like small computer systems and telecommunications equipment. Baldrige told the businessmen that the Reagan administration is still opposed to major trade concessions to the Soviet Union "in the absence of progress in other areas." He also said that the United States does not view the Soviet Union as a big market and that trade volume between the two countries will only be about 2.3 billion U.S. dollars this year.

LIAOWANG ASSESSES 27TH CPSU CONGRESS

HK220615 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 11, 17 Mar 86 pp 28-29

[Article by special correspondent Shen Yiming: "The 27th Congress of the CPSU Decides on an "'Acceleration Strategy'" -- special dispatch from Moscow]

[Text] The 9-day 27th Congress of the CPSU concluded on 6 March. This was the first congress held by the CPSU since Gorbachev was elected general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee in March last year. The CPSU Congress listened to Gorbachev's political report and the report by Ryzhkov, member of the CPSU Politburo and chairman of the Soviet Council of Ministers, approved the revision of the party program and the revised party constitution, decided on the basic principles for Soviet social and economic development in the 15 years up to the end of this century, and elected a new central leading organ. Gorbachev was reelected general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee.

The congress decided that for a period of time to come, the Soviet Union will pursue a "strategy for speeding up social and economic development." According to Gorbachev, this "speeding up stragegy" is four-fold: "Perfecting its socialist economic system and energetically promoting the development of production as well as scientific and technological progress"; "closely relating the improvement of laborers' benefits to their labor efficiency"; "bringing into play the initiative and creative spirit of each laborer and collective"; and "closely combining ideological and organizational work with probelms in actual life so as to prevent people from indulging in empty talk and preaching." The congress decided that by applying the "speeding up strategy," the Soviet Union will double its national revenue and industrial output value by the end of this century.

In his political report, Gorbachev provided a brief explanation for formulating the "speeding up strategy." For a number of years, he said, the Soviet Union has achieved success in its economic, social, and cultural fields, but at the same time "errors" have occurred in the political sphere and other activities. "Unhealthy tendencies" have also appeared in the economic, social, and spiritual spheres. The "inertness and rigidity of the forms and methods of administration, the decline of a work ethic, and increased bureaucracy" have done "no small damage" to our cause. "Stagnation is beginning to emerge" in our social life. It is therefore necessary to overcome negative factors in social and economic development as soon as possible in order to invigorate and motivate this development.

Almost without exception, dozens of speakers at the congress severely criticized the past mistakes and commented on present problems, pointing out that for a time in the past "mistakes by individual persons cost the state dearly." As early as the late 1960's, they were already aware that resources for unrestrained economic development were "in fact already exhausted," but due to "inertness" in their ideology, they "could not reach a correct conclusion." Their criticism and suggestions involved important problems such as economic and political work, social relations, and the party's work style. They underwent considerable analysis of the cause of stagnation in economic development, maintaining that the major cause was, instead of drawing a prompt and correct conclusion on the changes in the economic situation and shifting the economy to the road of intensive development the Soviet Union had continued to pursue unrestrained economic development by increasing the work force and investments. As a result, problems in economic equilibrium became acute, social demand was not in line with the level of production, and purchasing power and supply were out of balance. Efforts have been made over the past few years to correct this situation, but there has been no fundamental change. Gorbachev summed up the following three lessons at the congress:

First, it is necessary to speak the truth; second, it is necessary to have a clear aim and persist in actual deeds, and reforms should not be abandoned halfway; and third, the masses and cadres should consciously take part in speeding up social and economic development.

The Congress maintained that "profound reform" of the economic system and management methods was the key to speeding up social and economic development, stressing that a "thorough reform" rather than partial correction was necessary. The reform consists of adhering to the economic accounting system so as to guarantee that enterprises maintain a favorable balance of payments and solve their own funds; using economic methods such as prices, loans, and economic incentives to lead the economy; reforming the price system so as to make it more flexible; expanding the decision-making power of enterprises and encouraging leading economic organs to draw up policies on technology, to maintain a balance between various departments, and to guarantee the quality of products for the national economy; popularizing the collective contract system and the household contract system in agriculture and allowing agricultural enterprises to sell their surplus budgetary products in the market.

The Congress particularly mentioned bringing into play the human factor, especially the role of cadres. Stabilization of the cadres line, the Congress pointed out, does not refer to the permanency of positions in the cadres ranks. The cadres ranks should be composed of experienced cadres and young cadres. Insofar as party style is concerned, conservative ideas, relaxed discipline, bureaucracy, flattery, the practice of abusing power, and activities in violation of laws and discipline must be resolutely opposed.

The speeches at the congress suggested that there were quite a number of obstacles to carrying out the reforms. Ryzhkov, member of the politburo and chairman of the Council of Ministers, said "the greatest of all dangers is bureaucracy." On whether reforms can be smoothly carried out, Gorbachev made this appraisal: Reforms have just started; "difficulties may arise, and there is no guarantee against miscalculations." However, "we will move ahead step by step in the direction we have chosen."

On foreign policy, Gorbachev pointed out in his political report that Soviet International Strategy is mainly aimed at insuring better opportunities for the Soviet people in a more peaceful and free environment and that at present it is necessary to "stop material preparations for nuclear warfare." The exposition by the congress on peace, disarmament, and Soviet foreign policy did not contain many new details. Gorbachev stressed in his report that the Soviet Union will "maintain the continuity of its foreign strategy." But he added: "The continuity of our foreign policy has nothing in common with repeating what was done in the past. In particular, in terma of methods for solving problems and while holding firm to our principles and stand, we must be resolute and at the same time tactically flexible, remaining ready to make acceptable compromises. Instead of going in for conflicts, our aim is to enter into dialogue and achieve mutual understanding."

The congress elected a new CPSU leading body composed of 26 members -- 12 members of the politburo, 7 alternate politburo members, and 11 secretaries of the CPSU Central Committee (of whom 4 are members of alternate members of the politburo). Of the leading bodies elected by recent party congresses, the present one has the largest number of members. The new leading body has made adjustments and additions based on the original number of members, thus strengthening itself in terms of economic, scientific, organizational, ideological, and diplomatic expertise. The average age of the new leading body is 65 for politburo members -- 4 years younger than the average age of members of the last politburo; 62 for the alternate politburo members -- 4 years younger; and 61 for the secretaries of the CPSU Central Committee — 8 years younger.

ARKHIPOV INVITES PRC NUCLEAR EXPERTS TO USSR

OW241259 Tokyo KYODO in English 1248 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 24 KYODO -- Soviet First Deputy Premier Ivan V. Arkhipov has invited China to send a team of experts to the Soviet Union to survey Soviet nuclear power generat' facilities, an Eastern bloc diplomatic source here disclosed Monday. Arkhipov offe: the invitation during the first China-Soviet committee meeting on economy, trade and techno-scientific cooperation, held here in mid-March, the source said. The Chinese side promised to study the invitation, the source added.

During the Beijing meeting, Arkhipov briefed Chinese leaders about the Soviet economic policy adopted at the latest Soviet Party Congress. The briefings were made at the request of Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, the source said. According to the source, Arkhipov told the Chinese that Sino-Soviet cooperation in energy development can include nuclear power generation and invited China to dispatch the experts' team to the Soviet Union as an initial step in such cooperation.

During the Beijing talks, both sides agreed on the construction of two new railway systems linking the Soviet Union and China's Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region, in addition to the existing three railways linking the two countries in the far eastern and Mongolian areas, the source said. The source predicted Moscow will provide technology and equipment in the new railway projects while China will help with manpower. The agreement on the railway projects is believed to be based on bilateral talks when Li Senmao, China's vice minister of railways, and others visited the Soviet Union last year.

During the mid-March meeting here, the two sides also agreed to expand bilateral shipping and establish shipping representatives' offices in Shanghai and Odessa, respectively, the source said.

Agreement was also reached to increase mutual exchanges of students, and Moscow agreed to help train Chinese industrial experts in the Soviet Union, the source said. At present, 200 Chinese students are studying in the Soviet Union, with a similar number of Soviet students in China.

SOVIET AMITY GROUP MARKS DONG BIWU BIRTH DATE

[Text] Moscow, March 24 (XINHUA) -- The Union of Soviet Societies for Friendship and Cultural Relations with Foreign Countries and the Soviet-China Friendship Society held a public lecture here today to mark the 100th anniversary of the birth of former Chinese state leader Dong Biwu.

Professor Yakovlev, member of the central board of the Soviet-China Friendship Society, spoke at the lecture about Dong's life and his great contribution to the liberation and socialist construction of the Chinese people.

Sudarikov, professor of the Diplomatic Academy of the Soviet Foreign Ministry, talked about meeting with Dong when he was working in China.

Chinese ambassador to the Soviet Union Li Zewang was also present at the lecture.

NEW ZEALAND'S LANGE ON TALKS WITH LOCAL OFFICIALS

OW241805 Beijing XINHUA in English 1641 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Text] Guiyang, March 24 (XINHUA) -- New Zealand Prime Minister David Lange said here today talks with local South China leaders were very beneficial. In an interview with XINHUA, Lange said that he had spent three happy days in China visiting with leaders of Guangdong and Guizhou provinces and the Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region.

Lange said that several specialists from New Zealand had engaged in joint technological work in agriculture with scientists in Guangxi and that there has been a substantial increase in trade between New Zealand and Guangdong Province in the past few years. He said that he was told that animal husbandry is a major factor in the period of the Seventh Five-Year Plan in Guizhou Province. He said this was very important to the relationship between New Zealand and Guizhou Province. Lange said he hoped that cooperation between New Zealand and China in agriculture would develop substantially. He said this is one of the reasons he came to China.

The New Zealand guests arrived in Anshun city from Guilin by plane this morning in the company of Wu Wenying, chairman of the Chinese Government reception committee and textile industry minister. Later today they visited the Huangguoshu Falls and other scenic spots. The guests arrived in Guiyang by car this evening and later were honored at a banquet given by Governor Wang Chaowen of Guizhou Province.

AQUINO TO ORDER PHILIPPINE LOCAL ELECTIONS

[Text] President Arturo Delvalle of Panama formally turned down former Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos' request for political asylum in that country. In a statement, President Delvalle said that he made this decision after a thorough study of Mr Marcos' request, consultations with cabinet and other groups of the National Democratic Union and taking national security into consideration.

BENIGNO AQUINO MURDER CASE REOPENING

HK240551 Beijing International Service in Tagalog 1130 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Text] In Manila, the newly-established Presidential Commission on Human Rights said yesterday that it will begin reopening the case on the assassination of former Senator Benigno Aquino. This was announced by former Senator Jose Diokno, committee chairman, in a press conference yesterday.

Aquino was killed at the Manila International Airport on 21 August 1983 as he descended from the airplane that took him home after three years of self-exile in the United States.

Twenty five military personnel, including former Armed Forces chief of staff General Fabian Ver, and a civilian, were accused of the murder but were acquitted by the anti-graft court, the Sandiganbayan, last 2 December after an almost one year trial.

According to Diokno, his seven man committee will find out whether the Aquino trial was fair or not. It will also investigate whether the former presiding justice of the court had been involved in obstruction of justice in order to acquit the accused.

Meanwhile, Vice President and Foreign Minister Salvador Laurel said the Philippines would consider Panama's acceptance of deposed President Ferdinand Marcos as an unfriendly act and might lead to the Philippines' severing diplomatic relations with Panama. This was reported yesterday by the PHILIPPINE NEWS AGENCY [PNA].

The PNA also reported that Panama's honorary consul in the Philippines announced that the Panamanian Government would not undertake official action without first consulting the Philippine Government.

The other day, deputy Foreign Minister Jose Ingles sent a note to all countries with which the Philippines has diplomatic relations, asking them to refrain from granting political asylum to, or accepting as a resident, former President Marcos.

SINO-PHILIPPINE FILM PRODUCTION BEGINS

HK240543 Beijing International Service in Tagalog 1130 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] Shooting for the Sino-Philippine co-production "The King and the Emperor" began the other day in a seaside village some 150 kilometers south of Manila in Southern Luzon. The screenplay for the film was based on the story of the visit to China by the Sultan of Sulu and his meeting with Emperor Yungglo of the Ming Dynasty in the 15th century.

The directors of the film are (Xiao Lan) of China and Eddie Romero of the Philippines. Noted Chinese actor Wang Xingang plays the emperor while Philippine actor Vic Vargas takes on the role of the Sultan of Sulu.

According to a memorandum concluded last month, the film will be made in two stages: the first half will be shot in the Philippines and later, in China. The shooting is expected to finish in October this year.

HONG KONG LAND TRANSACTION USED FOR FUTURE SAR

OW211856 Beijing XINHUA in English 1507 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] Hong Kong, March 21 (XINHUA) -- The Hong Kong Government has set aside 423 million Hong Kong dollars (about 54 million U.S. dollars) from its last year's land transaction incomes for the future Hong Kong Special Administrative Region (SAR). This was announced by Sun Yanheng, chief Chinese representative on the Sino-British Land Commission, here today.

The sum was the first income drawn from the Hong Kong Government's land transaction revenue for the future SAR Government.

According to an annex to the Sino-British Joint Declaration on Hong Kong's future, which came into force last year, premium income obtained by the British Hong Kong Government from land transaction shall, after deduction of the average cost of land production, be shared equally between the British Hong Kong Government and the future Hong Kong SAR Government.

At its 8th meeting here today, the land commission decided to grant new leases of 55 hectares of land for the 1986-87 fiscal year beginning April 1.

LI XIANNIAN, ZHAO ZIYANG MESSAGES TO PAKISTAN

BK230908 Beijing in Urdu to Pakistan 1600 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Text] President Li Xianian has greeted President Mohammad Ziaul Haq on the occasion of Pakistan's national day. President Li in his greetings message said: On behalf of the government and the people of China and in my own name, I extend warmest greetings and good wishes to your excellency and, through you, to the brotherly people of Pakistan on the occasion of the national day of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan. I have noted with pleasure that under your leadership the people of Pakistan have achieved notable successes in the defense of national sovereignty and in the construction of their country. General elections were held in your country last year and the program of establishment of democratic process was successfully concluded. This will definitely help greatly in the progress and prosperity of your country.

Pakistan has always implemented a foreign policy of peace, sovereignty and nonalignment, paid great attention to the promotion of relations with neighboring countries, emphasized unity with the Islamic community, actively promoted regional cooperation in South Asia, extended unflinching support to the just struggle of the people of various Third World countries, and played a positive role for peace and stability in South Asia and the world.

President Li went on: The people of China and Pakistan enjoy age-old friendship. The leaders of the two countries have always attached great importance to Sino-Pakistani friendship and trusted and supported each other. History proves that Sino-Pakistan friendship is based on solid foundations and is full of dynamism and vigor. I firmly believe that these Sino-Pakistan ties of friendly cooperation, which are exemplary in friendly relations among neighboring nations, will continue to grow and develop more extensively in the future.

At the end of his message to President Ziaul Haq, President Li Xiannian wished for the prosperity and happiness in the Islamic Republic of Pakistan and for the happiness and health of the president himself.

Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang also sent greetings to Prime Minister Mohammad Khan Junejo on the occasion of Pakistan day. Prime Minister Zhao in his message said: On behalf of the government and the people of China and in my own name, I extend very sincere greetings to your excellency and your government and people on the happy occasion of the national day of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan and offer my best regards to you.

The Islamic Republic of Pakistan is a peace-loving country which, as a Third World country, always steadfastly follows principles in international affairs, upholds justice, and plays a prominent and positive role in the defense of peace and stability in Asia and the world. That is why world opinion greatly commends it. The illustrious and competent Pakistani people have continuously achieved new successes in various fields of national construction. The Chinese people greatly admire this. China and Pakistan are friendly neighbors who respect each other on the basis of the five principles of peaceful coexistence and who closely cooperate with each other, and as a result our friendly relations continue to develop. Your excellency, I am fully confident that the existing Sino-Pakistan friendship is not only useful for the basic interests of the people of our two countries, but also serves the cause of peace in this region, and in Asia.

Mr Zhao Ziyang in his message to Mr Junejo said: I hope that the Islamic Repbulic of Pakistan will remain prosperous, the brotherly Pakistani people will remain happy and your excellency will remain successful and healthy in all respects.

PAKISTAN AMBASSADOR LAUDS SINO-PAKISTAN TIES

[Text] Beijing, March 21 (XINHUA) -- Relations between the People's Republic of China and Pakistan are a model for other countries, Islamabad's Ambassador in Beijing Dr. Maqbool Ahmad Bhatty said here today. In an exclusive interview with XINHUA, the ambassador said, despite the different political and social systems of the two countries, Pakistan and China have established friendly relations based on mutual interests which have not only contributed to peace in Asia but also been beneficial to peace in the world at large.

Recognizing peace as a basic tenet and prerequisite for development, Pakistan and China have been working together to oppose foreign intervention such as in Afghanistan and Kampuchea, he said. The economic cooperation between Pakistan and China in the past few years has been most satisfactory, the ambassador said. "China has helped us in completing some projects of vital importance, notably the heavy mechanical complex and the heavy foundry and forge in Taxila. A cultural complex is nearing completion in Islamabad with Chinese assistance and the construction of a Chinese-aided heavy industrial electrical complex has also been agreed upon." he noted. In addition, he said, the television authorities of the two countries have already done the spadework for coproduction of TV plays, and steps are being taken to promote scholarly exchanges.

The ambassador said that on May 1, 1986 the Khunjerab Pass on the Karakoram Highway, built with the joint efforts of Chinese and Pakistan engineers and workers, will be opened to third-country nationals. "This will enhance trade between the regions close to the border and will be beneficial for the tourism industries of the two countries," he added. Bhatty expressed the hope that the existing framework of bilateral trade could be further broadened and diversified.

DANISH PRIME MINISTER CONTINUES CHINA VISIT

Meets With Deng Xiaoping

OW250844 Beijing XINHUA in English 0830 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 25 (XINHUA) -- China's top leader Deng Xiaoping said today that China's policies are worked out collectively and enjoyed wide support of the people and cadres who desire reforms.

Deng, who is chairman of the Central Adivsory Commission of the Chinese Communist Party, made this remark at a 45-minute meeting with visiting Danish Prime Minister Poul Schluter at the Great Hall of the People here today.

When the Danish visitors arrived at the meeting hall, Deng greeted them at the entrance to the hall and welcomed them to China. Schluter said that he had been looking forward to meeting Deng and was very pleased to meet him today.

Deng said, "You are the first foreign friend I have received this year. Not long ago, there were rumors circulating in Hong Kong to the effect that I was ill. My appearance here today will scotch those rumors now" he said with a hearty laugh.

He continued, "In the past few years I have deliberately tried to disengage myself from day-to-day affairs and let other comrades take more responsibility. This shows that the existing policies of China do not hinge on myself alone. That is why I have not made any public appearances for some time."

In fact, Deng said, China's policies are not the work of one single person, but are deeply rooted in the overwhelming majority of the people. The cadres and people all desire reform, he noted. "Even after my retirement China's policies will continue. That should assuage international concern about whether China's policies will continue without Deng," he added.

On bilateral relations, Deng said China and Denmark enjoy excellent relations. "Denmark was one of the first countries to establish diplomatic relations with new China. In recent years, exchanges of visits between leaders of the two countries have increase, and political and economic relations between the two countries have recorded major progress. Denmark has done its best to help China's construction, and for this we express our thanks to you," he added.

The Danish prime minister said that his country not only hopes to further develop economic and trade relations with China, but also wants to get to know China's history, culture and language.

Deng agreed with him, adding that friendship must be built based on mutual understanding and friendly relations. He believed that "political and economic relations between China and Denmark will continue to develop." He said that the two countries share common views on international issues and have worked out policies according to their own conditions. China pursues an independent policy, he said. "We hope European European countries would also pursue an independent policy." He said he was sure that this policy benefits world peace. He siad he hoped that China, Europe and the Third World countries would become a strong force. Only by strengthening unity and making efforts to safeguard world peace, he stressed, could there be hope for peace and the avoidance of war.

On China's economic restructuring, Deng said that reform in China's urban areas is much more complicated than in rural areas, but is expected to be completed in about five years. "Though we have to explore ways which have never been tried before, I am confident that we'll succeed," he added.

Zhao Ziyang Hosts Banquet

[Text] Beijing, March 24 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang held a banquet in honor of Danish Prime Minister Poul Schluter and Mme. Lisbeth Schluter at the Great Hall of the People here tonight.

In his speech at the banquet, Zhao said that Denmark is among the early Western countries to recognize and establish diplomatic relations with China. He said recent years have witnessed rapid growth of bilateral relations in various fields, adding that the exchange of personnel from various walks of life of the two countries has been frequent, thus steadily enhancing their mutual understanding, friendship and cooperation. Bilateral trade has grown significantly, and the Sino-Danish economic and technological cooperation has yielded results in many provinces and cities in China, he stressed.

He said the growth of Sino-Danish friendly relations and cooperation sets an example for the development of relations among states on the basis of the five principles of peaceful coexistence. He expressed the belief that Prime Minister Schluter's current visit will give fresh impetus to the friendship and cooperation between the two countries.

Turning to international situation, Zhao said that the people of various countries are deeply disturbed by the rivalry between the superpowers and escalating arms race between them.

China is of the view that as the question of disarmament has a bearing on the security of countries in the world, all of them, whether big or small, strong or weak, have their due role to play, he said. Both China and Western Europe constitute important forces for deterring war and safeguarding world peace, he added. Enhanced unity between China and Western Europe is an important factor making for world peace and stability.

Prime Minister Schluter said that he is here to give tangible expression to the strong ties of friendship and cooperation between Denmark and China which have developed over the past years and to expand the relations even further.

He said the potential of this new dynamic China is vast, adding that "we have no doubt that the reforms undertaken will further enhance China's important position in the community of nations." He acknowledged that a very positive feature of Chinese foreign policy is readiness to co-operate with countries regardless of their socio-political system. He said that this has bought China many friends in the world.

The relations between Denmark and China have always been close, he said.

Noting the significance of the co-operation agreement and political consultations at high level between China and European community, he said that he is convinced that both parties can derive great benefit from these contacts.

The Danish Government is deeply concerned about the present level of armaments and has consistently pointed to the need for progress towards disarmament, conventional as well as nuclear, he said. He expressed his concern over the situation in Kampuchea and Afghanistan, saying that a peaceful solution can only be found on the basis of a comprehensive political settlement providing for the withdrawal of foreign troops.

[Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese at 1623 GMT on 24 March in reporting on the banquet hosted by Zhao Ziyang in honor of Danish Prime Minister Poul Schluter and his wife adds the following sentence: "Present at the banquet were Wu Xueqian, state councillor and minister of foreign affairs; Cui Naifu, minister of civil affairs; and high-ranking government officials accompanying Prime Minister Schluter on the visit."]

Zheng Tuobin, Schluter Hold Talks

[Text] Beijing, March 25 (XINHUA) -- Denmark is keen to develop high technology, visiting Danish Prime Minister Poul Schluter said here today. He was speaking during a meeting with Chinese Minister of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Zheng Tuobin at Beijing's Great Hall of the People.

Schluter said he was very glad to note China's achievements under its economic reforms. Since 1978, the volume of Sino-Danish trade had increased tenfold. The Danish Government was now eager to further expand trade and co-operation.

Zheng said bilateral trade and economic co-operation had developed satisfactorily. Co-operation in various forms was proceeding smoothly. Both men said they hoped their countries could conduct widescale co-operation on foodstuffs and light industry. Danish industrialists who are accompanying Schluter on his visit attended the meeting. Earlier, Schluter laid a wreath at the Monument to the People's Heroes in Tiananmen Square.

Attends Beer Symposium

[Text] Beijing, March 24 (XINHUA) -- A six-day symposium on Sino-Danish Beer brewing technology opened at the nationalities palace of culture this afternoon.

Danish Prime Minister Poul Schluter attended the opening ceremony, and also joined a beer tasting offered by Guangzhou Brewery which had imported technology from Denmark.

In their speeches, both the prime minister and Wang Wenzhe, Chinese vice-minister of light industry, hoped that the symposium would promote the development of cooperations between the two countries in beer brewing and other fields of light industry.

The symposium is co-sponsored by the Chinese Ministry of Light Industry and the Danish Danbrew Consult Ltd.. and Danish specialists will be arranged to give presentations on brewing technology at the meeting.

Earlier today, Mme. Lisbeth Schluter visited a Sino-Danish biomedical postgraduate training center which was set up in 1985 under a co-operative agreement between Chinese and Danish Governments.

JIA SHI ON FOREIGN INVESTMENT IN CHINA

AU250946 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 22 Mar 86 p 7

[Text] Jia Shi, president of the Chinese Council for the Promotion of International Trade (CCPIT), stressed in Vienna yesterday that foreign firms can cooperate with Chinese firms in all kinds of different forms. The high-ranking Chinese functionary yesterday briefed Austrian business representatives about new opportunities for bilateral cooperation at a meeting held within the framework of a China seminar organized by the Austrian Chamber of Commerce. Jia Shi stressed that in the past few years a number of laws were enacted that are designed to facilitate such cooperation. Further promotion measures are to be expected, he said, adding that foreign investments in China are protected by law. Since February, moreover, regulations are in effect which substantially facilitiate travel to and within China for foreigners.

FRG TO SIGN SDI ACCORD AMID 'HOT DEBATE'

[Text] Bonn, March 24 (XINHUA) -- Federal German Economics Minister Martin Bangemann flew to Washington today to discuss the details of Federal German participation in the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) research program. Bangemann told a German radio station earlier he plans to sign two accords with the U.S., one on behalf of Federal German corporations taking part in the SDI research program and the other on civilian technological cooperation between the two countries.

Bangemann's visit comes amid a hot debate within the coalition government of Chancellor Helmut Kohl over Federal German participation in the SDI research program.

Minister of State for the Federal German Foreign Ministry Juergen Mollemann said yesterday that it is "politically foolish" to approve the agreement on Federal German involvement in the SDI research program without careful consideration. Mollemann is opposed to keeping secret the two planned agreements. The U.S. is reportedly against publishing certain clauses of the agreements. Mollemann also criticized U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger for his refusal to bring the SDI research program into arms control talks in Geneva. He added that if Weinberger sticks to his stance, it will mean the end of arms control.

LI XIANNIAN CONTINUES ASIA-AFRICA TOUR

Arrives in Madagascar

OW250739 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1603 GMT 24 Mar 86

[By reporters Zhu Ronggen and Xu Zhi]

[Text] Tananarive, 24 Mar (XINHUA) -- PRC President Li Xiannian and his wife Lin Jiamei arrived today by special plane from Somalia in Tananarive, the capital of Madagascar, to begin a 4-day state visit to this beautiful island nation in the southwestern part of the Indian Ocean.

President Li's current visit to Madagascar is made on the 14th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between China and Madagascar. It is also the first visit by a Chinese president to the world's fourth largest island nation. Madagascar's president, Ratsiraka, visited China last October. The fact that the heads of the two nations have met again in less than half a year fully indicates the smooth development of the traditional friendship between China and Madagascar, which are both Third World countries.

Today Ivato International Airport was under a blue sky with white clouds, and the weather was cool and comfortable. The national flags of China and Madagascar fluttered on airport buildings. The special plane slowly landed at 1310 local time. When President Li and his wife walked down the ramp, President and Mrs Ratsiraka stepped forward to warmly shake hands with them. President Ratsiraka said in Chinese: "How are you?" then, two children in white dresses presented bouquets to President and Mrs Li.

President Li and President Ratsiraka then mounted the welcoming dais, and the national anthems of the two countries were played. A 21-gun salute was fired.

President Li inspected the honor guard in the company of President Ratsiraka. Holding garlands and the national flags of China and Madagascar, hundreds of well-wishers danced to welcome the guests and changed in Chinese: "Long live China!" "Long live the friendship between China and Madagascar!" More than 50 Overseas Chinese in Madagascar waved a streamer bearing the slogan "Overseas Chinese in Madagascar Warmly Welcome Visiitng President and Mrs Li." President Li waved to them again and again in acknowledgment.

President Li issued a written statement at the airport. In the statement he said: "Both China and Madagascar are developing countries, and both are facing the historical task of developing the economy and improving the people's living standards. They should make use of each other's experience, learn from each other's strong points to make up for their own deficiencies, supply each other's needs, and cooperate closely." He expressed the belief that with the joint efforts of the two countries, their realtions of friendship and cooperation are bound to develop further and become increasingly consolidated.

Others greeting President Li at the airport were Andrianarahinjaka, president of the Malagasy National People's Assembly; Rakotoarijaona, prime minister; (Lactoalison), chairman of the government's Military Development Commission; (Lobeir), president of the Supreme Court; as well as members of the Supreme Revolutionary Committee, ministers of the government, generals of the armed forces, public figures, representatives of masses from various circles, and foreign diplomatic envoys in Madagascar, totaling nearly 1,000.

Chinese Ambassador to Madagascar Yang Guirong, officials of the Chinese Embassy, and representatives of Chinese experts working in Madagascar were among those greeting President Li at the airport.

During a short rest in the Airport VIP room, President Li said to President Ratsiraka: "I am very grateful to have received such a warm welcome." President Ratsiraka said: "You must have had a tiring journey. Please take a good rest here."

Accompanied by President Ratsiraka, President Li drove to the (Mahazualiv) palace where he was to stay during the visit.

State Councillor Chen Muhua, Vice Foreign Minister Qi Huaiyuan, Vice Minister of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Lu Xuejian, and Assistant Foreign Minister Tang Longbin, who are in President Li's entourage for the visit, arrived on the same plane.

Presidents Hold Talks

[Text] Tananarive, March 25 (XINHUA) -- Chinese President Li Xiannian and Malagasy President Didier Ratsiraka hold talks at the state house here this morning on the further strengthening of the friendly relations between the two countries. This is the two leaders' second encounter in less than half a year since last October when Ratsiraka visited Beijing.

Li, who arrived here yesterday afternoon on a state visit, expressed, on behalf of the Chinese Government and people, deep sympathy with the cyclone-affected Malagasy people and announced to donate 2,000 tons of cement to help alleviate the disaster. President Ratsiraka, gratified with Li's return visit in such a short time, told his guest that Li's visit, will strengthen economic and technological cooperation in new fields and forms so as to further the existing friendship between the two countries. Li said that his visit will help deepen mutual understanding and friendship between China and Madagascar. Li also highly appreciated the achievements made by the Malagasy Government in its socio-economic development and just stand regarding international affairs. The two leaders also exchanged views on the latest developments of the international situation and issues of mutual concern.

Li is the first Chinese head of state to visit this Indian Ocean country, the last leg of Li's five-nation Asian and African tour which has already taken him to Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Egypt and Somalia.

Malagasy President Hosts Banquet

OW051410 Beijing XINHUA in English 1349 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Tananarive, March 25 (XINHUA) -- President Didier Ratsiraka of Madagascar today highly appreciated the friendly relations and cooperation between Madagascar and China and expressed his hope to further strengthen the ties in the spirit of South-South cooperation. In his welcome speech at the banquet he hosted for visiting Chinese President Li Xiannian at the state house this afternoon, the Malagasy president said that Li's visit, made in less than half a year since his visit to Beijing last October, clearly shows that the friendly and trustworthy ties embody the principle of mutual respect. He told his guest that he was gratified with Li's decision to extend his marathon Afro-Asian tour to Madagascar as a friendly gesture to a far-off island country.

Recalling the development of the friendly relations since the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries in 1972, Ratsiraka described the bonds as "very good" and the friendship as "solid and sincere".

On the prospects of the further Madagascar-China ties, the Malagasy president noted that Li's visit has "constituted an important stage" in the development of the relations. "Our two countries both belong to the Third World", and therefore they may discuss the ways and means to accelerate South-South cooperation so as to further bring their capacities into full play in their respective national development, he said.

In his reply, Li Xiannian said the friendly relations and cooperation between China and Madagascar have made new progress in the past few years and they have made new explorations in developing economic and technological cooperation on the basis of equality and mutual benefits. Touching on the situation in South Africa, the Chinese president said that a long-standing upheaval and tension have appeared owing to the intervention of the superpowers and the perverse acts of the South African authorities. It has constituted one of the "hot-spots" endangering international peace and security. Li denounced Pretoria for stubbornly insisting on the system of apartheid, obstructing the independence of Namibia and wantonly sabotaging the sovereignty and stability of its neighbors. "Such action of resisting historical trend has aroused strong condemnation and opposition from international community," he pointed out. The Chinese president expressed his firm support to the South African people in their just struggle against racial oppression and for their rights to equality. Referring to Africa's poverty and backwardness left by history, he said as a developing country, China fully understands and firmly supports the efforts of the African countries to vigorously develop national economy and to improve the living standards of the people.

On Sino-Madagascar relations, Li Xiannian said that "through the common efforts of both parties, the friendly cooperation between China and Madagascar in various fields will surely be developed to a new level and the traditional friendship between the two countries will also be promoted with each passing day."

The banquet was attended by top Malagasy officials and members of Li's entourage among others. President Li, who is the first Chinese head of state to visit this island country, arrived here yesterday for a four-day state visit. Madagascar is the last leg of his five-nation Asian and African tour, which has already taken him to Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Egypt and Somalia.

PRC MAY EXAMINE SHIPS PASSING THROUGH SUEZ CANAL

OW211224 Beijing XINHUA in English 1206 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] Cairo, March 21 (XINHUA) -- The Suez Canal Authority (S.C.A.) of Egypt has recently decided to approve 'the Register of Shipping of the People's Republic of China' as an international recognized classification society and include it into rules of navigation of the S.C.A. According to this decision, 'the Register of Shipping of the People's Republic of China' will be allowed to provide technical examination service for the Chinese and foreign ships (except Egyptian vessels) wishing to transit the Suez Canal.

More than 20,000 vessels transit the canal every year. Until this new decision, there are only eight foreign shipping register organizations have been approved as the recognized classification societies by the S.C.A., which have been authorized to provide technical examination service for the foreign ships passing through the canal. They are Lloyds Register of Shipping of Britain, Bureau Veritas Francais (French Bureau of Shipping), American Bureau of Shipping, the Italian Register of Shipping, the German Lloyd, the Norwegian Lloyd, U.S.S.R. Register and the Nippon Kaiji Kyokai (the Japanese Register of Shipping).

Session Detailed

[Excerpts] Beijing, 25 Mar (XINHUA) -- The Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC will open at the Great Hall of the People this afternoon. According to the agenda of the session, Zhao Ziyang, premier of the State Council, will report to the session this afternoon about questions on elaborating the Seventh 5-Year Plan for National Economic and Social Development.

The Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC has received the attention of people at home and abroad because it will discuss the Seventh 5-Year Plan and other important items on its agenda. Thirty-one delegations and more than 2,800 deputies that have checked in are devoting all their energies to the work of the session. In the quarters housing delegations from various parts of the country, deputies have in the past few days talked freely about the achievements made during the Sixth 5-Year Plan. They have also expressed their determination to fulfill the tasks set for the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. The atmosphere prevailing among them is very warm.

Leaders of the CPC Central Committee, responsible persons of the CPPCC National Committee, principal responsible persons of various democratic parties, representatives of democratic personages without party affiliation, and members of the Sixth CPPCC National Committee attending its fourth session will attend the opening ceremony of the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC by invitation.

NPC SPOKESMAN DENIES DIFFERENCES OVER BASIC POLICY

HK241524 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1429 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, 24 Mar (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- "Is it true that the different opinions held by NPC deputies concern Deng Xiaoping's long-term policy?" an AP reporter asked Zeng Tao, deputy secretary general of the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC, here this afternoon.

Zeng Tao unambiguously answered: So far we have not found any different opinions on our fundamental policy. He then added: As a retired reporter, I would like to point out to our friends that foreign friends and reporters have always attributed China's policies to Deng Xiaoping and others. Personally, I do not quite approve this way of putting it.

"Do the deputies hold different opinions on the problem of the special economic zones?"

Zeng Tao said: That was unanimously decided on by the NPC Standing Committee.

Asked by a WASHINGTON POST female reporter to comment on the different opinions existing among NPC deputies, Zeng Tao described the existence of different opinions on various issues as "very normal." According to Zeng, China's practice is that people air their views in the course of deliberations and, through consultations, reach a common consensus. He referred to this as "China's socialist democratic practice." According to Zeng, in voting, there are also vetoes and abstentions and this is also very normal.

Addresses Party Work Style

HK250620 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1511 GMT 24 Mar 86

["Zeng Tao Answers Questions on Party Work Style Raised by Reporters" -- ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE headline]

[Text] Beijing, 24 Mar (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE)) -- Zeng Tao, deputy secretary general of the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC, said this afternoon: China's Constitution stipulates that all citizens are equal before the law and that nobody has privileges to transcend the Constitution and the law. Most children of the Chinese senior cadres are good but there are also some who have violated the law and discipline. Those who violate the law and discipline, no matter who they are, will be dealt with according to party discipline and state law.

Zeng Tao made this remark at a press conference attended by Chinese and foreign reporters at the Great Hall of the People in reply to a question raised by an American reporter on how to deal with the children or relatives of senior cadres who had committed crimes.

A female foreign reporter asked: Since Zhou Erfu has made mistakes, why has his status as a CCPCC member been preserved? Zeng Tao said: "This is our policy. According to this policy, we do not write off or negate everything after a person makes mistakes. This is a correct policy."

When a REUTER reporter asked how many delegates have been deprived of their qualifications as a result of economic crimes, Zeng Tao said that the qualifications of five delegates had been canceled by the original electing units but for different reasons. For example, Zhang Hayang from Guangdong cannot perform his duties as a delegate because he has moved abroad; Lei Yu from Guangdong has voluntarily proposed that it would be inadvisable for him to be a delegate.

"How do you distinguish between economic crimes and violations of party discipline, then? For example, Lei Yu has been disciplined within the party while some of his subordinates have committed economic crimes," asked an ABC reporter.

Zeng Tao said: The key lies in the results of the investigation. If I am not mistaken, Lei Yu has made mistakes, but he has not been involved in economic crimes.

When a Hong Kong reporter asked whether the NPC delegates from Hong Kong and Macao will be separated from Guangdong and whether the number of the delegates will be increased, Zeng Tao explained the system for electing NPC delegates, that is the election of the delegates to the Sixth NPC was conducted according to the system of election approved by the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC. That is to say, the methods for electing delegates to the Seventh NPC will be approved by the Fifth Session of the Sixth NPC to be held next year.

Asked About Peng Zhen

HK241258 Hong Kong AFP in English 1238 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, March 24 (AFP) -- The spokesman for China's National People's Congress Monday refused to confirm on deny reports that family members of congress chariman Peng Zhen were under investigation for corruption. Mr. Zeng spoke with foreign reporters on the eve of the convening of the National People's Congress (NPC), which was to begin a 17-day session here Tuesday presided over by Mr. Peng.

"According to the Constitution all citizens are equal before the law. No person has the privilege of thinking himself not subject to the Constitution or laws," Zeng Tao told foreign reporters. "The great majority of the children of our high officials are law abiding. Of course a small portion have broken the law. Those who have broken the law, no matter who they are will be dealt with according to party discipline," he said.

Asked if his comments could be taken as a denial or confirmation of reports that members of the family of Mr. Peng, 82, were under investigation, Mr. Zeng said: "Please do not confuse your meaning with what I have said."

BEIJING TV CARRIES LIVE RELAY OF NPC OPENING

OW251400 [Editorial Report] Beijing Television Service in Mandarin at 0645 GMT on 25 March begins carrying a live relay from the Great Hall of the People in Beijing on the opening of the Fourth Session of the Sixth National People's Congress.

The opening shot shows the inside of the hall. The camera pans across the fully packed meeting hall and then stops at a large rostrum, showing attendees arriving and taking their seats. At 0658 GMT, the camera shows a medium shot of Hu Yaobang walking to his seat on the rostrum.

The announcer says that sitting on the front rows on the rostrum are executive chairmen of the presidium "Peng Zhen, Chen Pixian, Wei Guoqing, Geng Biao, Hu Juewen, Peng Chong, Wang Renzhong, Zhu Xuefan, Ngapoi Ngawang Jigme, Bainqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyaincain, Seypidin Aizezi, Zhou Gucheng, Yan Jici, Rong Yiren, Ye Fei, Liao Hansheng, Huang Hua, and Wang Hanbin."

He adds that central leading comrades attending the meeting on invitation are "Hu Yaobang, Zhao Ziyang, Deng Yingchao, Ulanhu, Wan Li, Xi Zhongxun, Qiao Shi, Li Peng, Yang Shangkun, Yang Dezhi, Wu Xueqian, Yu Qiuli, Hu Qiaomu, Hu Qili, Yao Yilin, Ni Zhifu, Qin Jiwei, Deng Liqun, Hao Jianxiu, Wang Zhaoguo, and Wang Zhen."

According to the announcer, foreign diplomatic envoys and journalists are present at today's meeting as observers. At 0702 GMT, the camera shows a medium shot of Peng Zhen sitting in his seat. Peng Zhen says that 2,974 deputies should be present, adding that there is a quorum as 2,729 of them are actually present. He then declares the session open, and asks the audience to follow him in singing the national anthem. At 0704 GMT, Peng Zhen invites Premier Zhao Ziyang to deliver a report on the draft of the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

The camera shows Zhao walking from several rows back on the rostrum to a seat next to Peng Zhen, sitting down, and beginning his report, while the camera pans slowly across the rostrum and the rest of the hall, and then shows a medium shot of Hu Yaobang listening attentively to the report. Zhao's report, lasting 2 hours and 10 minutes, deals not only with China's economic situation and plan, but also with its domestic and foreign affairs. While Zhao speaks, the camera keeps alternating between medium shots of Zhao and panning shots and long shots of the rostrum and the rest of the hall.

As soon as Zhao finishes his report at 0914 GMT, the camera shows a pan shot of the applauding audience. An announcement is heard, in a voice that sounds similar to that of Peng Zhen, saying that today's meeting has ended. At 0915 GMT the live relay ends.

ZHAO ZIYANG REPORTS ON SEVENTH 5-YEAR PLAN

Reviews 5-Year Achievements

OW250742 Beijing XINHUA in English 0726 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 25 (XINHUA) -- China's economic growth rate over the past five years was higher than that of most countries in the corresponding period, Premier Zhao Ziyang said here today. Addressing the annual session of the National People's Congress, Zhao said that the total industrial and agricultural output value increased at an average annual rate of 11 percent during the Sixth Five-Year Plan period (1981-1985), and the gross national product rose at a rate of 10 percent. With the total output value increasing 8.1 percent each year, China's agricultural production grew faster than in many countries in the world, and faster than any period since the founding of the People's Republic in 1949.

Premier Zhao firstly reviewed the implementation of the Sixth Five-Year Plan in his report on the Seventh Five-Year Plan at the NPC session, which opened here today. He said China's achievements in the past five years have attracted world attention. Most of the tasks and targets in the Sixth Five-Year Plan for industry and agriculture, capital construction and social development have been fulfilled or overfulfilled. Thanks to the efforts over the past five years, Zhao said, the output of a number of major products vital to the national economy and the people's everyday life has greatly increased. Though the average per capita output of these products remains relatively low, their total output is quite high by world standards, attaining correspondingly higher ranking in the world.

For example, the annual grain output averaged 370.62 million tons during the Sixth Five-Year Plan period, 65.32 million tons more than that in the previous five years. In 1985, China produced 850 million tons of coal, 125 million tons of crude oil, 407.3 billion kwh of electricity and 46.66 million tons of steel. China's economy has grown much stronger, Zhao said. While completing a number of large and medium-sized projects, the number of machine-building and electronic products which are up to fairly advanced world standards has multiplied over the past give years as a result of technological transformation. In the past five years the national revenue has reversed its downward trend, and in the last three years it has shown steady and marked growth. The total revenue reached 182.9 billion yuan, balancing revenue and expenditure. The volume of import and export during the Sixth Five-Year Plan totalled 230 billion U.S. dollars, double that of the fifth plan period. China has used 10.3 billion U.S. dollars of foreign loans and attracted 5.3 billion U.S. dollars of direct foreign investment.

Over the past five years, the premier said, the living standard of the people has improved more markedly than any other period since the founding of the People's Republic. After deducting price hikes, the annual per capita net income of rural residents went up by 13.7 percent and that of urban residents went up by 13.7 percent and that of urban workers and other employees and their families by 6.9 percent. More than 35 million people have been employed in the city and towns over the past five years. Bank savings of both urban and rural residents jumped to 162.3 billion yuan by the end of 1985, four times the figure for 1980. During the period, Zhao said, China was finally able to solve some economic problems with which it had been struggling for so long. They include:

-- China became self-sufficient in grain and more than self-sufficient in cotton:

-- Turning shortage of consumer goods at both urban and rural market into adequate supply, China was able to do away with ration coupons for all commodities except grain and edible oil:

-- Agriculture, light industry and heavy industry, and accumulation and consumption, which had been seriously out of proportion for a long time, are now in better balance. This ensures China's sound and sustained economic development.

Views Strategic Economic Changes

OW250758 Beijing XINHUA in English 0739 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 25 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang today referred to stressing economic and social results, reforming the stereotyped economic structure and initiating open economy as marking the strategic changes of historic significance in China's economic development over the past five years. Reviewing the implementation of the Sixth Five-Year Plan (1981-1985) in his report at the opening session of the Sixth National People's Congress, he said these strategic changes constitute the basic cause of the achievements in that period. China has shifted from a lopsided pursuit of increasing output and output value of industry, especially heavy industry, to emphasis on the balanced development of agriculture, light industry and heavy industry, and all-round economic, scientific, technological, educational, cultural and social development, with focus on the improving of economic returns, he said.

The country, he went on, has tried its best to put an end to the high accumulation rate, high growth rate, low efficiency and slow improvement of living standards, and blazed a new path suited to China's realities and leading to a steady growth rate, better economic results and more substantial benefits for the people. Among the different sectors of the national economy, China attached strategic importance to agriculture, sped up development of consumer goods industry, and rationally adjusted the orientation of heavy industry. The country also brought the construction of productive and non-productive projects roughly into balance and promoted rapid expansion of tertiary industry.

The Chinese premier said the petrified economic structure characterized by excessive and rigid control has been replaced by a vigorous new one appropriate to the planned development of a commodity economy on the basis of public ownership. A major breakthrough was first effected in the rural areas, greatly emancipating the productive forces in the countryside and promoting the rural economy to embark on specialization, commercialization and modernization, he added. The urban reform has been effected in the areas of planning, finance, taxation, pricing, banking, commerce, labor and wages. As a result, the urban economy has thriven as never before.

As for the economic relations with other countries, a closed and semi-closed economy has given way to an open economy characterized by positive use of international exchange, according to Premier Zhao. China has corrected the mistake of putting self-reliance against the opening to the outside world and achieved notable results in using both domestic and foreign resources, exploiting both domestic and foreign markets and mastering the skills of both organizing domestic construction and promoting economic relations with other countries.

The three changes, Zhao Ziyang stressed, show that China has found the correct way to build socialism with Chinese characteristics.

He also mentioned shortcomings and mistakes in economic work such as failing to exercise effective control over the sharp increase in total social demand, not taking effective measures and proper supervision to improve economic results, product quality in particular, and sometimes giving inadequate attention to cultural and ideological progress. He singled out the destabilizing factors arising from pursuit of an excessively high growth rate in the last quarter of 1984. Thanks to the efforts in the past year, some problems have been solved while others are being solved, he said.

Proposes New 5-Year Plan

[Text] Beijing, March 25 (XINHUA) -- The State Council today put forward a draft Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-1990) aimed at pushing on systematic reforms, further strengthening China's economic power and raising the living standard of its one billion people. The plan came out at a time when China's strategy of economic development and its economic structure are changing from an old model to a new one.

Premier Zhao Ziyang today delivered a 26,000-word report on the draft plan at the annual session of China's legislative body, the National People's Congress. China will strive to lay most of the groundwork for a new type of socialist economic structure with Chinese characteristics for the next five years or more, Zhao said. The draft plan provides that the gross value of the country's industrial and agricultural output will increase by 38 percent in five years -- reaching 1,677 billion yuan in 1990 -- with an annual growth rate of 6.7 percent. The gross national product will increase by 44 percent -- reaching 1,117 billion yuan in 1900 -- with an annual growth rate of 7.5 percent.

In setting the economic growth in the draft plan, Zhao said, we were optimistic but not over-ambitious, adding that the rate is likely to be exceeded. Fixing an appropriate rate for economic growth is aimed at promoting the proportionate and efficient advance of the national economy, he explained.

Nine-year compulsory education will be gradually introduced during the five-year period, the Chinese premier noted. About five million specialized personnel will be trained by institutes of higher learning, twice the number trained in the previous five years.

The consumption level of urban and rural residents will rise by 27 percent in the 1986-1990 period. The draft plan sets the average annual growth rate for the net income of peasants throughout the country at seven percent, and the growth rate for the wages of workers and staff members at four percent.

A crucial issue for the Seventh Five-Year Plan, the premier said, is to set an appropriate scale of investment, readjust the investment pattern in a rational way and raise economic returns on investment. The draft plan sets the total investment in the fixed assets of state-owned enterprises in the next five years at 896 billion yuan, a rise of nearly 70 percent over the previous five-year plan.

There will be a marked increase in the productive capacity of the energy industry and the raw and semi-finished materials industries as well as the capacity of transport and telecommunications with the renovation, expansion and construction of a number of key facilities and the technological transformation of a number of key enterprises. Investment will be increased in agriculture, science and education.

Zhao said that China will expand economic exchanges and trade with other countries, the use of foreign capital and the import of advanced technology in the next five years. The total volume of import and export in 1990 will show an increase of 40 percent over the 1985 figure.

Implementation of the new five-year plan will enable China's economy to function within a new framework, Zhao said. Highlights of the reforms during the period include:

-- Turn a great majority of enterprises by the end of the period into relatively independent economic entities, into socialist commodity manufactures and dealers having full authority for managment and full responsibility for their own profits and losses.

-- Promote lateral economic ties among enterprises and gradually establish groups of enterprises in different forms and at various levels to rationalize the development of resources, the use of funds and technology and the disposition of productive forces.

-- Develop a socialist commodity market, continue to reduce the varieties and quantities of products under unified state allocation and distribution.

-- Develop inter-regional and inter-departmental commodity circulation and establish new commercial forms combining agriculture, industry and commerce, or agriculture and commerce, or industry and commerce, or commerce in different areas and trades.

-- Expand the markets for consumer goods and for means of production and gradually establish a system in which the state sets the prices of a few vital commodities and labor services, while leaving the rest to a pricing system under state guidance and to market regulation.

-- Establish a new system by which the state will gradually change from direct to indirect control in its management of enterprises.

The premier said that the goal of the reform is to build a socialist economic structure with Chinese characteristics that is unlike the ossified or semi-ossified model of the past and fundamentally different from the capitalist models. He urged all government personnel to improve their methods and style of work and get rid of bureaucratism. They should renounce empty talk in favor of practical work and strive to be more efficient. They whould observe discipline and the law, be honest and devoted to their official duties, safeguard the interests of the state and society at large, and serve the people wholeheartedly, the premier said.

In the last part of his report, Zhao Ziyang dealt with China's independent foreign policy of peace. He summarized the main outline and basic principles of the policy into 10 aspects.

Considers Economic Reform

OW250856 Beijing XINHUA in English 0840 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 25 (XINHUA) -- A sound foundation will be laid for a dynamic socialist economy with Chinese characteristics in the next five years or more. This is the goal Premier Zhao Ziyang set for China's economic structural reform during the Seventh Five-Year Plan period beginning this year.

All localities, departments and enterprises should continue to give priority to economic structural reform, said Zhao in his report to the National People's Congress annual session today.

To attain the economic goals set for the next five years, he said, it is imperative to carry on the intensive and systematic restructuring of the economy, to further straighten out various economic relations and to bring into full play the enthusiasm and creativeness of all enterprises and workers.

According to Zhao, the reform in the next five years will center on three aspects -- the invigoration of enterprises, the development of a socialist commodity market and the establishment of a new socialist overall economic management system. Through the reform, the premier said, enterprises will be endowed with more decision-making power and also more responsibility for using the power properly. Therefore, effective measures should be adopted to help enterprises cultivate the capacity to accumulate funds, conduct technical transformation and develop production by themselves while helping them raise their ability of self-control. By the end of the Seventh Five-Year Plan period, he said, a great majority of the enterprises should be entirely responsible for their own profits and losses.

The Chinese premier called for promotion of lateral economic ties among enterprises on the basis of voluntary participation, mutual benefit and simultaneous development. He said that groups of enterprises should be gradually established at various levels, and the state should draw up policies and enact legislation to ensure the sound development of the association among enterprises.

The purpose of establishing and improving a socialist commodity market system, Zhao said, is to provide an external economic environment that will both encourage enterprises to invigorate themselves and put pressure on them to do so. The key to the improvement of the market system lies in the reform of the pricing system, the premier stressed. During the next five years, emphasis should be placed on a systematic adjustment of the unreasonably low prices of energy, raw and semi-finished materials and other means of production so as to close the gap between planned prices and market prices.

Speaking of the overall management system, Zhao said the direct control by the state over enterprises will be gradually changed into an indirect type. To control and regulate the forthcoming freer economic operations of enterprises, the government will gradually improve its economic and legal measures and put them in force together with necessary administrative means. To this end, he said, special efforts should be made to further reform the planning system and reduce the proportion of mandatory planning and to extend the scope of guidance planning and market regulation.

Improvements should also be made to the role of banks in overall economic control, the fiscal and taxation system, the economic information and policy advisory system, economic economic laws and decrees, economic adjudication, and institutions of economic inspection and supervision. He said that since the all-round structural reform of the econmy economy is an extremely difficult task and its process is restricted by China's specific economic and social conditions, it will be impossible to fully realize all the aspects of reform within the next five years. What we hope to achieve during these five years, he said, is to develop a general framework for a new economic system, and to get our economy moving within this framework.

Calls for Expanded Exports

OW250908 Beijing XINHUA in English 0852 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 25 (XINHUA) -- China will boost its foreign trade and expand the scale of use of foreign funds and technology in the next five years, Premier Zhao Ziyang said here today. The country will also try to expand tourism, international air and marine transport and insurance business, and contract for more construction projects and labor services abroad, he said in a report on the country's Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-90) to the Fourth Session of the Sixth National People's Congress (NPC). He told the NPC deputies that greatly expanding economic, trade and technological exchanges with other countries with emphasis on enhancing the country's export capacity is one of the five principles guiding China's economic construction for the next five years.

According to the Seventh Five-Year Plan submitted to the congress for deliberation, the country's imports and exports will be worth 83 billion U.S. dollars in 1990, a 40 percent rise over 1985. Of this, exports will rise 47 percent to reach 38 billion U.S. dollars, and imports, 35 percent to 45 billion U.S. dollars.

The shortage of foreign exchange will remain a prominent problem for a long time to come, Premier Zhao said, noting that increasing exports is therefore crucial to expanding economic, trade and technological exchanges with other countries. He said: We must place improving the quality of export products above all and gradually build a network of sales promotion and services abroad, so as to ensure quality, good services and credibility. He also stressed the importance of changing the mix of export commodities, which means a shift from primary products to manufactured ones and from roughly processed products to finely processed ones. In the meantime, we must try to improve the quality of textiles and light industrial goods for export, and increase exports of new foodstuffs and machinery and electrical products, Zhao said.

He called for the building of bases for producing export commodities and of export-oriented factories in the coastal areas and other areas where conditions permit. He said that China's four special economic zones and 14 coastal cities and three areas open to the rest of the world should play a bigger role in boosting exports.

Moreoever, he urged Chinese foreign trade departments to increase trade ties with all other countries. We should also change the mix of imports, with emphasis on computer software, advanced technology and key equipment, the premier observed, adding that it is imperative to strictly limit imports of general processing equipment, consumer durables and assembly lines that will use imported parts and accessories, and avoid duplication of imports. The premier said: We must strive to expand production of import substitutes and increase the ratio of goods manufactured at home. All practices that cause waste of state foreign exchange must be resolutely corrected, he stressed.

He told the deputies that the use of foreign funds will focus on energy and raw material industries, transport and communications, particularly on the power and petroleum industries, and harbor construction. In addition, part of foreign money will be used to upgrade the machine-building and electronics industries, and boost production of export products.

The current NPC session is expected to pass the law on enterprises financed by foreign firms after deliberation and examination. The premier said that it is imperative to regulate foreign trade through effective use of exchange rates, customs duties, taxes, export credits and other economic measures. These should be supplemented by administrative measures, such as improving the import and export licence system, he added.

Forecasts Higher Living Standards

OW250918 Beijing XINHUA in English 0904 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 25 (XINHUA) — Premier Zhao Ziyang said here today that Chinese peasants' net income will rise seven percent and workers' wages around four percent annually during the 1986-90 period. With higher employment, the average annual growth rate in the total income of urban residents wil exceed this figure, he told the current session of the Sixth National People's Congress (NPC). The real average per-capita consumption standard of the entire population will rise to 517 yuan in 1990 from 404 yuan in 1985, according to the draft Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-90) submitted by the State Council to the congress annual session. This means an annual growth rate of five percent during the five-year period. The average standard of every urban resident will increase at an annual rate of 4.2 percent -- from 736 yuan to 903 yuan, and each rural resident, 5.1 percent -- from 325 yuan to 416 yuan.

Premier Zhao said: Ours is a socialist country. So we must always attach great importance to improving people's material and cultural well-being. However, we should remember that the improvement of living standards must be based on the actual conditions of our country and on the growth of production, he told the NPC deputies. As far as distribution is concerned, the premier said, we should continue to carry out the policy of encouraging some people to become prosperous sooner than others and strive to do away the practice of equalitarian distribution. At the same time, he said, efforts must be made to avoid excessive gaps in income between enterprises and among people in order to ensure social stability and unity, and better implement the principle of distribution according to work. He stressed that the tendency of enterprises to vie with each other in issuing unwarranted allowances in cash or kind must be firmly checked and funds for consumption strictly controlled to prevent them from rising sharply. As China has a huge population, he said, the state should guide people in moving toward rational consumption patterns. For example, supplies of household electrical appliances can only be increased appropriately, and production and imports of air-conditioners and electric heaters should be limited.

Urges Commodity Economy

OW251002 Beijing XINHUA in English 0930 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 25 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said here today that China's economic structural reform should be adapted to the needs of a developing socialist commodity economy. A fully-developed commodity economy is an indispensable stage of a society's economic development, said Premier Zhao in his report on the country's Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-1990) delivered at the annual session of the National People's Congress, China's legislative body.

In the historical period of socialism, and especially in an underdeveloped socialist country like China, he said, it is necessary to develop a commodity economy.

The concept of commodity economy is one of the essential points Zhao explained, of which he said people must have a full understanding. He said the kind of commodity economy China wants to develop is, on the whole, a socialist commodity economy based on public ownership, an economy in which distribution is made according to one's work and which is planned and under control. To build such an economy, he said, China should reform its previous petrified economic structure, which was characterized by too rigid control over too many things. In fact, Zhao said, China's stereotyped and rigid economic structure was changed into a vigorous new one appropriate to the planned development of a commodity economy on the basis of public ownership during the Sixth Five-Year Plan period from 1981 to 1985.

Premier Zhao also called for an intensive theoretical study of the inherent laws of socialist commodity economy and for exploration of various approaches for the development of that economy. We have to resolutely transform all those ideas, rules and regulations that conflict with the development of a commodity economy, he said. In the process of building such an economy, he said, China should learn from other countries, including the developed capitalist countries, by drawing on their advanced methods of economic management, which reflect the laws governing large-scale, socialized production. In doing so, he said, we need to discard all the dross, while assimilating the useful essence.

Calls For International Peace

[Text] Beijing, March 25 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang today urged the two superpowers to take effective steps to maintain peace instead of paying lip service. Zhao called the resumption of dialogue and negotiations on disarmament between the United States and the Soviet Union a welcome development, adding, however, that they should not only make rehetoric about peace and disaramament, but take concrete actions. In his report to the National People's Congress session which opened here today, the Chinese premier described the present international situation as being turbulent and disturbing. And the arms race and regional rivalry between the two superpowers are major threats to world peace and the security of all countries, he observed. Both of them should give up their pursuit of military supremacy and cease their aggression and intervention against other countries, Zhao pointed out.

He said that China is concerned about the grim situation in the Asian-Pacific region and particularly the hot spots of Kampuchea and Afghanistan, which, he said, have a direct bearing on China's own security. China has consistently held that foreign forces should withdraw from Kampuchea and Afghanistan completely and that the people in those countries should solve their own problems free from outside interference.

He stated that China continues to seek the steady development of Sino-U.S. relations on the basis of strict adherence to the principles established in the joint communiques between China and the United States, and a true improvement in Sino-Soviet relations through the removal of the three obstacles by concrete actions.

Because of the confrontation and rivalry between the superpowers, he noted, the danger of a new world war still exists, and we must maintain necessary vigilance against this danger.

The people of the entire world desire peace ardently, he added. The overwhelming majority of Third-World countries including China and the broadly-based Non-Aligned Movement constitute a major force for peace. The European countries, Japan and other developed countries in Oceania are also in favor of peace and opposed to war. He said he was confident that through the joint efforts of the people and peace forces, world peace can be maintained. Though the road ahead is tortuous, the future of the world is full of promise, he added.

Summarizes Foreign Policy

OW251014 Beijing XINHUA in English 0945 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 25 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang today summarised China's foreign policy into ten basic principles. Addressing the fourth session of the Sixth National People's Congress which opened here today, he said that China as adjusted, enriched and improved its foreign policy in response to changes in the world situation. In his report on China's Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-1990), the Chinese premier listed the following ten principles of China's foreign policy:

1. Proceeding as it does from the fundamental long-term interests of its own people and the people of the whole world, China takes as the basic objective of its foreign policy to oppose hegemonism, maintain world peace, develop friendly co-operation with other countries and promote common economic prosperity.

2. China holds that all countries, big or small, rich or poor, strong or weak, should be treated as equals. It is firmly opposed to the big bullying the small, the rich oppressing the poor and the strong lording it over the weak. The affairs of a country should be managed by its own people, and the affairs of the world should be managed by all countries in consultation, and not by one or two superpowers having the final say. China will never seek hegemony and it resolutely opposes hegemonism, no matter who practises it and no matter what form it takes.

3. At all times and under all circumstances China will act independently, determining its own attitudes and policies on all world issues on themerits of each case. The criterion by which China judges whether an act is right or wrong is whether it helps to maintain world peace, develop friendly co-operation among nations and promote world prosperity.

4. China will never attach itself to any superpower, or enter into alliance or strategic relations with either of them. China continues to seek the steady development of Sino-U.S. relations on the basis of strict adherence to the principles established in the joint communiques between China and the United States, and a true improvement in Sino-Soviet relations through the removal of the three obstacles by concrete actions.

5. China stands by the five principles of mutual respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity, mutual non-aggression, non-interference in each other's internal affairs, equality and mutual benefit, and peaceful coexistence. On the basis of these five principles, China strives to establish, resume or expand normal relations with all countries in the world and to live in harmony and engage in friendly co-operation with them. China does not determine its closeness with or estrangement from other countries on the basis of their social systems and ideologies.

China firmly opposes any country's using identity or difference of social system and ideology as an excuse to occupy the territory of others and to interfere in their internal affairs. China firmly opposes terrorist activities of all descriptions and believes that this problem can only be solved once for all by eliminating the social and political root causes of terrorism.

6. China belongs to the Third World. A basic principle of its foreign policy is to strengthen its solidarity and co-operation with the Third World. China steadfastly opposes imperialism, colonialism and racism and supports the Third World countries in their just struggle to achieve and safeguard national independence. It supports them in their efforts to develop their national economies, improve North-South relations and further South-South co-operation. China earnestly hopes that the Third World countries will strengthen their unity and settle their disputes peacefully through friendly consultations, so as to prevent the interference of outside forces.

7. China opposes the arms race and its extension to outer space. At the time of its first nuclear test, China proposed the complete prohibition and thorough destruction of nuclear weapons and declared that at no time and under no circumstances would China be the first to use such weapons. Today, it is of capital importance that the two superpowers should take the lead by drastically cutting back their nuclear arsenals, thus creating favorable conditions for nuclear disarmament by all nuclear countries. China is also in favor of the complete prohibition and through destruction of chemical weapons, and the substantial reduction of conventional arms along with nuclear disarmament.

8. China persists in a long-term policy of opening to the outside world and will continue to expand its economic, trade and technological contacts and co-operation with other countries on the basis of equality and mutual benefit. China pursues a policy of opening to all countries, capitalist or socialist, developed or developing.

9. In keeping with the purposes and principles set forth in the United Nations Charter, China supports the work undertaken by the United Nations in the spirit of the charter and participates in the activities for world peace and development sponsored by the organization and its specialized agencies. China has joined a wide range of international organizations, actively engages in multilateral diplomacy and strives to promote international co-operation in all fields.

10. China attaches great importance to contacts among people of different countries. To further mutual understanding and friendship among the people of the world. The Chinese Government encourages mass organizations, non-governmental associations and people from all walks of life to have contacts with those of other countries and supports co-operation between them in the economic, cultural, educational, scientific and technological fields and in matters relating to the press, public health and sports.

RENMIN RIBAO GREETS FOURTH SESSION OF SIXTH NPC

OW242148 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1526 GMT 24 Mar 86

[RENMIN RIBAO 25 March editorial: "Unfold Another Great Plan With Great Pride and Enthusiasm"]

[Text] Beijing, 24 Mar (XINHUA) -- The Fourth Session of the Sixth National People's Congress will open in Beijing today.

Its main agenda is to hear and deliberate on Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the draft Seventh 5-Year National Economic and Social Development Plan; examine and ratify the Seventh 5-Year National Economic and Social Development Plan; and deliberate on the draft principles of the civil code, the draft compulsory education law, and the draft of foreign-owned enterprises law. This is a session shouldering an important mission. We wish the session complete success!

Currently, the whole party and the people of all nationalities throughout the country are implementing the guidelines set forth by the National Conference of Party Delegates. The party Central Committee's effective measures for firmly improving party conduct and building a civilization with socialist ethics have greatly encouraged all party members and the people. We have started to scale new heights in our socialist economic construction, considering the successful fulfillment of the Sixth 5-Year Plan as a new starting point. An even more vigorous development and an increasingly thriving sitaution have already appeared in the political, economic, scientific and technological, educational, cultural, defense, and diplomatic spheres.

During the past 5 years, we have taken a very big step forward on the path of building a socialist society with distinctive Chinese characteristics. In economic construction, we have in the main accomplished the task of achieving a fundamental change for the better in our country's financial and economic situation, and a new situation marked by sustained, steady, and coordinated growth has started to appear in our national economy. This strategic victory achieved in the history of our country's national economic development has laid a solid foundation and created good conditions for the national economic and social development for the next 5 years or even longer.

With the exception of the first 3 years after the founding of the country and the 3 years of difficulties, there have been six 5-year plans in the 36-year history of our People's Republic. Of those six plans, the First and the Sixth 5-Year Plans were most successfully accomplished. Major successes were achieved during the First 5-Year Plan period, and new successes having attracted worldwide attention were accomplished during the Sixth 5-Year Plan period. The speed of agricultural growth, in particular, was the fastest since the founding of the republic. There were many reasons for this success. Especially worth pointing out are these two: First of all, we have firmly rejected the erroneous theory and practice of "taking class struggle as the key link" and never slackened in firmly stressing socialist construction; second, we have firmly carried out reforms, knowing that unprecedentedly enormous successes cannot possibly be achieved without unprecedented, extensive, and thorough reforms. Changes in rural areas are even more noticeable because reforms there were carried out earlier, more thoroughly, and effectively. The basic experiences gained in these two areas are invaluable for taking correct steps in drawing up the Seventh 5-Year Plan and carrying it out victoriously.

The timely formulation of a good 5-year plan is an objective requirement for promoting a planned commodity economy on the basis of public ownership. To mobilize and organize the masses to work hard in unity to attain the new goal, an important requirement is to publicize the 5-year plan as quickly as possible. The nationwide publicity of the first 5-year plan played a very positive role, but the subsequent four 5-year planswere locked up in the classified documents cabinet. Owing to the past conditions, the Sixth 5-Year Plan was not made known until 2 years after it was drawn up. Last September, the CPC Central Committee proposal on drawing up the Seventh 5-Year National Economic and Social Development Plan was adopted by the National Conference of Party Delegates. It is encouraging to know that the country's highest organ of power is going to deliberate on and approve the plan even though this is only the first spring of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. It shows that China's economic construction has completely shaken off the hindrance of the tumultuous decade and proceeded on the broad path full of sunlight.

It also shows that we have had a better understanding of the objective law of socialist economic construction and are advancing steadily from the reign of necessity to the reign of freedom.

While no one region, department, or unit can operate without a plan, a good plan drawn up with great foresight is even more essential for the management of a big nation with a billion people. A good 5-year plan reflecting the people's will and interests also serves as the clarion call, summoning the people to march forward under the guise of their action program. It is clearly prescribed in our country's Constitution that it is the solemn responsibility of the National People's Congress to examine and approve the plan for national economic and social development and the reports on its implementation. We believe that all the NPC deputies certainly can effectively exercise their power and accomplish the meeting's missions and will unfold the magnificent blueprint of another 5-year plan before the people of the country.

XI ZHONGXUN FETES HONG KONG, MACAO NPC DEPUTIES

OW241643 Beijing XINHUA in English 1440 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 24 (XINHUA) -- A banquet was given here tonight to people from Hong Kong and Macao who are attending the annual sessions of China's top legislative and consultative bodies. In his toast, Xi Zhongxun, member of the Political Bureau of the Communist Party Central Committee, warmly welcomed the participants from Hong Kong and Macao on behalf of Peng Zhen, chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress (NPC), and Deng Yingchao, chairperson of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference (CPPCC). Xi urged them to air their views freely and offer suggestions at the current session of the CPPCC National Committee and the coming session of the NPC.

Yan Mingfu, head of the United Front Work Department under the CPC Central Committee, paid tribute to their efforts in helping maintain Hong Kong's prosperity and stability.

Fei Yi-ming, director of TA KUNG PAO in Hong Kong, said that he and his fellow deputies feel very proud of China's progress. The more prosperous and stable China becomes, the smoother the implementation of the Sino-British declaration on the future Hong Kong is, and the more confident the Hong Kong people feel, Fei said.

TEXT OF MINERAL RESOURCES LAW RELEASED

[Mineral Resources Law of the People's Republic of China -- Adopted on 19 March 1986 at the 15th Session of the Standing Committee of the 6th National People's Congress]

[Text] Beijing, 19 Mar (XINHUA) -- Chapter I: General Provisions

Article 1. This law is drawn up on the basis of the Constitution of the People's Republic of China for the purpose of developing the mining industry, strengthening the work of prospecting for and exploring, exploiting, and protecting mineral resources, and ensuring the fulfillment of the immediate and long-range needs of the socialist modernization program.

Article 2. This law must be complied with when prospecting for and exploiting mineral resources within the territory of the People's Republic of China and the sea area under its jurisdiction.

Article 3. Mineral resources belong to the state. The state ownership of mineral resources, either on the earth's surface or underground, shall not be affected by differences in ownership or right of use of the land containing the mineral resources.

The state protects the rational exploration and exploitation of mineral resources and prohibits any organization or individual from encroaching upon or destroying mineral resources by any means. People's governments at all levels must strengthen the work of protecting mineral resources.

Registration made according to law when prospecting for mineral resources. The right of mining must be applied for and obtained according to law when exploiting mineral resources.

The state protects the legal right to prospect for and exploit mineral resources from infringement, and ensures that production and work order is not affected and disrupted in areas where mining or prospecting is carried out.

The right of mining shall neither be purchased nor sold, nor leased or used as a security.

Article 4. State-operated mining enterprises are the main bodies in exploiting mineral resources. The state safeguards the consolidation and development of these enterprises.

The state encourages, guides, and helps the development of collective mining enterprises of villages and towns.

The state guides, helps, and supervises, through administrative measures, mining work carried out by individuals according to law.

Article 5. The state collects payment for the exploitation of mineral resources. When mineral resources are exploited, a resources tax and a resources compensation fee must be paid according to the relevant provisions of the state.

Article 6. With regard to the prospecting for, and exploitation of, mineral resources, the state implements the policy of centralized planning, rational overall arrangement, comprehensive prospecting, reasonable exploitation, and multipurpose utilization of mineral resources.

Article 7. The state encourages scientific and technological research in prospecting for and exploitation of mineral resources and promotes the application of advanced technology on a wide scale so as to elevate the scientific and technological level of the work of prospecting for and exploiting mineral resources.

Article 8. Units and individuals with remarkable achievements in prospecting for and exploiting and protecting mineral resources or in conducting scientific and technological research in these respects shall be rewarded by the people's government at the respective level.

Article 9. The department of the State Council in charge of geology and mineral resources shall be responsible for the supervision and administration of the work of prospecting for and exploiting mineral resources in the country. Related departments of the State Council shall assist the geology and mineral resources department in supervising and administering the work of prospecting for and exploiting mineral resources.

Departments of provincial, regional, and municipal people's governments in charge of geology and mineral resources shall be responsible for the supervision and administration of the work of prospecting for the exploiting mineral resources within their respective administrative areas. Related departments of provincial, regional, and municipal people's governments shall assist the geology and mineral resources departments in supervising and administering the work of prospecting for and exploiting mineral resources.

Chapter II: Registration of Mineral Resources; Prospecting; Examination and Approval of Mining Applications.

Article 10. The state carries out a system of centralized registration of mineral resources prospecting. The department of the State Council in charge of geology and mineral resources shall be responsible for the registration work in this respect. For certain special varieties of mineral resources, the State Council may authorize the competent departments concerned to take the responsibility for registration of the prospecting work. The scope of registration of mineral resources prospecting and the measures for such registration shall be worked out by the State Council.

Article 11. The organ of the State Council of the provincial, regional, and municipal organs in charge of examining and approving the estimates of mineral reserves shall be responsible for examination and approval of the prospecting reports to be used for designing mining projects and shall give an official written reply, within a prescribed period, to the unit submitting the report. Prospecting reports that have not been approved shall not be used as a basis for designing mining projects.

Article 12. A unified management system should be adopted to maintain files on prospected mineral resources and statistics on all mineral deposits. All data should be submitted or reported in accordance with the State Council's stipulations.

Article 13. Applications for running state-operated mining enterprises should be separately examined and approved by the State Council, the State Council's departments concerned, and the provincial, autonomous regional, and municipal people's governments.

Before the State Council and its departments concerned approve the operation of a state-operated mining enterprise, the geological and mineral departments of the State Council should check its plan for mining scope and multipurpose utilization and comment on it. If an application is approved, these departments should issue a mining permit in accordance with the documents of approval. Mining permits for certain special minerals may be issued by the departments concerned as authorized by the State Council.

As for those state-operated mining enterprises whose operation must be approved by provincial, autonomous regional, and municipal people's governments, the geological and mineral departments under those governments should check their plans for mining scope and multipurpose utilization and comment on them before approving their operation and should issue mining permits in accordance with the documents of approval after approving their operation.

Article 14. Regulations governing the examination and approval of operations of rural collective mining enterprises and the issuance of mining permits and regulations on the management of self-employed miners should be formulated by the provincial, autonomous regional, and municipal people's congress standing committees.

Article 15. Planned mining should be conducted in mining areas under state plans, in mining areas which are of importance to the national economy, and in areas where the state permits only protective mining of certain local special minerals; no units or individuals are permitted to mine without the approval of the department in charge under the State Council.

Article 16. After the scope of a mining area under the state plan, a mining area which is of importance to the national economy, and a mining area where mining enterprises are located are designated according to the law, the organizations in charge of designating the scopes of mining areas should notify the relevant county-level people's governments to have them make it known to the public.

Mining enterprises wishing to change the scope of their mining areas must report to the original examining and approving organizations for approval and to the original organizations issuing mining permits for having mining permits renewed.

No units or individuals are permitted to mine in mining areas where mining enterprises are located or where mining rights have been acquired by others.

Article 17. Without the consent of the departments concerned as authorized by the State Council, no mineral resources may be mined in the following areas:

1. In ports, airports, and areas designated for national defense projects;

2. In important industrial districts, large water conservation installations, and areas within a specified distance from public utilities of cities and towns;

3. In areas within a specified distance on both sides of a railway or key highway;

4. In areas within a specified distance on both sides of an important river, dike, or dam;

5. In natural reserves and major scenic spots designated by the state, key immovable historical cultural relics preserved by the state, famous resorts, and places of historic interest;

6. In other areas where, by state stipulation, no local mineral resources should be mined.

Article 18. If a mine must be shut down, it is necessary to submit a report on the closing down of pits and provide data on hidden dangers which may jeopardize digging, land reclamation and utilization, and environmental protection, and to apply for examination and approval according to the state's stipulations.

Article 19: If any rare geological phenomenon or ancient cultural relic is discovered in the course of prospecting and exploiting mineral resources, the unit concerned should protect it and report it in good time to the departments concerned.

Chapter III: Prospecting for Mineral Resources

Article 20. Regional geological surveys should be conducted according to the state's unified plans. Reports and charts on regional geological surveys should be examined and accepted in accordance with the state's stipulations and turned over to the departments concerned for their use.

Article 21. In conducting general surveys of mineral resources, the major mineral species should be surveyed, after which a preliminary and comprehensive evaluation should be made of geological conditions concerning the formation of paragenetic and associated minerals, as well as of the industrial prospects of mineral deposits in the area.

Article 22. In prospecting for mineral deposits, a comprehensive evaluation should be made of paragenetic and associated minerals that have industrial value in the mining area, and their reserves should be assessed accordingly. Prospecting reports that fail to include a comprehensive evaluation wil not be approved, with the exception of reports of mineral prospecting projects stipulated otherwise by planning departments of the State Council.

Article 23. In surveying and prospecting for damageable, special nonmetallic minerals; fluid minerals; inflammable, explosive, and soluble minerals; as well as minerals that contain radioactive elements, it is imperative to adopt methods of surveying and prospecting stipulated by the supervisory departments concerned of people's governments at and above the provincial level and to use the essentially required technology and equipment as well as safety measures.

Article 24. Pertinent provisions should be followed to protect and preserve first-hand geological data and maps, core and test samples, specimens, and all other prospecting information acquired in the course of surveying mineral resources.

Article 25. Fees will be levied for the use of mineral prospecting reports and other valuable prospecting documents in accordance with the State Council's regulations.

Chapter IV: Mining of Mineral Resources

Article 26. Establishment of mining enterprise shall be subject to examination by the approving authorities in accordance with the law and pertinent state regulations. Approval shall be given only after requirements have been met regarding the scope of mining, mine designing, extraction plan, production technology, safety measures, and environmental protection.

Article 27. In exploiting mineral resources, it is imperative to follow a reasonable order of extraction, and appropriate methods of mining and ore dressing. Mining enterprises' rates of extraction and recovery, ore dilution, and dressed ore retrieval should meet the designed requirements.

Article 28. In mining major minerals, unified plans and comprehensive efforts should be made to exploit and utilize paragenetic and associated minerals having industrial value in order to prevent waste.

Effective protective measures should be taken to prevent loss or damage to tailings that contain useful constituents, and to minerals that for the time being, cannot be exploited in a comprehensive manner or that must be extracted simultaneously but for the time being cannot be put to comprehensive use.

Article 29. In exploiting mineral resources, it is imperative to observe state regulations on labor safety and hygiene, and to provide the essential guarantees for production safety.

Article 30. In exploiting mineral resources, it is imperative to observe the laws on environmental protection, and prevent environmental pollution. In extracting mineral resources, it is necessary to make economic use of land. In case arable land, grassland, or forests are damaged as a result of mining operations, the mining enterprise should adopt locally suitable measures to reclaim the land for use, plant trees or grass, or take other measures to make the damaged land usable. If exploitation of mineral resources results in losses to other people in terms of production and livelihood, compensation should be made and remedial actions taken accordingly.

Article 31. Before undertaking to build railways, factories, reservoirs, oil pipelines, power lines, and other large projects, construction units should seek information about the distribution and exploitation of mineral resources in their planned project sites from the departments of geology and mineral resources of provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities where the projects are located. Without the approval of the departments authorized by the State Council, it is not allowed to build projects in areas with important underground mineral deposits.

Article 32. The State Council stipulates that except for those units that are designated to purchase, no one is allowed to purchase those minerals for which the state enjoys monopoly in purchasing. Miners are not allowed to sell minerals to units that are not designated to purchase them.

Article 33. When the state taps mineral resources in national autonomous areas, it should take into consideration interests of the national autonomous areas, make arrangements that are conducive to economic construction in such areas, and help local minority people in production and livelihood. In accordance with the law and the unified plan of the state, the organs of self-government of national autonomous areas may give priority to developing and utilizing the mineral resources that the local authorities are allowed to develop.

Chapter V: Collective Mining Enterprises in Townships and Individual Mining

Article 34. In dealing with collective township mining enterprises and individual miners, the state implements the principle of giving them active support, making rational planning, providing correct guidance, and strengthening management; encourages collective township mining enterprises to develop mining resources in the areas designated by the state; and permits individuals to tap scattered mineral resources and collect sand, pebbles, and clay that can only be used as ordinary construction material and a small amount of mineral products for their daily life. The state guides and helps collective township mining enterprises and individual miners to continuously improve their technical standards and raise the rate of utilization of the mineral resources and economic efficiency. Departments in charge of geology and mineral production and units which handle geological work and state-run mining enterprises should provide collective township mining enterprises and individual miners with geological data and technical services based onthe principle of fostering active support, paying for the services and data, and achieving mutual benefits.

Article 35. Collective township mining enterprises that have already been operating in areas in which other mining enterprises have been or will be set up with the approval of the State Council or its departments concerned should close down or move to and operate in other localities as designated and reasonable compensation be paid by the mining construction unit. Proper arrangements should also be made to take care of the workers. Joint operation can also be carried out according to the overall planning of these mining enterprises.

Article 36. Under the overall arrangement of the state-run mining enterprise and with the approval of the department in charge of this matter at the higher level, collective township mining enterprises may tap the marginal and scattered mineral resources in the mining area for state-run mining enterprises. However, it must apply and obtain a mining permit according to regulation.

Article 37. Collective township mining enterprises and individual miners should raise their technical standards and increase the rate of recovery of the mineral resources. It is forbidden to excavate ores indiscriminately and undermine mineral resources. Collective township mining enterprises must draw maps showing mining facilities under and above the ground.

Article 38. The people's governments at and above the county level should give guidance to and help collective township mining enterprises and individual miners carry out technical innovations, improve management, and strengthen production with maximum safety.

Chapter VI: Legal Liabilities

Article 39. Those who carry out mining without proper authorization and mining permit, enter the mining area defined by the state or mining areas that are of great value of national economy or other people's mining areas to carry out mining without authorization, or tap special mining resources that the state has designated protective mining should be instructed to suspend operation and pay for the losses. Mineral products and illegal profits should be confiscated and fines be imposed. Those who refuse to suspend operations and who cause losses to mineral resources must be called to account, and efforts must be made to fix criminal liability on those who are directly responsible according to Article 156 of the "Criminal Law."

Article 40. Those who carry out mining outside the approved area should be instructed to return to their own mining area and pay for the losses. Illegal income from mineral products excavated outside the approved areas should be confiscated and a fine imposed. The license of anyone who refuses to return to his own mining area and undermines mineral resources should be revoked and those who are directly responsible should be called to account and their criminal liabilities be affixed in accordance with Article 156 of the "Criminal Law."

Article 41. Criminal responsibility shall be affixed according to relevant provisions of the "Criminal Law" on whoever steals or takes by force the minerals or other properties of a mining enterprise or prospecting organization, sabotages mining or prospecting facilities, or disturbs the production order or work order of a mining district or prospected zone. The offender shall be punished according to relevant provisions of the "regulations governing the maintenance of public order and the punishment of offenders," if his or her offense is minor.

Article 42. The illegal income of a person from buying, selling, leasing, or transferring in other forms any mineral resources shall be confiscated, and he or she shall be fined. The illegal income of a person from buying, selling, leasing, or mortagaging a mining right shall be confiscated, and he or she shall be fined and lose his or her mining permit.

Article 43. The illegal income of a person from buying or selling in violation of this law any minerals subject to unified state purchase and marketing, and the minerals involved in the transaction shall be confiscated. The offender may also be fined. Criminal responsibility shall be affixed on an offender in accordance with Article 117 and Article 118 of the "Criminal Law" if his or her offense is serious.

Article 44. Whoever mines mineral resources ina destructive way in violation of this law and causes serious damages to the mineral resources shall be asked to compensate for the damages and be fined, and may lose his or her mining permit if the offense is serious.

Article 45. The administrative penalties defined in Article 39, Article 40, and Article 42 of this law shall be decided by city or county people's governments. The administrative penalties defined in Article 43 shall be decided by the industrial and commercial administrative management department. The administrative penalties defined in Article 44 shall be decided by the departments in charge of geological work and mining industry under a provincial, autonomous regional, or municipal people's government. The revocation of the mining permit of a mining enterprise must be approved by a provincial, autonomous regional, or municipal people's government if that enterprise was set up with the approval of the State Council or its departments concerned.

Article 46. If a person is not satisfied with an administrative penalty, he or she may start a law suit in the people's court within 15 days beginning on the day when the notice of penalty is received. If a person does not start a law suit within the prescribed time against a decision to confiscate his or her illegal income and to impose fines on him or her, and in the meantime fails to pay the penalty, the organ imposing the penalty shall request the people's court to enforce the penalty.

Article 47. Disputes between mining enterprises over boundary of mining districts shall be settled through negotiation between the parties concerned. If the negotiation fails to settle the disputes, they shall be handled by the local people's governments concerned at and above the county level in accordance with the mining district boundary decided according to law. Disputes over boundary of mining districts involving more than one province, autonomous region, or municipality shall be settled through negotiation between the provinces, autonomous regions, or municipalities concerned. If the negotiation fails to reach a settlement, the disputes shall be handled by the State Council.

Chapter VII: Supplementary Articles

Article 48. Detailed rules and regulations for implementation of this law shall be formulated by the State Council.

Article 49. This law will come into force on 1 October 1986.

Article 50. A person who mines mineral resources without going through the formalities of obtaining approval, setting the boundary of the mining district, and obtaining a mining permit before this law comes into force should go through makeup formalities in accordance with relevant provisions of this law.

Appendix

1. The "Criminal Law" articles relevant to Article 39 and Article 40 of this law

Article 156. Whoever intentionally destroys articles of public or private property, when the circumstances are serious, is to be sentenced to not more than 3 years of fixed term of imprisonment, criminal detention or a fine.

2. The "Criminal Law" articles relevant to Article 41 of this law

Article 151. Whoever steals, swindles or forcibly seizes articles of public or private property of a relatively large amount is to be sentenced to not more than 5 years of fixed term imprisonment, criminal detention or control.

Article 156. Whoever intentionally destroys articles of public or private property, when the circumstances are serious, is to be sentenced to not more than 3 years of fixed term of imprisonment, criminal detention or a fine.

Article 158. The use by any person of any means to disturb the social order is prohibited. When the circumstances of disturbance of the social order are serious, so that work, production, business and education or scientific research cannot be conducted and the state and society suffer serious losses, ringleaders are to be sentenced to not more than 5 years of fixed term imprisonment, criminal detention, control, or deprivation of political rights.

3. The "Criminal Law" articles relevant to Aticle 43 of this law

Article 117. whoever violates the laws and regulations on the control of monetary affairs, foreign exchange, gold and silver, or industrial and commercial affairs, engaging in speculation, if the circumstances are serious, is to be sentenced to not more than 3 years of fixed term imprisonment or criminal detention, and may in addition or exclusively be sentenced to a fine or confiscation of property.

Article 118. Whoever makes a regular occupation of smuggling or speculation, or smuggles or speculates in huge amounts, or is ringleader of a group that smuggles or speculates, is to be sentenced to not less than 3 years and not more than 10 years of fixed term imprisonment, and may in addition be sentenced to confiscation of property.

ARTISTIC FREEDOM, SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY VIEWED

[Text] Beijing 7 Mar (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- We should persist in the freedom to write while further strengthening the snese of social responsibility of the writers and artists; the emergence of the trend of one-sidely stressing the freedom of writing while neglecting social responsibility is a minor problem; however, it deserves a down-to-earth solution; meanwhile, we should resolutely oppose the artificial restriction of the freedom of writing under the pretext of focusing on strengthening the sense of social responsibility of the writers. The above are the main points discussed in a WENYI BAO commentator's article of more than 4,000 characters.

According to the article, a predominant phenomenon in literature is the pleasing development of the individuality in writing and artistic characteristics of writers over the past year. The breadth in the choice of subject matter, the freshenss in the approach of presentation, and the variation in styles and techniques have surpassed those of any period in the past. Many characteristics (for example, the trends of greater variation, multiple layers, and multiple angles) displayed in a large number of works were rarely seen in writing in the past.

Literature and art criticism is no longer limited to the interpretation and appraisal of individual works, and an overall analysis of representative writers and artists and comprehensive investigation into phenomena of literature and art have begun, as well as the spirit of exploration and discussion with each airing his own view or quoting from what one has read.

The article then touches upon the "shortcomings existing" in literature and art work, manifested in some works which have shown a certain indifference or disdain for the fiery realities of reforms and the four modernizations. Some works have become divorced from socialist practice and are overzealous in propagating abstract human nature and social pessimism which ridicules every thing, and doubt all social progress; and some works have gone so far as to portray the human sex instinct, leaving out all social content; and vulgar reading materials have for a time disastrously swept the country, lashing at the healthy growth of serious literature and art. Some writers, literary critics, and editors have been inclined to split the freedom of writing and criticism from the social responsibility of the literature and art workers, one-sidely focusing on freedom while neglecting responsibility. They have even made known in public the view that the interests of society and the masses and social responsibility of the writers can be given to consideration when enjoying the freedom of writing. The commentator points out that any attempt to artificially interfere with the freedom of creation of writers and artists can only be an expression of bureaucratic ignorance of the activities of literature and art. At the same time, it is impossible for any writer or artist of any historical period to divorce himself from certain social historical conditions and social criteria, when engaged in his free artistic creation. In fact, absolute, unconditional, and abstract freedom of creation never exists.

In Hu Qili's congratulatory speech made on behalf of the Central Committee at the Fourth Congress of the China Writers Association in January 1985, he said, literature creation must be free, so must criticism; the writer's own ideology and feelings as well as his creative activities must be in line with the free environment provided by the party and the state. The commentator says that the basic spirit of Hu Qili's congratulatory speech is identical to that of Deng Xiaoping's speech greeting the Fourth Congress of Chinese Writers and Artists delivered on behalf of the Central Committee and the State Council in October 1979; namely, the writers' freedom of creation is inseparable from their sense of social responsibility.

The article requires that writers and artists delve deep into realities, in order to "reflect our time in their works, for the masses to understand and love," and "to reflect in depth the new situation and new problems in the reforms in the rural and urban areas and the four modernizations." In conclusion, the commentator's article points out that we will resolutely oppose any rude interference with creative activities or artificial restriction of the freedom of writing by anyone under the pretext focusing on the social benefits of literary works or the sense of social responsibility of the writers and artists. 'BREAKTHROUGHS' IN MARXIST STUDY EXAMINED

[Article by Deng Weizhong: "'Breakthroughs' in the Study of Marxism"]

[Text] In recent years a discussion has been conducted in China's theoretical circles on whether or not Marxist theory can be developed. This indicates not only a rise in our acedemic level and courage but also an improvement in our academic work and environment.

Without sufficient courage and a democratic environment, it would have been impossible to raise this issue.

It is imperative to make breakthroughs in order to attain development. How can we attain development if we neither make any breakthroughs nor negate anything but always follow the "set conclusions of our ancestors?" We indeed need some courage and insight when putting forth a new viewpoint; however, once it is fully expounded and proved, it seems dull and insipid. The question of whether or not some breakthroughs can be made in Marxist therory is also the same. Although many comrades still take exception to bringing up the question of making "breakthroughs," I think the arguments raised by those favoring the "idea of making breakthroughs" are irrefutable.

Marxism has constantly developed. How can we attain development if the latter stage can only continue or carry on but not break away from or negate the former stage? The greatness of Leninism found concentrated expression in the fact that it broke away from Marx belief that socialism could be achieved only through simultaneous efforts in all civilized countries. Lenin advanced the theory on imperialism and built the first socialist state in the world. The greatness of Mao Zedong Thought found concentrated expression in the fact that it broke away from the Marxist belief in the need for armed urban uprisings, advanced the theory of encircling the cities from the rural areas, and founded the PRC. Lenin and Mao Zedong made many more breakthroughs in Marxist theory than these. I have just cited some important principles universally accepted by people.

The development of Marxism consists of negation, which is dialectic negation. So do all theories and all schools of thought. As everybody knows, there has been an argument between the Morgan and Michurin schools in China's biological and genetic circles. Although they styled themselves as belonging to the Morgan or Michurin schools, the concepts enunciated by these two schools are vastly different from the original works of both Morgan and Michurin. If the representatives of these two schools review the original works of their forerunners, they will be proud of the achievements of their forerunners. Moreover, they will discover some innocent or absurd ideas on the part of the forerunners. For this reason, making constant breakthroughs and renovations is the foundation of the vitality of all theories. As a branch of science, Marxism is no exception. Broad and profound, the Marxist theoretical system consists of numerous theories and viewpoints, many of which should be included in the category of basic principles. It should be included in the category of basic principles. It should be noted, however, that the word "basic" is also relative to a certain structure. Some principles which are "basic" today may not be so tomorrow. The principles that socialism can be achieved only through simultaneous efforts in all civilized countries and that there is a need for armed urban uprisings, which I have mentioned above, were considered by Marxists in a certain period as basic principles. Otherwise, how can it be so difficult to break away from them? The great development of Marxism has often been attained by renovating and breaking away from similar conclusions. Such breakthroughs will not detract from the glory of Marxism, nor will they affect the great status and role of Marxism in human history. However, if we aim at making breakthroughs in minor details, it will be acceptable even to dogmatists.

The problem is that breakthroughs should not be made at subjective will. If the time place, and conditions have not changed or have not changed considerably, the theories representing the essence under these conditions will not be outdated; if the time, place, and conditions have changed considerably, the theories, no matter how lofty and sacred they may be, will be outdated. It is wrong to say that they are outdated when they are not; it is equally wrong to say that they are not outdated when they are. Neither are Marxist approaches.

What merits our particular attention today is that with the imporvement of science and technology, namely, the productive forces, the developing at an accelerated speed and people are also renewing their concepts at an accelerated speed.

In China, systematology, cybernetics, and information theory are still "in vogue." People hardly realize that the historical status of the "three old theories" has been replaced by that of the "three new ones," namely, the theories of dissipative structure, coordination, and mutation. The shortened life span of some theoretical concepts is necessitated by dialectic materialism and constitutes a victory for dialectics. This is a matter for rejoicing. "The poems of Li Bai and Du Fu, which have been recited by thousands upon thousands of people, are no longer considered novel." This is decided by social psychology. However, this will not belittle the achievements of the two great poets.

Naturally, it is not easy to break away from outdated Marxist viewpoints, nor should we take any hasty action. Marx closed the door on commodity production. Lenin opened the door slightly. In his work entitled "Problems in the Soviet Socialist Economy," Stalin opened the door slightly wider than Lenin. After reading Stalin's works, Mao Zedong again opened the door on Socialist commodity production slightly wider than Stalin. It was a pity that in his later years he again closed the door tightly. However, generally speaking, he did open the door wide enough. It was not until the 12th CPC Central Committee held its 3d Plenary Session in 1984 that the door was fully opened. Judging from the zigzag process in achieving a breakthrough in the theory of commodity economy, it takes time to effect a breakthrough and it requires a process of cognition and a long process of raising one's understanding through practice and discussions. Breaking away from outdated Marxist conclusions is a serious task which history has entrusted to Marxists. We should not do as we please but should treat it with a serious Marxist approach.

Marxism is an open system in itself. Many basic Marxist principles are not outdated and still have enormous vitality at present. They are universally applicable. The basic Marxist theory on communist social system should be tested in the great practice of building the higher stage of communism and the question of whether or not it is ourdated can be answered at that time. Some basic Marxist principles will be relevant forever and may not be discarded even after the realization of communism.

"We are advocates of the theory of continuous development, and we have no intention of imposing an ultimate law upon mankind. What are our preset ideas on the details of the future social organization? You will not be able to find even their shadows from us." ("Complete Works of Marx and Engels," Vol 22, pp 628-629)

RADIO EQUIPMENT FACTORY PRODUCES QUALITY PRODUCTS

[Report by XINHUA reporter Huang Fengchu and staff reporter Dong Huanliang: "Products of the Jiangnan Radio Equipment Factory Have Reached the Advanced World Level"]

[Excerpts] The quality of the integrated circuit boards and semiconductors produced by the state-run Jiangnan radio equipment factory has reached the advanced world level as a result of adhering to advanced international standards in the course of production.

This factory is in Wuxi, a city by Tai Hu. It is the largest factory engaged in the production of integrated circuit boards and semiconductors for television sets and recorders. Its output of integrated circuit boards accounts for one-third of China's total. Since the factory imported a whole set of equipment for producing integrated circuit boards in 1978, its products have been well received by 680 factories in 28 provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities throughout the country, as the reliability and stability of its products are up to standard.

Some comrades of the factory were content with the quality of their products, as it had reached the advanced international level. But after making an overall analysis of the competitive situation in foreign and domestic markets, leaders of the factory decided to "make further progress" beginning in the latter half of 1984 and to organize production in line with the advanced standard promulgated by the international electronics products to find their way to the international market.

On the one hand, this factory persists in educating the employees to "give priority to quality." On the other hand, it adheres to the principle of rewards and punishments, thus making quality a decisive factor in determining the employees' wages and bonuses. Top quality products have brought about an overall increase in economic results. In 1985, the factory's gross industrial output value was 278 million yuan, an increase of 49.5 percent over 1984. It realized profits and taxes totaling 93 million yuan, an increase of 84.8 percent. Its personnel labor productivity amounted to 69,000 days of manpower, an increase of 360 percent.

Commentator's Article

[Commentator's article: "Strive To Equal the Advanced World Standard"]

[Text] Aiming at reaching the advanced international standard, the Jiangnan radio equipment factory exercises strict control over the quality of its products and works hard to improve it. It has made excellent achievements in this respect. This suggests that an effective measure to encourage China's industrial enterprises to improve the quality of their products is to strive to reach the international quality standard adopted between the late 1970's and the early 1980's.

For a long time, the quality standard has been low and assessment methods have been unrealistic. As a result, many enterprises lack the initiative to improve the quality of their products. With the exception of the quality standard for electronics and petrochemical products, which is comparatively high, the quality standard for most products still remains at the level of the 1950's or the 1960's. Of the industrial enterprises throughout the country, only a few have adopted advanced international standards in their production, and many township enterprises still do not have any standard to follow in their production. Over the past few years, as the departments concerned have applied a low standard to the assessment of enterprises' products, they have been unable to exert pressure on enterprises. Content with things as they are, enterprises do not want to make further progress. This is an issue which merits attention.

Improving the quality of products is the key to increasing foreign exchange earnings through exports. If we want to make China's industrial products rank among products on the international market, we must strictly follow advanced international standards. Therefore, before their products can "find their way to the outside world," enterprises should try every possible means to approach and catch up with advanced international standards and to improve the competitiveness of their products on the international market.

Producing top quality products requires meticulous work and fine materials. It requires more human and material resources than producing ordinary products. The policy on fixing special prices for top quality products has not been drawn up, and in most cases, providing fine materials for the manufacture of top quality products remains "empty talk." This has affected the initiative of enterprises in promoting the production of top quality products.

We should draw up a policy regarding those who produce top quality products and penalizing those who produce bad quality products. On the one hand, in terms of prices, taxation, material distribution, and the retention percentage of foreign exchange earnings, preferential treatment should be given to enterprises which produce top quality products, so as to encourage them to "scale new heights." On the other hand, apart from levying heavy taxes, severe punishments should be meted out to enterprises producing bad quality products so that they will improve the quality of their products within a given time.

Some comrades are of the opinion that since the technological and managerial conditions for engaging in production according to advanced international standards are not ripe, "riding a donkey" would be better than "traveling by plane." This is a conservative idea. If we are content with "riding a donkey" while people in the world take a great interest in "traveling by plane," our products will certainly lose their competitiveness. In curing the disease of bad quality, it is necessary to conscientiously create favorable conditions for improving management and technology, including introducing advanced technology and managerial experience from foreign countries, other provinces, and other departments, so as to use others' strong points to offset one's weaknesses. We should strive to enable the quality of our industrial products to reach the advanced world level in not too long a time.

HEBEI RURAL AREAS DEVELOP ECONOMIC COOPERATION

[Article by Yan Zhenke and Li Tianyun: "From East-West Associations to Exchanges in All Directions -- Investigation of How Hebei's Wuan County Develops Lateral Economic Associations"]

[Excerpts] Hebei's Wuan County borders the north China plain in the east and the Taihang Shan in the west. The topography in the west is high while that in the east is low. The eastern area of the county is economically well-off while the western area is poverty-stricken.

The eastern part of the county is affluent because the hilly areas there have abundant coal and iron ore resources. It is known far and wide as the "town of coal and iron." There are around 700 large and small mines owned respectively by the state, collectives, and individuals. The annual output of coal and iron totals over 7 million tons and 5.4 million tons respectively. The steady flow of mineral resources means an endless source of revenue.

The western part of the county is poverty-stricken because the economic conditions of the mountainous areas there are extremely poor. There are only a few forests and animal husbandry is underdeveloped, to say nothing of industry. The level of farming is also low, so the people's income is limited.

How can we help the peasants of the mountainous areas in the west become rich as quickly as possible? During the 5 years from 1979 to 1983, the county authorities allocated over 80 million jin of grain to the towns and townships in the poverty-stricken mountainous areas, equivalent to over twice the total output of grain of these towns and townships in 1983. The country authorities also provided relief funds totalling 7 million yuan, accounting for 29.5 percent of the total income of these towns and townships in 1983. However, the method of providing relief could not help put an end to the backwardness of the mountainous areas, but encouraged a dependent mentality in some people. While conducting a survey of the rural economy later, the county CPC Committee took note of the following three cases.

Sixi, a remote mountainous village which had limited arable land, organized 5 building teams with some 400 peasants, thus forming a new type of industry -- sending surplus rural labor to work elsewhere. Through this alone, the village earned 390,000 yuan in 1983, an average per capita income of 233 yuan.

The average per capita income of Guzheng, a mountainous town in the southwest, was a little more than 100 yuan in 1982. In 1983, the village on the one hand encouraged its craftsmen to leave the mountains and develop service trades, and on the other hand invited able persons from other localities to help exploit the mountainous areas. The annual output was 25,000 tons and profits totaled over 200,000 yuan. Later, the village built an ore dressing plant in cooperation with a state-owned steel works. The annual output value of the plant was 2.3 million yuan and profits reached 0.45 million yuan. With the money earned from industry, the village increased investment in agricultural production. As a result, agriculture, forestry, and other trades picked up rapidly. In 1985, the total output value of industry and agriculture was 6 million yuan and the average per capita income reached 650 yuan.

The third case is Cuizhuangxiang, a township where the conditions are much poorer than the previous two villages. Besides surplus labor, the village has no mineral resources or water. The village established ties with a township in the east which had rich mineral resources and set up a small coalpit in Guojialing. The output of coal was around 60,000 tons and net income amounted to 300,000 yuan in 1985. Obviously, they found the gate leading to prosperity.

From the vivid cases of three villages turning from poverty to prosperity, the leaders of the county realized the following truth: In order to extricate the mountainous areas from poverty, it is necessary for the mountainous areas and other localities to help supply each other's needs. The county CPC Committee put forward the following call: Smash the barriers erected between different areas, carry out east-west cooperation, encourage the exchange of labor, funds, and technology throughout the county, particularly between the east and west, and invigorate the economy of the whole county!

With the expansion of economic activities, Wuan County's economic cooperation extended from the county to other localities. Since last year, the county has developed economic relations with 15 provinces and cities. The county's total industrial and agricultural output value in 1984 was 400 million yuan. The figure jumped to 500 million yuan in 1985, an increase of 22.6 percent over the previous year.

While industry run by the county deveoped in a steady manner, town and township industry advanced by leaps and bounds. The total output value of town and township industry reached 140 million yuan in 1984. The figure rose to 210 million yuan in 1985, a 50 percent increase over 1984. The country's average per capita income rose by a big margin in the past 2 years. The net average per capita income in 1984 was 144 yuan more than in 1983. The average per capita income in 1985 increased to 430 yuan, 82.5 yuan more than in 1984. The backwardness of the mountainous areas in the west began to change. The number of poor households decreased while that of rich villages increased.

[Commentator's article: "Pave the Way for Developing Lateral Economic Associations"]

[Text] The development of economic relations among regions and enterprises is a newly emerging trend in the reform of the economic structure.

It involves regions, cities and countryside, enterprises, Army and people, production and scientific research units, the front and rear, agriculture-industry-trade, and many other fields. With regard to this important matter, there is a lot of work which can be done by leading departments. Without the efforts of leading departments, it will be impossible to pave the way for developing economic relations. Hebei's Wuan County has achieved marked successes in this respect. Its successes are inspiring.

We cannot carry out productive activities, especially modern production, without manpower, natural resources, funds, and technology. These factors usually do not co-exist in a locality. Only by complementing each other and learning from each other's strongpoints to offset weaknesses, extensively carrying out exchanges in manpower, funds, and technology, and scientifically combining these factors can the new productive forces take shape and better social economic results be achieved.

In order to pave the way for developing economic relations, it is necessary to first eliminate certain traditional ideas and forces of habit and effect a fundamental change in the guiding ideology. The economy of certain localities or departments remained blocked for a long time and barriers were erected between regions and trades even though they were located close to each other. Therefore, it is necessary to adopt forceful measures to emancipate the people from self-service, the narrow circle of self-sufficiency, and the economic pattern characterized by "large and comprehensive, small but complete" and lead them to the vast world of economic cooperation. When they have witnessed the vast world after stepping out from the narrow circle, they will enhance their enthusiasm and initiative for making joint efforts, have the motivation for developing economic cooperation, and create a new situation in invigorating the economy.

In paving the way for developing economic relations, it is necessary to uphold the principle of voluntary participation, mutual benefit, and common progress. Both sides of the combines should develop their own advantages, learn from each other's strongpoints to offset their weaknesses, and take note of rational combination of economy and technology. We must help both sides of the combines realize their strongpoints and advantages, select the best partner, and choose the best plan for cooperation, and take the benefits of each side into account. Only cooperation in this manner can have bright prospects and vitality. While developing cooperation between units at the same level, we must never use administrative means to impose uniformity or try to combine the two parties by force. If we go against the economic laws, it will only hinder the development of production.

It is an important task of this year's structural reform to develop economic cooperation between enterprises and regions. We must push reform forward by developing cooperation. While developing cooperation, we must discover and expose the problems in the current systems, rules, and regulations that hinder cooperation and adopt practical measures to solve these problems. We must protect such cooperation legally and support it while applying the policies. So long as the leading departments pay attention to the problems arising from cooperation and make efforts to solve them, the economic relations among regions and enterprises will certainly develop in a healthy manner.

FANG YI SPEAKS ON SICHUAN CONSTRUCTION WORK

HK250133 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Text] On 24 March, Fang Yi, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and state councillor, delivered a report to the 280 delegates attending the 1986 conference on science and technology work for the comprehensive exploitation of Panzhihua's resources and to over 1,000 cadres and masses of Dukou City.

Comrade Fang Yi said: The state has always attached great importance to the construction of Panzhihua. Panzhihua ought to make still greater contributions to the state. It is necessary to continue to rely on the progress of science and technology, raise the various science and technology indices, continually perfect the existing production process, and vigorously develop lateral economic ties between enterprises, so as to take full advantage of the strong points in resources. We must get a still tighter grasp of the construction of stage two of the Panzhihua iron and steel plant. All sectors should work together to promote the preparatory work for the construction of Ertan hydroelectric station, and construction work should start on this soon. We must further map out the plans for the construction of Panxi no 2 iron and steel base. Comrade Fang Yi said: In order to invigorate the economy of the southwest and promote the well-being and happiness of the people of all nationalities, we must get a good grasp of planning the comprehensive exploitation of resources and energy in the Panxi area.

SONG PING AT POWER PLANT LOAN CEREMONY

OW211905 Beijing XINHUA in English 1655 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 21 (XINHUA) -- An overseas banking group today lent China's Huaneng international power development corporation more than 200 million U.S. dollars to build two thermal power stations. A loan agreement was signed here by the Huaneng corporation and the group consisting of 20 banks from nine countries and Hong Kong. It is led by the Chase Manhattan Bank N.A. and China Development Finance Company (H.K.) The two power stations are to be built at Shijiazhuang, Hebei Province, and Nantong, Jiangsu Province.

State Councillor Song Ping attended the signing ceremony, and met representatives of the banking group before the ceremony. Song said China was striving to improve its investment environment and economic efficiency.

JIANGXI'S WAN SHAOFEN ON AIDING BACKWARD AREAS

OW241059 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Excerpts] When the provincial meeting on the development of the old revolutionary areas was in session, Wan Shaofen, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and chairman of the provincial commission on the development of the old revolutionary areas, recommended to the meeting's participants a NONGMIN RIBAO newsletter entitled "Shedding Hot Tears on the Great Land," and its commentator's article entitled "Affection Is Needed When Rendering Support to the Poor." In this connection, she wrote an article entitled "Recommending a Good and Moving Article to All."

In her article, Comrade Wan Shaofen said: Our cadres should emulate the comrades of (Ji) County and the advanced units in the work in the old revolutionary areas. They should act as public servants, be personally concerned about the poverty in the old revolutionary areas, feel the urgency of solving this problem, and have the courage to forge ahead despite difficulties.

The article said: Cherishing a profound feeling for the people in the old revolutionary areas is the ideological foundation for showing concern and support for and doing a successful job in those areas. It goes without saying that a person who lacks feeling for the people in the old revolutionary areas will not communicate well with such people; neither will he perform his duties satisfactorily. Only those who cherish profound feelings for the peoplein the old revolutionary areas can show concern for such, fear no hardship, and sincerely try their best to help such people shake off poverty and achieve prosperity, and eventually lead them on the path to common prosperity.

Comrade Wan Shaofen hoped that our cadres, particularly those who work in the old revolutionary areas, as well as all comrades who aspire to work in such areas would implement a system of responsibility to avhieve certain goals within their terms of office, truly shoulder their responsibilities, struggle in unity, and persist in doing practical work to develop the old revolutionary areas and invigorate Jiangxi's economy. New progress was made in the development of the old revolutionary areas last year. Greater progress should be made this year to bring about some tangible changes and to reach the goal of solving the problem of food and clothing in the next 3 years and shaking off poverty in the next 5 years.

SHANGHAI SECRETARY ASKS CADRES TO SEE DRAMA

OW231345 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1921 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Excerpts] Shanghai, 22 Mar (XINHUA) -- When the Mandarin drama "The Children" was staged at Shanghai's Changjiang Theater on the evening of 21 March, Rui Xingwen, secretary of the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee, invited principal leading cadres at and above the bureau level to see it. They were the only viewers that night.

In the drama, Tan Ming, director of the Bureau of High Education who had just retired, had a beautiful plan for his children.

He asked an influential person to help arrange a visa for an overseas study tour for his eldest son. He arranged an ideal marriage for his younger daughter by having her marry a college student, the son of a former comrade-in-arms. His elder daughter, with whom he had severed all relations, returned to his side. Perfectly content, Tan Ming thought he could now spend his remaining years in happiness. But life was not so peaceful for him. On the eve of his departure for overseas, the son was arrested by the Public Security Bureau on charges of committing economic crime. Rejecting the arranged marriage, his younger daughter married the public security policeman who arrested her elder brother. His elder daughter, who was president of the Intermediate People's Court, would not plead for her brother but insisted that he be dealt with according to the law.

Because it sharply reflected a current problem concerning the education of children of cadres, the Mandarin drama "The Children" had caught the attention of Secretary Rui Xingwen. Moved to tears by the show, he commended it for its practical significance. He said: "The drama touches upon the lives of us leading cadres. How to deal with their children is an acute problem facing veteran cadres in the new situation. Viewing the show will certainly bring some enlightenment on this problem." After watching the show, he called for a reeducation of leading and retired cadres at and above the bureau and department level of the entire municipality concerning the problem of children.

Shanghai will organize the city's over 5,000 leading and retired cadres at and above the bureau and department level to view the Mandarin drama "The Children."

SHANDONG PROVINCE TO EXPAND TOURISM FACILITIES

OW242040 Beijing XINHUA in English 1508 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Text] Jinan, March 24 (XINHUA) -- Shandong Province plans a ten-fold increase in the next five years in the number of visitors and tourists it receives annually, a senior tourist official said here today. By 1990, the province should receive 500,000 visitors and tourists, up from 50,000 in 1985, said Li Qingde, vice-director of the province tourist bureau.

The province will use 360 million yuan to improve telecommunications, transport and tourism facilities, open new scenic spots and train tourist workers, Li said.

On the list of its priority are air routes linking the seashore resort Qingdao with foreign cities, four airports, seven hotels and a program to train 1,200 interpreters, guides and tourist administrators. The province is known for numerous scenic spots and places of historic interest, including Mount Tai and the Confucian mansion house.

Foreign trade in the province also went ahead last year, according to the provincial foreign trade administration. The province exported goods worth 2.667 billion U.S. dollars in 1985, a 16.6 percent increase over the previous year, and export is expected to be 4.2 billion U.S. dollars by 1990.

HENAN URGES PROTECTION FOR WATER CONSERVATION PROJECTS

HK220346 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Excerpts] The provincial government recently issued a notice on protecting water conservation projects, calling for the use of the legal system to protect these installations.

The notice sets out explicit regulations regarding the protection scope. It stresses that all theft and sabotage of wager conservation projects is illegal. The public security organs must seriously investigate and deal with such cases. People must be held criminally accountable in serious cases.

A station editorial note on this says: Henan has been suffering more floods, waterlogging, and drought in the past 2 or 3 years. One of the main reasons for this is poor management of water conservation projects and the serious artificial damage done to them, with the result that many projects are less effective than before or are even completely useless. The provincial government's notice on protecting water conservation projects is extremely important and necessary.

Sabotaging water conservation projects means sabotaging production and is a breach of the criminal law. We must therefore teach the masses to wage resolute struggle against lawbreakers who sabotage and steal water conservation facilities. The public security and judicial departments must promptly and severely investigate and deal with cases of sabotaging water conservation projects, so as to uphold the interests of the state and people.

HUBEI PARTY MEETING DISCUSSES WORK TASKS

HK220257 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Excerpts] The Hubei Provincial CPC Committee held a work conference in Wuchang from 10 to 20 March. The conference reviewed work in 1985, unified understanding of the situation, and discussed and arranged the work for 1986. It decided on measures for surmounting weak links and looked into ways for the party committees at all levels to get a good grasp of party style, improve work style, enhance work efficiency and quality, take better charge of the overall situation, and ensure the healthy development of building the two civilizations in the province.

Regarding rural work, the provincial CPC Committee and government put forward specific views on implementing CPC Central Committee Document No 1 of 1986. Regarding industry, science and technology, circulation, finance, structural reform, foreign economic relations and trade, and tourism, and on ideological and political work, straightening out party style, and party rectification, the departments concerned put forward initial views for discussion at the conference.

Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Guan Guangfu and Deputy Secretaries Guo Zhenqian, Zhao Fulin, Wang Qun, and Qian Yunlu presided at panel discussion meetings on selected topics. Guan Guangfu delivered a summation. Guo Zhenqian spoke on economic work.

The conference summation was in three parts: 1) Correctly analyze the situation and strengthen confidence and sense of urgency; 2) seriously implement the spirit of the National Conference of Party Delegates and do a good job of work in the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan; 3) straighten out party style, improve work style, and enhance work efficiency and quality.

In the first part, the summation said: What is the situation in our province? Everyone unanimously holds that the political and economic situation is good. Economically, the province fulfilled the targets of the Sixth 5-Year Plan 1 year ahead of schedule. Politically, despite the fact that party style and social mood have not yet met the demand for a fundamental turn for the better, the province is stable, united, and lively, and the enthusiasm of the cadres and masses has soared.

The situation is good, but there are some problems requiring a high degree of attention on our part. First, we must eliminate blind optimism and fear of difficulties. Second, we must correctly understand the principle of consolidating, digesting, supplementing, and improving. We must unswervingly do a good job in all reforms. Third, we must strengthen our sense of urgency and pay attention to the widening gap between the economic level in Hubei and that in advanced areas. Fourth, we must realize that the quality of our province's enterprises is not high and there is a serious lack of reserve strength for economic development. We must be resolved to tap internal potentials so as to increase our economic strength. Fifth, we must perceive the imbalances in economic development in different areas. The upper-level party committees and government must strengthen leadership over economically-backward areas and help them to study way of solving the problems.

The second part of the report said: The conference holds that in this, the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we must seriously implement the spirit of the National Conference of Party Delegates. In connection with the province's realities, we must consolidate and develop the fine situation achieved since the Sixth 5-Year Plan and take a good first stride in fulfilling the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

1. Unswervingly put reform in the first place and do a thorough job in consolidating, digesting, supplementing, and improving. We must strengthen and improve macroeconomic control, and in particular make great efforts to use capital well and improve the results gained from using it. We must consolidate the results of price reform and digest and supplement the price and wage reform measures that were started last year. We must further invigorate large and medium backbone enterprises and exporting enterprises. We must vigorously develop lateral ties, especially between enterprises. We must persevere in and perfect the household contract responsibility system with payment linked to output, actively develop service-style joint operations, and gradually perfect the new-style cooperative economy in the rural areas.

We must continue to organize comprehensive pilot projects in structural reform.

2. Fully implement the spirit of Central Document No 1, strengthen the agricultural foundation, develop the strong point in grain, stabilize the strong point in cotton, continue to vigorously develop township enterprises, give free rein to developing diversified rural undertakings, and promote the healthy development of the rural economy.

The meeting has decided on the main goals of endeavor in agricultural production this year: grain output, 45 billion jin; cotton output, 9 million dan; township enterprise output value, 15 billion yuan; and average peasant net income to increase to 40 to 50 yuan. All areas and departments must strive to achieve these goals.

3. Improve enterprise quality, increase economic strength, and focus on product quality and economic results. Under this premise, we should maintain a relatively good growth rate. The large and medium cities bear a particularly important responsibility in this respect.

The provincial economic work conference made arrangements for how to improve enterprises' quality and increase their economic strength. It is hoped that all places will implement these measures will.

4. We must work hard to rely on the progress of science and technology and further strengthen education work.

5. Step up foreign economic relations and trade work and strive to make more foreign exchange through exports. The conference held that this issue is one of the key matters in production and construction during the seventh 5-year plan. It is also one of the weak links that we have to grasp. The provincial CPC Committee and government and all localities must understand the importance of foreign trade. They must spontaneously make use of the window of foreign economic relations and trade, strengthen leadership over foreign economic relations and trade, raise the province's ability to make foreign exchange through exports, and thus spur economic development.

6. We must improve the quality of the first doubling and develop reserve strength for achieving the second doubling. Even though Hubei could attain the goal of its first doubling this year, we must not be in the least complacent about that. We must realize that the base figure for the first doubling is rather low. In particular, we must realize that doubling requires quality as well as quantity. If the quality is not high, the state and people will not gain much tangible benefits from doubling. This year, therefore, we must stress improving quality in doubling, and make great efforts to improve quality and economic results, reduce input, and promote technological transformation and scientific management, so as to lay a good foundation for the second doubling.

7. Strengthening the building of spiritual civilization and the socialist legal system. This year we must focus on straightening out party style, conducting education in the situation and policies, correcting the guiding ideas on the ideological, cultural, and theoretical fronts, and grasping political and legal work.

The third part of the summation said: The conference pointed out that to seriously implement the spirit of the central instructions and improve party style in Hubei is an urgent task facing the party organizations at all levels. Party committees at all levels must enhance understanding, unify their thinking, bring into play the spirit of the foolish old man, insist on governing the party with strictness, and get a thoroughly sound grasp of party style, party rectification, and cadre work style, so as to ensure the smooth progress of reform and all construction.

We must currently grasp the following task: 1) resolutely curb a number of unhealthy trends and strictly enforce party discipline. 2) Resolutely investigate and deal with major and important cases. 3) Get a good grasp of education in party spirit, style, and discipline, and put party organizational life on a sound basis.

The province's party rectification task this year is extremely arduous. At present party rectification in the districts and townships is being unfolded throughout the province. Generally speaking, the development is healthy. However, there are also a number of conspicuous problems. The main ones are: Party rectification criteria and demands are too low in some places and units; some units have not properly handled the relationship between economic work and party rectification; and some units have not put their rectification contingent on a firm enough basis.

The conference stressed therefore that the question of district and township party rectification must be viewed from the plane of the overall situation. Leadership over this work must be further strengthened.

MAO ZHIYONG ATTENDS HUNAN MEETING TO COMMEMORATE VETERAN

HK220815 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 18 Mar 86

[Excerpts] A meeting was held this morning at the (Rongyuan) guesthouse of the provincial CPC Committee to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the birthday of Comrade Lin Boqu, a great Marxist and outstanding proletarian revolutionary. Mao Zhiyong, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, presided over the meeting and delivered a speech. Comrade Zhou Li, former member of the CPC Central Advisory Commission, delivered an important report at the meeting.

Lin Boqu was a native of Lingli County, Hunan Province. He spent his childhood and student years in Hunan. Later, he also carried out many revolutionary activities in Hunan. Comrade Lin Boqu was a member of the CPC in its early days. He engaged in the party's united front work for a long time and was also one of the organizers of the first CPC-KMT cooperation. During the northern expedition, he was CPC representative of the 6th Army. He led the army into Hunan and then fought in Jiangxi. After the failure of the great revolution in 1927, he participated in the Nanchang uprising. Later, he assumed such important posts as minister of national economy and minister of finance in the central workers' and peasants' democratic government. He joined the well-known 25,000-li Long March. Our revered Comrade Lin was elected member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee at the 7th and 8th National People's Congress Standing Committee in 1954.

In their report and speech, both Comrade Zhou Li and Comrade Mao Zhiyong emphatically pointed out that in commemorating the 100th anniversary of the birthday of Comrade Lin Boqu, we must learn from our revered Comrade Lin his firm belief of fighting all his life for communism, his great revolutionary spirit of continuing to fight inspite of all setbacks and advancing bravely; his firm stand in safeguarding the party's correct line; his fine style of integrating theory with practice, maintaining close ties with the masses, working hard, and living a plain life; and his scientific attitude of seeking truth and never feeling too old to learn, so as to fight for fulfilling the Seventh 5-Year Plan, for building China into a modern socialist power, and for finally achieving communism.

Attending today's meeting were responsible comrades of the provincial CPC Committee, the provincial Advisory Commission, the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission, the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee, the provincial people's government, the provincial CPPCC Committee, the provincial military district, all provincial departments, the Changsha City CPC Committee, and the Changsha City government; retired veteran cadres; and responsible persons of all democratic parties and mass organizations, including Xiong Qingquan, Liu Fusheng, Wan Da, Chen Xinmin, Shi Xinshan, Dong Zhiwen, Xia Zhanzhong, Shen Ruiting, Wang Zhiguo, Zhang Wenguang, Shi Jie, Ding Weike, Huang Daoqi, Ji Zhaoqing, Luo Qiuyue, Xu Tiangui, Shi Bangzhi, Kong Anmin, Xie Xinying, Li Tiangen, Yin Changmin, (Luo Juetian), Guo Sen, Wang Hanfu, Yin Ziming, Dong Xinshan, Ouyang Tian, and (Wang Zhongfu). Family members of Comrade Lin Boqu and comrades who worked with our revered Comrade Lin for a long time were also invited to attend the meeting.

XIZANG DECISION ON IMPROVING PARTY SPIRIT, DISCIPLINE

HK220707 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 18 Mar 86

["Text" of 17 March Xizang Regional CPC Committee's 10-point decision on strengthening party spirit, correcting party style, and enforcing party discipline]

[Text] The key to correcting party style lies in leadership organs and leading cadres taking the lead in setting an example. With a view to further strengthening party spirit, correcting party style, enforcing party discipline, and realizing a fundamental turn for the better in party style as soon as possible, a 10-point decision on correcting party style by party member cadres at the couny level and above states:

1. It is necessary to resolutely keep in line ideologically and politically with the CPC Central Committee, to correctly implement the party's line, principles, and policies in conjunction with Xizang's realities, and to uphold the solemnity of the party's policies. Regarding those problems which have a bearing on the overall situation, we must not evade unified principles and do what suits ourselves.

2. It is essential that we fervently love the people of Xizang, do everything for the richness of people of Xizang and the prosperity of the Xizang cause, and wholeheartedly serve the people of Xizang. In all our work, proceeding from Xizang's realities, we must really overcome bureaucratism, improve our leadership style, enhance our work efficiency, conduct deepgoing investigation and study, look into the will of the people, understand the practical situation, indulge in less idle talk, and do more practical work. Every unit must do some practical and good deeds for the masses every year.

3. We must be honest in performing our official duties and struggle hard. People are strictly prohibited from using public funds to give dinners and gifts. Necessary entertainment in united front work, foreign affairs activities, and economic and business contacts must be carried out in accordance with the regulations of the regional CPC Committee and regional people's government. Leading cadres are strictly prohibited from extorting and receiving bribes from any unit and individual. We are not allowed to take advantage of our functions and powers to occupy more residential houses than stipulated inside and outside the region or to build private houses, and no one is allowed to use public funds or public property for such purposes. As for the living expenses and remuneration of cadres of middle and higher ranks, we must resolutely enforce the relevant regulations of the general offices of the regional CPC Committee and regional government. We are not allowed to have more than the standard, and we must not seek personal privileges. Discipline inspection departments at all levels must supervise enforcement of the regulations. Without approval, leading cadres are not allowed to name and transfer cadres, staff members, and workers from their original places and units to work with them.

4. It is imperative that we teach children and relatives to show discipline and abide by the law. As for family members children, relatives, and friends who want to transfer to better schools, join the party, change registered permanent residence, be promoted to posts and grades, or go abroad, only their respective units can deal with such cases in accordance with policy. Individuals are not allowed to meddle in such cases and seek personal privileges.

All children and spouses of leading cadres at and above the county level are not allowed to engage in commerce or run enterprises. Those who violate the regulations must correct this situation within a specified period. Those who do not stop doing what is prohibited and who cling obstinately to their course must be dealt with severely.

5. It is necessary to adhere to the cadre policy of appointing people according to their political integrity and ability. In promoting and appointing cadres, we must adhere to the standard of four transformations, to the mass line, and to collective [words indistinct]. No one is allowed to stress personal feelings rather than party spirit, to stress relationships rather than principles, or to look after those who have connections and [words indistinct]. No individual can have the final say.

6. Leading cadres who go to the interior to attend meetings, to study, to conduct official business, and to take leave must return to Xizang on schedule. Those who do not return after the specified period will have their wages reduced or payment of wages stopped, whichever is appropriate. When attending a meeting, studying, or taking a business trip, no one is allowed to take detours or unauthorized side-trips in order to use public funds to travel from place to place enjoying the beauties of nature. Offenders must return all public funds spent in accordance with the principle that whoever makes the decision must pay. Going to the interior to consult a doctor or to get medical treatment requires certification by a hospital and apporval by higher levels. People who have only mild disorders are not allowed to have long rests and to stay in the interior for long periods of time.

7. No one is allowed to take advantage of one's position or power to violate financial and economic discipline and to indiscriminately issue all kinds of bonuses, subsidies, and materials. Without the approval of the government functional departments concerned, no unit is allowed to use public funds to build residential houses inside and outside the region. In addition to having the responsibility of the offenders investigated and affixed, they must be responsible for all economic losses. Leading cadres at all levels must study how to manage their affairs and the money matters and stress economic results. Those who pursue bureaucratism, who are irresponsible, who neglect their duties, and who cause serious economic losses and waste must be dealt with in accordance with party discipline and state laws.

8. It is essential that we strictly guard party and state secrets. No one shall divulge party secrets, including economic intelligence, internal information, and confidential documents, to one's children, relatives, friends, or people who should not know such secrets. In foreign affairs activities, we must strictly observe foreign affairs discipline and not impair state interests, the state's reputation, and our reputation.

9. It is necessary to adhere to party principles. Pursuing political liberalism is not allowed. Words which are not beneficial to stability and unity must not be uttered. Activities which are not advantageous to stability and unity must not be undertaken. People who have complaints about any leading members and upper-level leaders must fully state their views at a party meeting or exchange their views at heart-to-heart talks. No one is allowed to make casual comments on any occasion. We must seriously investigate and deal with tale-tellers and deliberate slanderers. We must be bold in grasping and dealing with all unhealthy trends and evil practices. We must not evade contradictions and fear offending others. We must justly and forcefully wage a resolute struggle against unhealthy trends and all wrong tendencies. It is not permissible to intercede on behalf of people who make mistakes or to absolve criminals from their guilt.

10. Leading cadres must implement the system of personal responsibility for party style, grasp their work at their levels, be responsible for their work at their levels, and conduct investigation at their levels. CPC committees and party groups must be responsible for fully grasping the party style of their Standing Committee members, their discipline inspection committee members and members of party groups, and for fully grasping the party style of cadres and units at the county level under their jurisdiction. Meetings on organizational activities must be held twice a year to inspect the situation in implementing the system of responsibility for party style. In conjunction with the large-scale inspection of party style, we must sum up experiences in correcting party style every year.

The above-mentioned 10 points must be conscientiously observed by leading cadres at the county level and above, especially cadres of middle and higher grades. They must seriously implement them in their practical work and accept the supervision of all faithful and honest Communist Party members and the people of all nationalities. Offenders must be severely dealt with and not be tolerated.

SICHUAN'S YANG RUDAI STRESSES SOLVING ECONOMIC PROBLEMS

HK230323 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Excerpts] According to SICHUAN RIBAO, provincial CPC Committee Secretary Yang Rudai pointed out during a recent investigation and study in eastern and southern Sichuan that at present the leading cadres of all localities and departments must tangibly improve their work style and methods, go to the frontline of production, study problems in economic work, and solve them one by one, so as to ensure sustained and steady development of industrial and agricultural production.

From 2 to 18 March, Comrade Yang Rudai visited Yibin, Luzhou, Neijiang, Suining, and Mianyang to investigate and study the current situation in the economy and in grass-roots party rectification.

Comrade Yang Rudai said: The general economic situation is good at present. The spring-harvested crops are growing well. However, industrial production development is very uneven. In some places output in January and February showed relatively big increases over the same period of last year, but in most places the increase was very small, and in some places production actually declined. This is the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. We must maintain a corresponding growth rate.

While investigating a number of large hilly countries, Comrade Yang Rudai pointed out: Sichuan has more than 20 large counties with populations of over 1 million. Only a few are in the basin and mountain areas; most are in hilly areas. The development of the economy in these large counties occupies an extremely important position in economic development in the hilly areas and indeed in the whole province. Hence, our rural work must currently be focused on the hilly areas. In grasping these areas, we must first grasp these large counties.

Comrade Yang Rudai stressed in light of current economic conditions and problems in grass-roots party rectification that apart from abuse of power and economic problems, the main factors in bad party style are problems of bureaucratic work style. Hence it is essential to improve work style and brace spirits. The leading cadres must go down to the factories and rural areas to exercise face-to-face leadership.

NEI MONGGOL: MAJOR ECONOMIC CASE EXPOSED IN HOHHOT

SK241302 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Text] The regional Discipline Inspection Commission, together with the public security departments, recently investigated and seriously handled a major case involving reselling camel hair at a higher profit. Eight criminals were arrested in line with the law. This case involved 15 enterprises and more than 80 persons, including state officials; cheating involving 6.1 million yuan of funds from state enterprises; bribery involving nearly 10,000 yuan; corruption involving more than 100,000 yuan; and more than 140,000 yuan of illegal gains for individuals.

According to the relevant departments' investigations, in early November 1984, the Jining Fine Hair Plant sold 154.6 tons of stockpiled camel hair that was not up to export standards at reduced prices. The state-run Hohhot native products general firm sold this camel hair to such retail departments as the Hohhot educated youths' (Fanhua) trading company and the Hohhot state-run commission shop at an average price of 7.57 yuan per kg. After being transported back to Hohhot, this camel hair was resold to the Nei Monggol Qinghua Company for regulating surplus materials and materials in short supply at an average price of 8.17 yuan per kg. This company was a civilian company with only 8,000 yuan of funds but its registered funds were 100,000 yuan. This company's manager was (Meng Qingling), the former retired party-member cadre of the Hohhot (Riyi) construction company, and its deputy manager was (Bian Zhengwu), a resigned party-member cadre of the supply and marketing section of the Hohhot No 2 pharmaceutical plant. In order to purchase the camel hair, this company sought a bank loan of 300,000 yuan through fraudulent and deceptive means, such as establishing contacts with someone, sending gifts, and giving bribes and benefits. In addition, it also fraudulently appropriated 948,000 yuan of funds from the Nei Monggol native products and animal by-products import and export company and the Nei Monggol No 4 woolen textile plant. Through the deception of signing a false contract, it also sought a loan of more than 370,000 yuan from the civil affairs and social welfare plant of Qinxian County in Shanxi Province. Thus, it sought a total of 1.623 million yuan through fraud and deception. After purchasing the camel hair, this company lied by saying that the total amount of the product was 165 tons and resold it to the Yinchuan (Huayun) trading company at a price of 11.4 yuan per kg on 13 November 1984, thereby earning a profit of 480,000 yuan. The (Huayun) trading company did not have enough money to pay for the merchandise, so it cooperated with party-member cadre (Liu Guorui), a responsible person of the labor and service company of the Nei Monggol CPC Committee organ, in fraudulently seeking a bank loan of 1.75 million yuan in the name of the labor and service company under the terms of sharing the profits between the two parties. The (Huayun) trading company used the loan to pay for the merchandise. After that, they resold the merchandise to the labor and service company of the Haibowan office of the Wuhai City People's Bank at a price of 12.4 yuan per kg. Both parties earned a total of some 270,000 yuan. On 7 January 1985 the labor and service company of the Haibowan office of the Wuhai City People's Bank agan resold the merchandise at an added price. In a little more than 2 months, this camel hair was sold from Jining, passed on to the local trading company in Ulanqab League through eight intermediate links under various purchase and sales contracts, and then returned to Jining. The price was raised from 7.57 yuan to 13.7 yuan per kg. Such an activity of reselling camel hair at a higher profit was discovered by the Hohhot pricing department at the end of November 1984 and the merchandise was sealed and confiscated.

However, due to the fact that (Ye Jingguo), deputy section chief of the pricing department, received a bribe of 1,500 yuan, the confiscated camel hair was immediately returned to the owner. As a result, the reselling camel hair at a higher profit continued to go unchecked. During this activity, more than 20 persons gained benefits, of whom 6 persons gained more than 10,000 yuan. Some of the companies that participated in the activity were guilty of serious tax evasion and some of the principal responsible persons appropriated public funds and joined hands with one another in corruption, of whom four persons embezzled more than 10,000 yuan, and another four embezzled 5,000 to 8,000 yuan.

The regional CPC Committee has attached great importance to investigating and handling this case and the principal responsible comrades have personally heard reports and given guidance on several occasions. The regional Discipline Inspection Commission organized forces to investigate the case and clarify the facts after a period of more than 10 months. The public security department arrested, in line with the law, eight persons including (Meng Qingling); (Liu Guorui); (Liu Wenhui), a party-member cadre of the Wuhai grain depot; and (Song Yuan), a cadre of the Nei Monggol No 4 woolen textile plant. Other persons involved are being investigated and dealt with by the procuratorial organs. (Yan Guohua), a cadre of the construction bureau of the Hohhot suburban areas; (Wang Yang), a cadre of the Nei Monggol radio and television art ensemble; and three other cadres who also received benefits were given party or administrative disciplinary sanctions. Other persons involved were given strict punishment by the units to which they belonged. All the illegal gains were recalled.

Discipline Inspection Commission Comments

[Text] The regional Discipline Inspection Commission strictly handled a serious economic case and issued a comment pointing out that any person who dares to defy the law and to corrupt the party style and the general mood of society will escape punishment in line with the party's discipline and the state law.

The comment states: The problems revealed in the case merit our deep consideration. The answers are clear with regard to the questions of why so many party-member cadres were involved in the case, and some of them even became guilty persons condemned by the people; why the arch-criminal of the case was a veteran party-member cadre; and why the criminals could easily obtain a great amount of loans and continue their criminal activity. One reason is that some of our party-member cadres have forgotten all moral principles at the sight of profits under the new situation of opening to the outside world and enlivening the economy. They have lost the party spirit that a Communist Party member should have, and have absolutely run counter to the purpose and guiding principles of the party. Some departments, particularly some operational departments, have failed to follow regulations, and a small number of persons have abused their positions and power or the favorable conditions provided by their jobs to seek personal gains; some have even participated in illegal criminal activities or helped evil persons to engage in evil. Another reason is that the ruled and regulations were imperfect, thus leaving loopholes for the criminals to exploit. Comrade Xiaoping once pointed out: In checking malpractices, we should depend mainly on two methods -- the first is education, and the second is law. All economic offenses and criminal activities should be strictly dealt with and should not be treated leniently. Those who receive bribes, pervert the law, and give the green light to criminals, regardless of who they are and which units they belong to, must be investigated and dealt with.

Those companies that have engaged in speculation and fraudulence must be resolutely banned. In addition, the relevant departments should strengthen management, establish and improve rules and regulations, close loopholes, and never allow criminals to seek opportunity to commit crimes.

The comment of the regional Discipline Inspection Commission also states: The leading organs and cadres at all levels should take the lead in rectifying party style, dare to tackle difficult cases, and exert real efforts and do solid work in the course of grasping major and appalling cases and checking malpractices. The party organizations at all levels should strengthen education for party members, enhance their awareness of party spirit and their sense of the legal system, strengthen their ability to resist the decadent corrosive influence of capitalist ideas, and fundamentally improve party style. Only by so doing can we achieve a fundamental turn for the better in party style within a short period of time and guarantee a smooth advance in reforms and in building the two civilizations.

SHANXI LEADERS MEET 'GOOD SONS AND DAUGHTERS' REPORT GROUP

HK230225 Taiyuan Shanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Excerpts] On the afternoon of 22 March, leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee and government including Li Ligong, Wang Jiangong, and Bai Qingcai held a 3-hour forum with the provincial "good sons and daughters are found everywhere" report group. Comrade Li Ligong said: We must care for and cherish the good sons and daughters from Beijing and Tianjin who are working in Shanxi and do everything possible to solve their practical difficulties and support them in making still more contributions at their work posts.

Comrade Bai Qingcai said: You have come from big cities to poor areas in Shanxi. You have undergone such frustrations over so many years. This was not at all easy for you. However, you have overcome the difficulties, steeled yourselves, and made contributions to the cause of Shanxi's construction. You have set good examples.

On behalf of the provincial CPC Committee, Comrade Li Ligong called on the party and government leaders throughout the province to care for and cherish these young people from Beijing and Tianjin and immediately solve, if possible, the difficulties in their daily life. Where such difficulties cannot be solved for the time being, it is necessary to explain things to these young people and also create conditions for solving them.

The members of the report group pledged not to disappoint the earnest hopes of the people of Beijing and Tianjin and the people in Shanxi, their second home province. They would unite the former Beijing and Tianjin young people now working in Shanxi to stride ahead along the correct path of going up to the mountains and down to the countryside. They would strive to score new achievements to report to the CPC Central committee and the people of the province.

HEILONGJIANG SECRETARY AT PARTY RECTIFICATION MEETING

SK230457 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Text] On the morning of 22 March, the Party Rectification Guidance Commission of the provincial CPC Committee held its 14th meeting to hear the report on current party rectification work and the report on the investigation of the three types of persons. Comrade Sun Weiben, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, delivered a speech on current party rectification work.

The meeting pointed out: At present, party rectification at the county and township levels must be conducted well from start to finish, without any slackness. In carrying out party rectification and investigating the three types of persons, we should never proceed from a fine start but end with a poor finish. The ongoing party rectification at the county and township levels should be integrated with spring plowing and production. Party rectification and spring plowing should promote each other. Party rectification should promote the fulfillment of the primary task -- restore production immediately after the disasters. All localities should set appropriate standards, rather than demanding uniformity, for party rectification and spring plowing. Party rectification should also be integrated with the correction of unhealthy trends so that it can promote the improvement of social conduct in general. Party rectification should also be integrated with the struggle against economic crimes. A clear demarcation line should be drawn between economic crimes and unhealthy trends. For party rectification at the county level, different guidance should be given for different cases. In conducting party rectification at or below the township level, specific guidance is necessary.

On the afternoon of 22 March, the Party Rectification Guidance Commission of the provincial CPC Committee held a telephone conference to relay the guidelines of the 14th meeting of its Party Rectification Guidance Commission. Liu Chengguo, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and vice chairman of the provincial Party Rectification Guidance Commission, delivered a speech at the conference.

Thus far, the organs covered by county- and district-level party rectification throughout the province have entered an advanced stage of party rectification, and 80 percent of counties and districts are expected to basically complete their party rectification drive by the end of March.

The conference pointed out: Over the past 8 months, county-level party rectification has developed soundly, and marked results have been achieved in this regard. Various county-level organs have continuously focused their efforts on grasping education in party spirit, and have given prominence to rectifying party style. In particular, after the convocation of the provincial conference on county-level party rectification last October, all localities have given prominence to checking such problems as wanton issuance of bonuses, illegal building and buying of houses, embezzlement, taking bribes, fraud, and abuse of power for personal gain. As a result, not only a large number of unhealthy trends have been ferreted out and corrected, but also a large number of good persons and good deeds in resisting unhealthy trends have emerged. Most units have regarded the investigation and handling of cases as an important point of party rectification, thus greatly promoting the improvement of party style and social conduct.

The conference demanded: County- and district-level party rectification should be carried out well from start to finish. Efforts should also be made to grasp party rectification among enterprises and establishments at the county level.

In carrying out county-level party rectification, attention should be paid to solving the following five problems: 1) extravagant wining and dining, gift giving, and wanton issuance of cash and materials; 2) arbitrary use of public funds, public property, and peasants' land; 3) fraud and abuse of power for personal gain; 4) adding burdens to peasants under all sorts of pretexts; and 5) embezzlement, taking bribes, and blackmail. In correcting unhealthy trends, we should seek truth from facts, adhere to principles, and pay attention to policies. Meanwhile, we should conscientiously implement the 1986 Document No 1 of the central authorities, and promote rural reform and economic development with party rectification. Various prefectural, city, and county CPC committees should also make proper preparations for party rectification to be conducted among urban neighborhoods, enterprises, and establishments, and strive to enable most urban grass-roots units to begin their party rectification work in June.

HEILONGJIANG CRACKS GRAIN DEPOT EMBEZZLEMENT CASE

SK240406 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 23 Mar 86

[Text] Recently, the province cracked an embezzlement clique, which has committed crimes mainly through forging receipts, at the (Haibei) grain depot in Hailun County. The money involved in this embezzlement case amounted to 107,000 yuan. At present, more than 10 criminals involved in this case have been arrested in accordance with the law, and more than 75,000 yuan of illicit money has been recovered.

According to the investigation, this case involved 7 laboratory technicians, 17 [word indistinct] and 4 (?inspectors) of this grain depot. Since 1984, this criminal clique has illegally gained a huge sum of cash when receiving grain by stealing those receipts on which a seal of payment was affixed and by forging recepits for grain received. From 9 to 19 October 1985 alone, this clique committed crimes on 28 occasions and embezzled 42,000 yuan by means of these false receipts.

JILIN: VETERAN CADRE CONCERN OVER PARTY STYLE URGED

SK220531 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] At a provincial conference on discipline inspection work held on 21 March, Song Jiehan, member of the Central Dicipline Inspection Commission, called on all veteran party members and cadres to show concern over party style and discipline inspection work and to do their best in contributing to fundamentally improving party style.

After relaying the guidelines of the seventh plenary session of the Central Discipline Inspection Commission to all discipline inspection cadres participating in the conference, Comrade Song Jiehan, in his capacity as veteran party member and cadre, set forth the following three expectations for the rectification of party style. First, we should be determined to grasp the the rectification of party style in a protracted manner and should not stop until we reach our goal. Second, rectification of party style should begin with leading cadres and organs at all levels, and each level should set an example for the next lower level. And third, veteran party members and cadres should attach importance to the rectification of party style, and should actually set examples for others.

With regard to the issue that veteran party members and cadres should set examples for others, Comrade Song Jiehan said earnestly: Our veteran cadres, in particular the veteran cadres at or above the departmental level, have all been trained and edcuated by the party for a long time, have withstood many tests, and have in turn made many contributions to the party. Now, in response to the party's calls, some old cadres have made another contribution to the party's call, some old cadres have made another contribution to the party cause by voluntarily stepping down from their leading posts and giving their posts to a group of young and middle-aged cadres who are politically and professionally sound. This is a very glorious thing.

However, just as Comrade Chen Yun said, the stepping down from and retiring from the leading posts should have nothing to do with the work of setting examples in showing concern over party style and party discipline and in playing a supervisory role in party affairs, and every party member, as long he is alive, should always stand in the frontline. In other words, after stepping down from the leading posts, all veteran party members and cadres should continue to take the lead in carrying forward the party's fine tradition, set examples in implementing the relevant stipulations of the central authorities and the provincial CPC Committee concerning the rectification of party style, strive to safeguard the prestige of the party, and sincerely help CPC committees at all levels and leading bodies of various relevant departments achieve success in rectifying party styel. In fact, many of our veteran comrades have done so. I hope that even more veteran comrades will do so in a still better manner.

Comrade Song Jiehan also stressed: Those veteran comrades who had worked for various departments of CPC committees, such as the organizational, propaganda, discipline inspection, and personnel departments, should earnestly help CPC committees and discipline inspection departments at all levels by doing what they can, on condition that they are in good health and that the work on a voluntary basis. Comrade Song Jiehan also called on veteran party members and cadres, high-ranking cadres in particular, to set a good example in teaching their children in line with the demands of Chen Yun. In daily life, they should prevent their children from seeking personal privileges, which will be harmful to their growth. They should never allow their children to rely on relatives in seeking more power and private gains and in becoming special figures. Comrade Song Jiehan hoped that all veteran comrades will guard against and pay attention to this issue, and successfully bring up and educate their children so that their children will actually become the successors to the revolutionary cause.

JILIN: NEIGHBORHOOD PARTY RECTIFICATION FORUM HELD

The forum maintained: The neighborhood work is the foundation for urban work as well as a bridge through which the party and the state link themselves with the masses. Success or failure in the neighborhood work has a direct bearing on the building of spiritual and material civilizations in the urban areas and on the secure and happy lives of thousands upon thousands of households. Therefore, CPC committees at all levels should make great efforts to grasp neighborhood party rectification in order to make the current neighborhood party rectification become a turning point for achieving success in the neighborhood work and to promote the neighborhood work to a new level.

The forum pointed out: The major problems which should be solved during neighborhood party rectification are as follows:

1. Through penetrating education on the party's purpose, we should actually correct the unhealthy trend of abusing one's power for personal gain, and emphatically prevent the neighborhood cadres from abusing their powers to seek personal gain, asking enterprises for money, and encroaching on the interests of enterprises. We should fully carry forward democracy, take the mass line, extensively solicit criticism and opinions from various fields inside and outside the party, conduct conscientious investigation, and conduct rectification and correction simultaneously.

2. We should further straighten out the ideology guiding neighborhood work, define the tasks for neighborhood work, and actually solve the universal problem of stressing economic work to the neglect of the building of spiritual civilization and neighborhood engineering projects, so that we can actually gear the neighborhood work to simultaneously grasping the two civilizations and strengthening neighborhood engineering and can vigorously encourage the neighborhood enterprises to serve the society, residents, and the modernization of the urban areas.

3. We should adopt effective measures to strengthen the ideological and organizational construction of the neighborhood party organizations, enhance the fighting capacity of the neighborhood party organizations, and give full play to the vanguard and exemplary role of party members. In addition, we should strengthen the management of party members retired from neighborhood organizations, and give play to their role in building the neighborhood engineering projects.

The forum also stressed: CPC committees at all levels should strengthen their leadership over neighborhood party rectification, and establish and improve the responsibility system for guiding the party rectification work. Various district CPC committees should conduct strict investigations at all stages of neighborhood party rectification, and adhere to high quality and standards. In the course of party rectification, we should accelerate the reform of the neighborhood management system, establish necessary rules and regulations, and conscientiously investigate and deal with the major and appalling cases. Meticulous guidance should be given to the party rectification of various neighborhood committees and neighborhood-run enterprises. Through party rectification, we should strive to build the neighborhood party organizations at all levels into a powerful fighting force which is sound in the ideological and political lines and upright and united in work style, and which wholeheartedly serves the people.

LIAONING SECRETARY ADDRESSES PEOPLE'S CONGRESS

SK220353 Shenyang Liaoning Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Excerpt] The second provincial meeting to exchange experience in carrying out People's Congress work in cities, counties, and districts ended on the morning of 21 March. Li Guixian, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee; Quan Shuren, governor; and Zhang Zhengde, chairman of the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee, delivered speeches at the meeting, stressing that the CPC committees at all levels should strengthen leadership over the work of the people's congresses, the governments at all levels should voluntarily receive supervision from the people's congresses, and the people's congresses at all levels should exercise supervisory power in line with the law.

After fully affirming the work done by the People's Congress at all levels throughout the province in the past 6 years, Li Guixian, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, called on the various city, county, and district CPC committees to further eliminate the leftist ideological influence, conscientiously overcome all sorts of confused ideas, realistically correct the erroneous trends of replacing the government's work with the party's work and replacing the law with one's power and words, and vigorously support the People's Congress standing committees in carrying out their work.

In referring to the work of strengthening democracy and the legal system, he said: Democracy can be made into a legal system through the efforts of the people's congresses and their standing committees. Strengthening the work of the People's Congress standing committees and their building is the key to strengthening democracy and the legal system. One of the important reasons for some districts' failure in fully displaying their role as the organs of state power is that their CPC committees have failed to fully use the state situation and that they have taken the party's views as the will of the state and turned them into the voluntary action of the people. Some issues which should be discussed and decided by the People's Congress standing committees have been directly handled by the governments or in CPC committees. Such a way of doing things is not in line with the demands of the Constitution and law and is detrimental to strengthening and improving the party's leadership. Therefore, the governments, people's courts, and procuratorates should carry out their own duties and responsibilities. It is necessary to gradually change the practice of mainly depending on policies while managing things into one which combines both policies and laws while doing things.

In his speech, Li Guixian also stressed in particular that efforts should be made to energetically strengthening the economic legislative work. He said: One of the important tasks of the economic structural reform is to apply economic and legal means to controlling and readjusting the operations of economic activities. This calls for efforts to strengthen the economic legislative work on the one hand and to strengthen the supervisory and examination work in the course of implementing and enforcing the economic laws on the other so that there are laws which the people must strictly follow and enforce.

In his speech, Governor Quan Shuren stressed that the governments at all levels should further enhance their understanding of the nature, status, and role of the work of the people's congresses, properly handle the relationship between the executive organs and the power organs, strengthen the sense of the legal system, voluntarily receive supervision from the people's congresses, conscientiously listen to the views and demands of the deputies, and strive to improve government work.

XINJIANG ADVISORY COMMITTEE HOLDS PLENARY SESSION

HK220645 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Text] The regional Advisory Commission held its seventh plenary session today to make arrangements for implementing the spirit of the enlarged seventh plenary session of the third regional CPC Committee. Qi Guo, vice chairman of the regional Advisory Commission, presided over the session. Wang Enmao, chairman of the regional Advisory Commission, and Bai Chengming, vice chairman of the regional Advisory Commission, spoke at the session.

The session reviewed the work of the committee in 1985 and put forth suggestions on properly carrying out this year's work according to the spirit of the enlarged seventh plenary session of the third regional CPC Committee.

The session stressed that in carrying out this year's work, the regional Advisory Commission, in addition to straightening out its own party style in accordance with the spirit of the seventh enlarged session of the third regional CPC Committee, must particularly help and support the regional CPC Committee in straightening out the party style of the entire region. Advisory committees must set a good example in straightening out party style and take the lead in carrying forward the party's fine traditions. Meanwhile members of the advisory committees must properly educate their sons, daughters, and relatives; conduct in-depth study and investigation; keep abreast of the new situation; study new problems; act as good advisers to CPC committees; serve the building of two civilizations in the region even better; and contribute to bringing about a basic turn for the better in party style of regional organs and marked improvement of party style in the whole region this year and to further developing the excellent situation in the region.

XINJIANG LEADERS VOLUNTARILY PLANT TREES

HK140931 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 12 Mar 86

[Text] It was Arbor Day today. Leaders of the regional party, government, and Army, and soldiers and people of all nationalities in Turpan took part in the all-people voluntary tree-planting activities. It was fine in Turpan today. Early in the morning, some 30,000 soldiers and people of all nationalities in Turpan City jubilantly came, with tools in their hands, to the spots where they would work and took part in the voluntary tree-planting activities.

At 0730 Urumqi time, leading comrades of the regional party and government, of the regional CPPCC Committee, of Xinjiang Military District, and of the Production and Construction Corps, including Wang Enmao, Tomur Dawamat, Janabil, Smudong Niyazi, Zhang Sixue, Ismail Yashengnuofu, Liu Haiqing, (Tang Baocai), and Chen Shi; and responsible persons of regional departments, committees, bureaus concerned and mass organizations, came energetically to Qingnian Road, Turpan City, bringing tools with them, and took part in the voluntary tree-planting activities.

Wang Enmao, chairman of the regional Advisory Commission, who had come to Turpan City to take part in the voluntary tree-planting activities for 5 years, was exceptionally happy today. The grapes which he and leading comrades, including Tomur Dawamat, personally planted on Arbor Day last year are now growing very well. Up to today, Turpan City had planted some 300,000 trees on a voluntary basis.

FOREIGN MINISTRY SPOKESMAN HOLDS WEEKLY BRIEFING

Condemns U.S. Action in Libya

OW260758 Beijing XINHUA in English 0753 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 26 (XINHUA) -- China today condemned the recent attack of the United States on Libya, calling it a violation of norms governing international relations.

Speaking at a weekly press briefing here this afternoon, a spokesman for the Chinese Foreign Ministry said that since the beginning of this year, the U.S. Navy has conducted frequent military manoeuvres in the waters near Libya, subjecting Libya to military threat. He said that this has aggravated the tension in the Mediterranean. The Chinese Government expresses deep concern over this development. He noted that recently the United States made an attack on the territory of Libya, which is a sovereign state. "This is in violation of the norms governing international realtions. It has been the Chinese Government's consistent position to oppose and condemn any act that violates the norms of international relations and encroaches upon the territory and sovereignty of other countries," he added.

Condemns SRV Rejection

OW260912 Beijing XINHUA in English 0859 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 26 (XINHUA) -- A Foreign Ministry spokesman said here today that the "negotiations" and "dialogue" advertized by the Vietnamese authorities on Kampuchean question were completely hypocritical. He said that they "are nothing but political tricks in support of their military occupation of Kampuchea."

He made the remarks at today's weekly news briefing while answering some journalists' questions on Vietnam's rejection of eight-point proposal by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea which was a "farce directed by Beijing". The spokesman said that since the proposal by the Coalition government of the Democratic Kampuchea on a political settlement of the question of Kampuchea was issued, it had won wide approval and support from the international community and public opinion. They all held the view that the proposal was fair, reasonable and magnanimous and flexible, that it suggested a practical approach to a political settlement of the question of Kampuchea, that it conformed to the interests and desires of the Kampuchean people, the Vietnamese people and the people of this region and that it would help relax the situation in Southeast Asia and maintain peace and stability in the Asia-Pacific region, he added.

The spokesman declared "as the Chinese Government has all along stood for a fair and reasonable settlement of the question of Kampuchea, it is a matter of course that we support this highly sincere proposal by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea." He said that the Vietnam authorities had not only unreasonablely rejected the proposal by Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, but also slandered and attacked China. "This only shows that the 'negotiations' and 'dialogue' advertized by them are completely hypocritical and are nothing but political tricks in support of their military occupation of Kampuchea," he stated.

Greek Premier To Visit

OW260910 Beijing XINHUA in English 0857 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 26 (XINHUA) -- A Foreign Ministry spokesman announced here today that at the invitation of Premier Zhao Ziyang, Andreas Papandreou, prime minister of the Republic of Greece, will pay an official visit to China from April 7 to 11.

He said since the establishment of diplomatic ties between China and Greece, trade relations have expanded and trade volume increased from 1.6 million U.S. dollars in 1973 to 85.55 million U.S. dollars in 1985.

PRC PRESENTS VIEW ON INTERNATIONAL SEABED MANAGEMENT

HK251550 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 20 Mar 86 p 6

[Special Dispatch by Yu Yuancheng: "PRC Representative Speaks at the Fourth Meeting of The Preparatory Committee of the UN Agency for International Seabed Management Held in Jamaica"]

[Text] Kingston, 18 March -- The fourth meeting of the preparatory committee of the UN Agency for International Seabed Management and International Maritime Law court was held in the Jamaican capital of Kingston on the afternoon of 17 March. The Chinese delegation, headed by Yan Hongmo, director of the State Oceanography Bureau, and other delegations from more than 100 countries attended the meeting.

The seabed preparatory committee was established in accordance with the relevant resolutions adopted by the third meeting on maritime law. Its main task is to establish an agency for international seabed management and an international maritime law court. The maritime law convention was signed in December 1982 after the opening of Jamaica's Montego Bay. Some 159 countries and entities, including China, have since signed maritime law conventions, 26 of which have been approved. The Agency for International Seabed Management will be established 12 months after receiving 60 instruments of ratification or instruments of accession. Six meetings under three sessions [jie 1447] have been held by the seabed preparatory committee since its establishment in March 1983.

The meeting of the present session will continue to discuss the relevant rules and regulations on the establishment of the agency for seabed management and the maritime law court, and matters concerning the application for international seabed pioneering investment activities. Before applying to the seabed preparatory committee regarding their seabed exploration areas, some countries concerned, such as France, Japan, the Soviet Union, and others, have repeatedly consulted with each other about matters concerning the overlapping of their mining sities in the Pacific region. However, no satisfactory progress has yet been made. A great number of participating countries, Third World countries in particular, have demanded that they speed up the consultations so that they can register with the seabed preparatory committee in accordance with the stipulations contained in the maritime law convention. In their speeches delivered today, delegates of developing countries pointed out that international seabed resources should be exploited in the interests of the whole of mankind and everlasting peace. In his speech, head of the Chinese delegation Yan Hongmo stated that China would continue to uphold the principles contained in the martime law convention that international seabeds and resources are the common assets of mankind.

ASIA-AFRICA SOCIETY REVIVED WITH HUAN XIANG AS HEAD

[Text] The second meeting of representatives of the China Asia-Africa Society was held in Beijing from 10 to 12 March 1986. More than 100 experts, scholars, and persons from departments concerned with the study of Asia-African affairs throughout the country took part in the meeting. Comrade Wu Xueqian, member of the Politburo of the CPC Central Committee, state councillor, and concurrently foreign minister, was also present and warmly congratulated the China Asia-Africa Society for formally reviving its activities.

At the meeting, Comrade Huan Xiang, director of the State Council's International Affairs Research Center, made a report on the current international situation and the status and role of Asian and African nations in the diplomatic arena henceforth. Also making academic reports at the meeting were professors Ng Zhong [4780 1813] and Xue Mouhong [5641 6180 3163].

With the kind attention of Zhou Enlai, Chen Yi and other veteran proletarian revolutionaries, the China Asia-Africa Society was inaugurated on April 1962 in Beijing with Comrade Zhou Yang as its first president. The society had actively organized some academic activities but was forced to stop during the 10 years of turmoil. With the development of the situation and in order to further strengthen the study of Asian and African questions, as well as to launch academic exchanges both at home and abroad, the China Asia-Africa Society held an enlarged meeting of directors in Beijing on 7 May 1985 and decided to revive its activities after a 20-year interruption.

This meeting of representatives also revised the society's charter and defined its objective to promote China's research on the current political, economic, religious, and social situation in Asian and African nations and to develop academic exchanges both at home and abroad. The meeting elected 45 persons to form the second board of directors and unanimously elected Comrade Huan Xian as president, comrades Ji Xianlin, Lin Zhaonan, Lin Huaxuan, and Ge Ji as vice presidents, and Comrade Ke Di as secretary-general.

UN ASSISTS IN IMPROVEMENT OF RURAL WATER

OW220920 Beijing XINHUA in English 0904 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 22 (XINHUA) -- The United Nations world food programme will render economic assistance gratis to help improve drinking water facilities in China's rural areas, today's "HEALTH NEWS" reported. It will provide 78,700 tons of wheat, which is worth at 10.5 million U.S. dollars, for laborers in Liaoning and Shaanxi Provinces in northeast and northwest China, who are building 1,273 drinking water facilities in ten counties between 1985 and 1987 to ensure clear drinking water to 2.63 million rural people in these counties.

The first batch of 33,000 tons of wheat is expected to arrive in China before July this year.

IMPORT OF AUTOMOBILES, MINIBUSES TO BE LIMITED

OW221146 Beijing XINHUA in English 1136 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 22 (XINHUA) -- China will continue to import motor vehicles but will limit its purchases of automobiles and minibuses, the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade said here today.

The imports, supervised by the China National Machinery Import and Export Corporation, will add to the 500,000 motor vehicles brought into the country over the past 36 years. The ministry did not specify the import limits.

AMERICAN EXPERT ON U.S.-PRC COMMERCIAL PROBLEMS

OW251425 Beijing XINHUA in English 1331 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Hong Kong, March 25 (XINHUA)-- China's economy is basically sound and is the most promising, growing market of the United States.

The remark was made by Roger W. Sullivan, executive vice-president of the National Council for U.S.-China Trade of the United States, in his address to the American Chamber of Commerce in Hong Kong today.

Sullivan, who had been an advisor to former U.S. President Nixon and political advisor to the commander-in-chief of the U.S. Pacific Forces, explained in his speech that China's so-called foreign exchange crisis and protectionism are "less threatening to (U.S.-China) trade than they appear."

Concerning the foreign exchange problem, Sullivan said: "So far the Chinese have moved pragmatically and calmly to deal with the problem. They have sharply reduced imports of consumer durables, while allowing imports of essentials goods to continue." This will mean a slowing-down in the rate of growth of American exports to China but not a cutback, he said.

"China has the capability to diversify out of petroleum and textiles and to begin again to increase export earnings," he added.

Sullivan said that he opposes protectionism and "there is growing realization in the Congress that protectionism is not the answer to America's trade deficit." Sullivan stressed that the American export control system "remains a far greater obstacle than people realize."

Although an agreement had been reached in COCOM (Coordination Committee for Export to Communist Areas) last fall, yet "the technical guidelines published by the U.S. Government in December represent no significant liberalization over what could be licensed before," he said. The U.S. president determined in 1983 that China was a friendly, non-allied state, he stated, adding "unless this issue is given the high-level attention it requires to bring practice into line with policy, American companies will operate at a serious competitive disadvantage."

China is taking steps to improve its investment climate and has commissioned the World Bank to study China's investment regime and make recommendations. This is encouraging, he declared.

PRC CENTRAL BALLET GIVES WASHINGTON PERFORMANCE

OW260842 Beijing XINHUA in English 0823 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Washington, March 25 (XINHUA) -- The Central Ballet of China tonight entertained ballet goers here with performances combined with the Chinese folk dance styled "The New Year's Sacrifice" and the pure western ballet "Swan Lake." The first appearance of the Central Ballet of China in the U.S. capital is regarded by the American organizers as "a very special event for our cultural and diplomatic communities."

At the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts, the American Ballet goers seemed fascinated tonight when the men in "The New Year's Sacrifice," a ballet based on a short story written by famous Chinese writer Lu Xun, turned with arms and legs rotated like dueling eggbeaters and the women marched on point, fluttering green silk fans like huge lettuce leaves.

"The New Year's Sacrifice" is a four-act ballet depicting the tragic lot of Chinese women in feudal society. The second act was performed tonight.

The Central Ballet of China also performed "The Demon and the Mermaid," a dance based on a Chinese folk story; "Variations For Four," a modern piece, choreographed by a British, Sir Anton Dolin; and Act II of "Swan Lake."

The Central Ballet of China, which arrived in the U.S. on February 19 at the invitation of the Brooklyn Academy of Music, has visited New York City, Boston and the state of Florida before making its first appearance here. It will wind up its performance tour in Milwaukee on April 17 after 47 performances in 11 cities in the U.S.

Leading newspapers such as THE NEW YORK TIMES and THE WASHINGTON POST and magazines have published articles to praise the performances. Newsweek said, "a first-rate dance company is in the making." THE NEW YORK TIMES said American viewers have been overwhelmed by its performances.

The artistic advisor to the Central Ballet of China, Dai Ailian, who is the first to introduce western ballet into China, told XINHUA that she did not imagine Chinese Ballet would be so welcomed here in the United States. Each performance is an effort, and each performance is an improvement, she said.

Chinese Ambassador to the U.S. Han Xu, who attended tonight's performance, expressed his wish that the Central Ballet of China "will make contributions to the enhancement of the Sino-American cultural exchange and the friendship between the two peoples."

ZHAO ZIYANG MEETS WITH DAVID ROCKEFELLER

[Text] Beijing, March 24 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang met with David Rockefeller, former chairman of the board of the Chase Manhattan Bank of the U.S., and his party here this afternoon. Zhao praised Rockefeller for his contributions to the development of Sino-U.S. relations, especially in the field of trade.

Great changes have taken place in Sino-U.S. relations since Rockefeller's first visit to China in 1973, but some obstacles and problems remain to be solved, he said. He hoped that both sides will continue to work for the incessant development of relations between the two countries. Although advances have been made in Sino-U.S. economic trade and technological cooperations, he said, there are still great potentials.

Sharing Zhao's view, Rockefeller said the Chase Manhattan Bank is willing to strengthen its ties with the Bank of China and other Chinese financial and banking institutions.

They also exchanged views on some international issues. The U.S. guests arrived here March 22 for a visit to China at the invitation of the Bank of China.

U.S. EXPERT NOTES GORBACHEV ON VERIFICATION

OW251107 Beijing XINHUA in English 1033 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Washington, March 24 (XINHUA) -- The recent statements by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev on verifying arms control agreements "show that the Soviet Union may well be serious about negotiating arms control agreements with the United States," a noted U.S. arms control expert said today. Dr. Betty Lall, an arms control expert and project director of a major council on economic priorities study on arms control and verification based in New York, said in a prepared speech that Gorbavhev in his January 15 proposal on arms control referred to verification eight times.

"We should take them up on their offer and test their willingness since verification is often a key obstacle in reaching such agreements," said Lall.

She added, "The question now is whether President Ronald Reagan will change U.S. policy and strive to reach agreement in one or more areas where Soviet policy on verification and related issues may have changed."

She said one way to test Soviet willingness might be to "take them up on their recent offer to consider additional verification measures for an unratified agreement limiting nuclear testing. Since verification techniques in the United States are a by-product of our intelligence gathering, they are very sophisticated indeed," said Lall, adding, "Our ability to verify Soviet actions should enable us to move forward in negotiations, should the President decide to do so."

The United States has insisted that verification is essential in reaching arms control agreements with the Soviet Union. The two sides have also charged each other with violations of the previous arms agreements reached between them.

U.S. RELEASES NEW REPORT ON SOVIET POWER

OW251734 Beijing XINHUA in English 1504 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Washington, March 25 (XINHUA) -- The United States today released the 156-page "Soviet Military Power" report which is said to have charted "the continuing growth and modernization of the USSR's Armed Forces." This is the fifth since it was first published in 1981.

According to the report, in the past five years, Soviet ground forces have been enlarged, and the concept for using a powerful ground force corps, "almost twice the size of tank divisions, is being evaluated for conducting large-scale, high-speed operations." The report said main battle tanks of the T-64, T-72 and T-80 series have been entering the Soviet operational inventory ofsome 52,600 tanks at a rate of 2,300 a year.

Since 1981, the Soviet Union has produced some 3,800 new fighter and interceptor aircraft for its air forces and 47 new major surface combatants for its expanding naval forces.

It said the number of deployed, mobile SS-20 launchers, with missiles carrying three MIRV warheads, has almost doubled from 250 in 1981 to 441 in 1985 -- representing an increase from 750 to 1,323 nuclear warheads -- with more warheads available on refire missiles, ready for delivery against targets in Europe, the Middle East, and Asia at ranges up to 5,000 kilometers.

The purpose of the United States to publish such a report is, said the report in its conclusion, that "we and our allies and friends must have a full and precise understanding of the Soviet challenge."

SOVIET UNION

PRAVDA EXPRESSES 'CONCERN' ON FRG DEFENSE PROPOSAL

OW242007 Beijing XINHUA in English 1526 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, March 24 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union is concerned by the possibility of a European Defence System put forth by the Federal Republic of Germany, according to a political commentary in today's PRAVDA. The commentary said that the system will bring instability to the European continent and open a "new road" in the arms race.

The system is only a complement to American President Ronald Reagan's Strategic Defence Initiative and will simply be a branch of the "star wars" program, the commentary said. It pointed out that the European Defence System, an idea put forward earlier last December by NATO leaders at a conference in Brussels, aroused no interest in Europeans but found friends in Washington. Some Europeans currently seem to think that only by developing its own "independent" space weapons can Europe be independent of the United States, but this idea is "hoodwinking" the people, the commentary said. PRAVDA said the space weapons, if deployed, will contribute to instability in Europe, lower the level of the safety of European countries and bring Europe closer to nuclear war.

TASS CALLS U.S. NUCLEAR TEST 'MILITARISTIC ACTION'

OW221935 Beijing XINHUA in English 1929 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, March 22 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet news agency TASS has denounced today's U.S. nuclear weapon test describing it as a "new militaristic action." The decision by the U.S. Government to conduct the test has touched off "a wave of indignation in the United States, including the Congress," TASS said. The U.S. nuclear test would destroy the prospects for drafting a treaty prohibiting all tests of nuclear weapons, TASS said.

Moscow had announced earlier this month that it would continue its test moratorium beyond the March 31 expiration date on condition that the U.S. carried out no tests.

MEETING ON BOUNDARY RIVERS CONCLUDED

OW211242 Beijing XINHUA in English 1229 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] Harbin, March 21 (XINHUA) -- The 28th session of the Sino-Soviet Joint Commission for Navigation on Boundary Rivers, which opened on March 5, ended here today.

Agreements were reached at the confab on most of the subjects discussed, which included channels and navigation security on the boundary rivers Heilongjiang, Wusulijiang and Ergune. Heads of the Chinese and Soviet delegations signed the minutes of the meeting. Both sides agreed to hold the 29th session of the commission in the Soviet Union, with the date left open for later discussion.

STUDENTS IN SEOUL CONTINUE DEMONSTRATIONS

OW212118 Beijing XINHUA in English 1911 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] Pyongyang, March 21 (XINHUA) -- Student demonstrations in Seoul entered the third day today despite suppression by the the authorities, KOREAN CENTRAL NEWS AGENCY reported today. About 500 students at Koryo University continued their demonstration to mourn the death of a worker who burned himself in protest against the South Korean authorities.

Meanwhile policemen were sent into the campus of the university to break demonstration there. They fired tear gas on the students who fought back with stones and molotov cocktails. On the same day, students at the South Korean Foreign Language College demonstrated to show their support for the "constitution amendment campaign" initiated by opposition parties. A number of students were reportedly arrested.

Demonstrations in Pusan

OW231848 Beijing XINHUA in English 1836 GMT 23 Mar 86

[Text] Pyongyang, March 23 (XINHUA) -- More than 20,000 South Koreans held an anti-"government" demonstration in Pusan City today, demanding abolition of the existing "Constitution" and the resignation of "President" Chon Tu-hwan. The demonstration was the largest since the major opposition New Korea Democratic Party (NKDP) and other dissident groups launched the campaign last month to collect 10 million signatures on a petition demanding changes in the existing "Constitution." At a rally earlier the NKDP announced the establishment of a Pusan branch of the campaign.

Kim Yung-sam, standing advisor of the NKDP and one of the co-chairmen of the Council for Promotion of Democracy, said at the rally that in order to end the dictatorship, people must "show their strength." Kim Tae-chung, the other co-chairman of the council, was prevented from going to Pusan by more than 150 policemen in Seoul. He strongly protested the police action, saying that he has the right to go to Pusan even if the authorities forbid him to attend political rallies.

PRC CHIEF PROCURATOR MEETS DPRK COUNTERPART

OW211345 Beijing XINHUA in English 1321 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 21 (XINHUA) -- Yang Yichen, procurator-general of the Supreme People's Procuratorate, met and hosted a banquet for a delegation from the Central Procurator's Office of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea led by Han Sang-kyu, procurator general of the office, here tonight. The Korean guests arrived here earlier today as guests of the Chinese procurator-general.

WANG ZHEN, WANG ZHAOGUO ATTEND KOMEITO BANQUET

OW241914 Beijing XINHUA in English 1831 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 24 (XINHUA) -- A delegation from the Japanese Komeito (Komei Party) led by its Secretary-General Junya Yano gave a return banquet here this evening. Among the guests were Wang Zhen, honorary president of the China-Japan Friendship Association, and Wang Zhaoguo, China's chief representative on the 21th Century Committee for China-Japan Friendship.

In their toasts, Yano and Wang Zhen held that the delegation's current visit has won great success. The delegation, the 14th sent by the Komei Party to China, will leave Beijing to tour Xian and Guangzhou Cities, and the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone.

PRC-JAPAN JOINT VENTURE WORKS TO MAKE PROFIT

OW240828 Beijing XINHUA in English 0651 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Text] Tianjin, March 24 (XINHUA) -- A Sino-Japanese joint venture has been helped out of sales difficulties and plans to double its output, according to the company officials.

The China Otsuka Pharmaceutical Comany, the first Sino-Japanese joint venture in China, began operation in may 1984. It produces intravenous injection solution according to the World Health Organization's GMP standards. But it ran into difficulties in selling its products in China and for a time its production almost stopped. The Chinese Government learned this and urged public health departments to help promote sales in China. The Tianjin Municipal Government asked the city's medical organizations to take the lead in using the products. At the same time, the company sent out people to more than 260 hospitals in major cities to acquaint them with the use of the company's product.

Soon the product found a foothold. By the end of last year, it had produced more than eight million bottles of the solution, and sold five million in China and more than two million in Japan. It plans to produce six million bottles this year and sell 3.5 million in China, but orders from Beijing, Shanghai and Tianjin alone already exceed 3.8 million. The company's profits averaged 10,000 yuan per worker and it had a surplus of foreign exchange, the company's Chinese manager, Nie Yuhe, said. Now the product is selling well in all the provinces and autonomous regions except Tibet and Taiwan, he said. Sales in Japan are also going smoothly. He told XINHUA that the board of directors of the company was to meet in Japan at the end of this month to discuss the second-phase project -- to double its annual output to 12 million bottles -- as set out in the joint-venture contract.

DENG LIQUN, WANG ZHEN HONOR JAPANESE EXPERT

[Text] Beijing, March 22 (XINHUA) -- A seventy-people reception was given here this evening to mark the 85 birthday of Japanese expert Yokokawa Jiro who is now employed by the "CHINA PICTORIAL". Attending the celebration were Deng Liqun, member of the Secretariat of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, and Wang Zhen, honorary president of the China-Japan Friendship Association.

Deng and Wang thanked Yokokawa Jiro for the good things he has done for the Chinese people over the past 40 years and wished him a long life. According to Xing Yan, acting director of the PICTORIAL, Yokokawa Jiro came to China in 1936. Since he took part in China's revolution in the 1940s, he has gone through thick and thin with the Chinese people and made outstanding contributions to the Chinese revolution and construction. Xing also spoke highly of his contribution in promoting the friendship between the Chinese and Japanese peoples.

LIAOWANG ON CHINESE FINANCIAL GROUPS IN HONG KONG

HK241424 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No. 10, 10 Mar 86 p 26

[Article by Ou Yueying and Wang Yuanjing "The Mission of the Chinese Financial Groups in Hong Kong During Its 'Transitional Period' -- An Interview With Tong Zhiguang, General Manager of the China Resources Group"]

[Text] During the "transitional period" of Hong Kong, what role should the Chinese financial groups play? In an interview with our staff reporters a few days ago, Tong Zhiguang, 53, who was recently promoted to be general manager of the China Resources (Holdings) Company Limited, said: "Aiming at promoting the prosperity and stability of Hong Kong, the China Resources group will continue to cooperate completely with all circles in Hong Kong, cement ties between the interior and Hong Kong, and promote trade between China and other countries of the world through Hong Kong. The long-term principles for the work of the China Resources Group are to have its feet firmly planted in Hong Kong, derive its backing from the interior, and head for the world. The major tasks of the group are to continue to promote export trade; work well as agents and distributors; improve the work of importation; introduce more technology and equipment from abroad; develop a retail network, transportation, warehousing business, and industry; expand business and operations; and improve services."

Tong Zhiguang continued: "Hong Kong entered its 'transitional period' just as China started its Seventh 5-Year Plan. The relations of relying on each other and supplementing each between the interior and Hong Kong will become ever closer and be strengthened and will under no circumstances be weakened. The interior is a backup force for Hong Kong's economic development, and Hong Kong itself has sufficient capital, is well-informed, and is is well experienced in economic management. All these are what is badly needed by the interior for the modernization drive."

"In 1985, the total volume of goods exported from the interior to Hong Kong reached $5.255 billion. This figure was a bit lower than the previous year (down by 2.1 percent), but it still made up 25 percent of Hong Kong's total volume of imports. Such daily necessities exported to Hong Kong from the interior as grain, edible oil, and live pigs accounted for 40 to 50 percent of the total volume consumed by Hong Kong people. Last year, live pigs exported to Hong Kong reached 2.5 million head and vegetables totalled over 200,000 tons. In the past year, the interior remained the second market for Hong Kong's export goods and the first market for its transit goods. At present there are more than 1 million people who have direct or indirect trade relations with the interior and there are more than 5,000 companies engaged in trade with China through the China Resources group."

Since China introduced the "opening up" policy in 1978, the China Resources Group has developed at a faster pace. In July 1983, the group registered itself in Hong Kong as the China Resources (Holdings) Company Limited, thus becoming a general agent of all specialized corporations affiliated to the Ministry of Foreign Economic relations and trade. The group now has more than 50 wholly-owned subsidiary companies and the same number of the partly-owned companies in Hong Kong. Tong Zhiguang pointed out: "The rapid growth of the China Resources Group proves that there are objective needs and possibilities for further developing Hong Kong's economy."

Tong Zhiguang stressed: "Apart from playing the role of a bridge between the interior and Hong Kong in trade and economic cooperation, the group also makes direct investment in production enterprises and collects funds by using the supremacy of Hong Kong as a financial and trading center.

It develops production projects both in the interior and Hong Kong. On the one hand, it will supply more high-quality marketable goods to Hong Kong, and on the other, it will export more competitive goods made in Hong Kong to other parts of the world.

"The China resources group will make continuous efforts to develop its business and enter the world market. In Hong Kong, it will build wharfs, warehouses, and cold storage facilities of its own so as to help promote trade between the interior and Hong Kong. Besides making preprations for the establishment of a jointly-owned company in Sinagapore, it also plans to set up branches in the United States, Canada, and Australia as well as in some West European and Middle East countries so as to promote its business and trade in these parts of the world.

Speaking on the question of how to harmonize relations of the China Resources Group with small and medium-sized enterprises in Hong Kong, Tong Zhiguang pointed out: "We devote much attention to the sales channels we used before and will make efforts to improve them so as to promote sales of China-made goods." Citing an example, he said: "In 1975, we sold 53,000 bales of cotton yarn through 7 distributors,adding only 4 agents more. In 1975, we sold 6.23 million bolts of cloth through 16 distributors. We now sell 10.30 million bolts through 21 distributors, adding only 5 more. Meanwhile, our group has opened some Chinese goods department stores and supermarkets. By so doing we are able to directly contact consumers and have a better understanding of market demands and trends. Of course, we also hope this will help us do something for a flourishing Hong Kong market."

Tong Zhiguang continued: "In the proposal for the Seventh 5-Year Plan, the CPC Central Committee points out: 'The key to implementing the opening up policy with an increased use of foreign funds and imported technology is to increase foreign exchange earnings through exports.' In a certain sense, exports are for imports and without exports there are no imports. For this reason, our group will take the initiative in helping the departments concerned in the interior to develop marketable goods for export and to increase the supply of such staple commodities as stell products, cement, rice, and cotton, as well as the supply of coal and crude oil to Hong Kong. We hope the total volume of exports from the interior to Hong Kong this year will increase a little more than last year and will rise year after year, and we will strive to increase it by more than 50 percent in the next 5 years to come. To achieve this, of course we should make great efforts and overcome numerous difficulties. For example, we should increase readily marketable commodities, raise the quality of many export goods, increase varieties, and improve packing. Meanwhile, we should quicken our steps to upgrade and update export goods."

Tong Zhiguang said: "In the first half of last year, the export goods through unofficial trade channels exerted a great impact on the normal export trade of our country. For a time this damaged the confidence of our distributors in Hong Kong in dealing in China-made goods. After we removed numerous obstacles and conducted in depth investigations through different channels and in various forms, we finally found out the ause and effect of some goods exported through unofficial trade channels. The real state of affairs was immediately reported to China's concerned departments. This helped the State Council and the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relation and Trade take countermeasures. As a result, the situation improved greatly in the second half of last year and the volume of exports has been on the rise since then."

Tong Zhiguang said that he favored the practice of issuing export licenses to all goods exported to Hong Kong and Macao because it facilitated customs houses and banks to make concerted efforts to exercise control over foreign trade.

Tong Zhiguang said: "During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, China will mainly import software, modern technology and equipment, and advanced management experience. In these aspects, Hong Kong has all the advantages, and there is great potential for Hong Kong to develop its ability to the fullest." He also stressed: "No doubt the state will set different demands on economic construction at different stages. From state demands for import goods at one stage, we should not draw the conclusion that the state general import policy has changed."

Tong Zhiguang graduated from the Beijing Foreign Trade Institute in the 1950's. His English is good and he has devoted himself to foreign trade for more than 30 years. Speaking on the groups's ambition of standing facing the world, he believes that the key to the matter lies in training professional personnel. He said: "Actually, this is an important task for our foreign trade work as a whole."

NEW ZEALAND'S LANGE HOPES FOR MORE COOPERATION

OW251203 Beijing XINHUA in English 1139 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Guiyang, March 25 (XINHUA) -- New Zealand Prime Minister David Lange said here this morning that there is a good basis for mutual understanding between his country and China since they share common views on many international issues.

Delivering a speech at the Guizhou Agricultural College in the southwest China City of Guiyang where he is now visiting, Lange said that for New Zealand, it became quite obvious that China would have significant impact on New Zealand's future. "Now we have reached the point where we are more familiar with one anotehr and hope we can move the relationship forward to the benefit of both countries," said the prime minister.

Lange told over 800 students and teachers that during his forthcoming meeting in Beijing later this week, he "will wish to review with them international affairs of interest and concern to both our countries. And, secondly, I want to explore ways in which we can expand and deepen our cooperation." Referrring to economic cooperation, Lange said, the two countries have made a good start. Bilateral trade has grown from around two million New Zealand dollars in the year of 1973-1974 to more than 730 million New Zealand dollars in the year of 1984-1985. he said.

He also pointed out that other forms of economic cooperation have also been started. He said China has established some joint ventures in New Zealand prawn farming, and New Zealand companies in China are negotiating joint ventures in computer technology, woollen textile research and engineering.

The 44-year-old prime minister said that when party General Secretary Hu Yaobang and Secretary Hu Qili visited New Zealand last year they realised that the highly developed livestock system in New Zealand could be applicable in Guizhou and they had encouraged New Zealanders to look more closely into the opportunities for mutual cooperation in Guizhou.

He suggested that an exchange scheme be established whereby a small number of the Guizhou Agricultural College's experts go to New Zealand to receive practical training in animal husbandry techniques that will help to reinforce Guizhou's development plans. "In return," he said, "I would suggest that a similar number of New Zealanders come to Guizhou to pass on to the students here other skills of value."

Beyond the academic world there are likely to be other areas in which cooperation between Guizhou and New Zealand would be of mutual benefit, Lange said.

On behalf of the students and teachers, Liu Zhenye, president of the college, thanked Lange for his speech on China-New Zealand cooperation.

This morning, the New Zealand guests also visited a village inhabited by the people of Bouyei nationality in the suburbs of the Guiyang city. They left here this morning by air for a tour of Shanghai before they go to Beijing, the last leg of their China visit.

INTERIM PHILIPPINE CONSTITUTION ANNOUNCED

OW251353 Beijing XINHUA in English 1324 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Manila, March 25 (XINHUA) -- An interim constitution was announced this afternoon by President Corazon Aquino in the presidential palace. The interim constitution provides the abolition of the National Assembly, an issue which has been opposed by many members of Parliament, both from the majority and the minority parties. The interim constitution, or the "Freedom Constitution" as the president called it, will be in effect until a new constitution is drafted and ratified by the people, Mrs. Aquino said.

The president added that a constitutional commission will be formed within 60 days to draft the new charter which will be submitted within 90 days to the people in a national plebiscite. According to the president, the people will have a new permanent constitution and a duly elected parliament within one year from this proclamation.

Vice President Laurel and other members of the cabinet were present on the occasion.

LAUREL BECOMES PHILIPPINE PRIME MINISTER

OW251654 Beijing XINHUA in English 1452 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Manila, March 25 (XINHUA) -- Vice-President Salvador Laurel today assumed the post of prime minister one month after he was designated by President Corazon Aquino to that post. Laurel succeeded outgoing Prime Minister Cesar Virata who held the post in the past five years.

In the turnover ceremony, Laurel said he will be holding the position in a holdover capacity until the new constitution is adopted, which is expected to return the country to a purely presidential form of government.

Laurel admitted that he did not know how long the office of the prime minister will last. He is anticipating the country would head towards a presidential form -- in that case, the office of the prime minister will be abolished. "In the previous regime," Laurel said, "All the powers of govenment were concentrated in the hands of only one man, when it should have been delegated to the prime minister."

He bewailed that the office of prime minister was charged with great responsibility without corresponding authority. He expressed his hope that this would not be the case with him.

During the turnover ceremony, in answer to questions from newsmen, Virata said he intended to go back to his private practice as a consultant, but he added he would make himself available to the government anytime his services are needed.

PHILIPPINES OPPOSITION CRITICIZES AQUINO MOVES

OW252306 Beijing XINHUA in English 1732 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Manila, March 25 (XINHUA) -- The opposition Nationalist Party of the Philippines (PNP) today accused President Corazon Aquino of declaring a provisional constitution. The PNP through its provisional chairman, former Labor Minister Blas Ople, said, "In a single stroke, President Aquino annexed to herself all the powers of the executive, legislative and the judicial branches of government in the guise of a provisional constitution."

PNP was formed on March 16 by those who broke away from the erstwhile ruling New Society Movement (KBL).

Mrs Aquino has imposed a one-year deadline for the provisional government. The PNP claimed that she can always revoke or extend the deadline, since her powers under the new government have become "absolute". PNP said it would challenge the proclamation "by joining other parties represented in the National Assembly in convening the Parliament to pass laws."

Some other parliamentarians today also expressed their dismay on the abolition of the National Assembly and said they would ask President Aquino to reconsider her decision.

MP Francisco Sumulong said that both former opposition and KBL parliamentarians believe that despite the existence of a revolutionary situation, it does not follow that the National Assembly should be dissolved. He said that they will firm up and make their position official in a bipartisan caucus tomorrow at the Asian Institute of Tourism. Sumulong said members of the three factions of the KBL are expected to attend the caucus since former speaker Nicanor Yniguez has asked them.

PHILIPPINES ENRILE FAVORS AQUINO CASE REOPENING

OW250006 Beijing XINHUA in English 1628 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Manila, March 25 (XINHUA) -- Philippine Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile today endorsed the reopening of the Aquino assassination case, the PHILIPPINE NEWS AGENCY reported. Enrile said that the assassination of opposition leader Benigno Aquino on August 21, 1983, had brought about a terrible political spasm in the country. The people must be told who ordered the killing of Aquino, why it was ordered, who received the order and who carried it out, Enrile said.

The Committee on Human Rights headed by former Senator Jose Diokno earlier indicated it would reopen the case in which all the 26 accused including former Chief of Staff Fabian Ver were acquitted last year.

Meanwhile Brig Gen Augustus Paiso, new chief of the aviation security command, said today that certain military men accused in the Aquino assassination case will speak out the truth should the case is reopened. Paiso said they will only speak out in an open court trial mainly for their own safety and that President Corazon Aquino, widow of the slain opposition leader, should initiate moves to reopen the case.

LI XIANNIAN, ZHAO ZIYANG SEND MESSAGE TO BANGLADESH

BK251333 Beijing International Service in Bengali 1530 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Text] Chinese President Li Xiannian and State Council Premier Zhao Ziyang in a message of greetings to Bangladesh President Hussain Mohammad Ershad on the occasion of the 15th anniversary of the independence of Bangladesh today wished for the prosperity of Bangladesh and welfare of its people.

Hailing the success scored by Bangladesh in its nation building task and in the expansion of production in agriculture and industry, President Li Xiannian and Premier Zhao Ziyang said in their message of greetings that in international affairs also Bangladesh believes in diplomacy and works for justice. They said that Bangladesh made ceaseless efforts in the setting up of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation and it has earned the admiration of the world community for its contribution to peace and stability in South Asia and also in Asia as a whole.

President Li Xiannian and Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang said in their message of greetings that fresh progress has been made in friendship between China and Bangladesh due to the successful exchange of visits of the leaders of the two countries in the past year. The facts prove that China and Bangladesh are two close, friendly states with mutual trust and there exists a great possibility of further expanding friendly cooperation between the two countries.

President Li Xiannian and Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang expressed confidence that with the joint efforts of the governments and people of the two countries the friendly ties and cooperation between them will touch new heights in the future.

TAMILS REPORTEDLY ARMED WITH SOVIET MISSILES

OW221000 Beijing XINHUA in English 0937 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Text] Colombo, March 22 (XINHUA) -- Tamil militants are currently armed with Soviet-made surface-to-air missiles in their battle against Sri Lankan armed forces, according to today's local newspapers quoting a report of the International Institute for Strategic Studies (IISS).

In the current issue of "Military Balance for 1985-1986", the London-based IISS said that the Soviet-made SA-7 Grail is a shoulder-launched, infra-red guided anti-aircraft missile which has proved very effective against low flying aircraft, particularly helicopters. It is 1.29 m in length, weighs 9.2 kg and has a range of about 9 km. The report said that the Soviet Union has supplied the SA-7 to several countries with which it has close military ties. IISS disclosed that about 2,000 Tamil activists belonging to six militant groups are also reportedly equipped with small arms and rocket propelled grenades.

INDIAN MINISTER ON U.S. BUILDUP ON DIEGO GARCIA

OW212150 Beijing XINHUA in English 1834 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] New Delhi, March 21 (XINHUA) -- The United States' Decision to store nuclear weapons at Diego Garcia in the Indian Ocean had an "ominous portent for the future", Indian External Affairs Minister Bilram Bhagat said here today. Inaugurating a seminar on "Indian Ocean Zone of Peace," the minister said the upgrading of facilities at the U.S. base at Diego Garcia, located some 1,600 kilometers southwest of the tip of the Indian peninsula, were of "enormous strategic significance" to India. "Most of our air fields, ports, military installations and power projects fall within the range and surveillance of aircraft at this base," he said.

Bhagat said that the U.S. Rapid Deployment Force and the military build-up at Diego Garcia in the Indian Ocean had "greatly increased the possibility" of superpower conflict in the region. Therefore, the minister said, Indian and other nonaligned countries should "resolutely oppose the intensive militarization of the Indian Ocean region and the nuclearization of the Diego Garcia base."

DANISH PRIME MINISTER HOSTS BANQUET FOR ZHAO, WU

OW251644 Beijing XINHUA in English 1623 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 25 (XINHUA) -- Danish Prime Minister Poul Schluter gave a return banquet here tonight, marking his current visit to China. Among the guests were Premier Zhao Ziyang, State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian and Minister of Civil Affairs Cui Naifu.

In his speech at the banquet, Schluter said that he had discussed with Premier Zhao Ziyang and Chairman Deng Xiaoping a wide range of subjects of concern to the two governments. He said that these talks had been extremely useful, and they confirmed once again the very extensive agreement that exists between the two countries in the areas of importance to both sides. He said that relations between Denmark and China had expanded rapidly and substantially, adding that Denmark desires to respond positively to the economic and technological development currently under way in China. He said that Denmark is prepared to continue and strengthen cooperation with China in the vital field of exchange of technology. He pointed out that new possibilities of joint ventures should be explored in order to follow up on successes already recorded within the framework of Danish-Chinese cooperation. A promising new area of possible cooperation between Denmark and China is the field of vocational education and training, he added.

Zhao Ziyang described meetings between Chinese leaders and the Danish prime minister in the last two days as being "fruitful". He said that these meetings and talks had further enhanced the mutual understanding and friendship and will create a positive impact on the promotion of friendly cooperation between the two countries in various fields. The Danish prime minister's current visit has contributed postively to the consolidation and growth of the Sino-Danish friendship and cooperation, Zhao said.

Pacts Signed

OW260724 Beijing XINHUA in English 0711 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 26 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese and Danish Governments signed three agreements here this morning. The three are on the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion with respect to taxes on income; cooperation regarding a biomedical program; and a seed development project. The seed project is co-financed by the World Bank and the Danish Government.

Chinese premier Zhao Ziyang and visiting Danish Prime Minister Poul Schluter were present at the signing. Signing the documents on behalf of their respective governments were Chinese Vice-Minister of Finance Tian Yinong, Vice-Minister of Public Health Chen Minzhang and Assistant Minister of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Shen Jueren, and Danish Ambassador to China Arne Belling. As the Danish Prime Minister, Mrs. Schluter and their party left Beijing this morning for Xian, Schluter expressed satisfaction over his visit to Beijing. Premier Zhao Ziyang went the Diaoyutai State Guesthouse to say good-bye to the Danish visitors.

FRENCH OFFICIAL ON TIES WITH PRC SCIENCE ACADEMY

OW251649 Beijing XINHUA in English 1444 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Paris, March 24 (XINHUA) -- The Academy of Sciences of China and the National Center of Scientific Research of France (CNRS) will intensify their cooperation in the next few months, CNRS Director General Pierre Papon said here today. Papon, who has just returned from a trip to China, said he has seen great strides made in China's policy of opening to the outside world since his last visit in 1983.

China's research in science and technology in recent years, Papon said, resembles in many ways that followed by France. This is evidenced by a growing cooperation between business enterprises, government and research institutes. This cooperation, Papon said, will lead to the creation of a 'national fund for natural sciences,' which will then contract out research programs to various universities. Papon said that other cooperative programs between France and China could be in the areas of robotics and computer technology. Other possible research sectors are the treatment of water and air pollution. China is also interested in the prediction of volcanic eruptions, and the detection of earthquakes. The CRNS is also interested in studying the evolution of the Chinese production system where large state enterprises and smaller individually run ones seem to run profitably within the same system.

GUANGMING RIBAO ON IDEOLOGICAL WORK IN ROMANIA

HK241130 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 10 Mar 86 p 3

[Article by Ya Bin: "Some Theories and Practice Concerning Ideological Work in Romania"]

[Text] In the theory of "building a socialist society with all-round development" advanced in 1974, Romania explicitly pointed out that in building socialism it is necessary to develop not only a material basis but also all aspects of social life, including spiritual civilization. It also stressed the "historic mission of socialism," saying that not only is it necessary to emancipate people from the oppression and exploitation of the exploiting classes and to ensure their material welfare, but it is also necessary to "create a high degree of spiritual civilization." This spiritual civilization should be able to bring up new people -- new people with a high degree of consciousness, culture, and professional competence, as well as an advanced ethical and political outlook.

In building spiritual civilization, Romania has paid close attention to ideological work. The question of political and ideological education was specially discussed at the 12th Congress of the Romanian Communist Party (RCP) in 1979. It was again discussed at an enlarged plenary session of the Central Committee held in early June 1983. The Second National Congress on Political Education and Socialist Culture held in late June 1983 and the conference on organization and political education work held in August 1984 further expounded this issue. SPARK, the organ of the RCP Central Committee, has preserved two special columns for a long time. One is "Requirements on Ethical Standards" and the other is "Foster a Revolutionary Idea in the Current Confrontation of Ideas." On its international page, the newspaper also often carries material and articles exposing the Western capitalist world.

In carrying out ideological education, Romania stresses education in dialectical materialism and historical materialism, holding them as a basis for education. Romania encourages people to foster and consolidate a dialectic materialist world outlook and a revolutionary outlook on life and stresses the need to conduct education in scientific socialism, revolutionary humanitarianism, and revolutionary spirit; in loving the country, the people, the party, and socialism; and in morality, labor, observation of law and discipline, the unity of the people of all nationalities, and friendship with the people of the world.

Romania holds that "malpractices left over" from the old society still remain "in people's minds" and that "the imperialist bloc constantly pollutes Romania morally and spiritually through various channels from outside." For this reason, it is necessary to unswervingly carry out a resolute struggle against various backward ideas such as "bourgeois ideas, superstitious ideas, and the idea of reaping profit by other people's toil," and against the ideas of exploiting classes coming from outside. Romania stresses the need to correctly handle the relationship between professional competence and ideological consciousness, holding that "party and state cadres should become not only outstanding experts but also outstanding revolutionaries," that they "should carry forward the spirit of struggle more vigorously," and that "revolutionaries should place the interests of the party and the people above everything and set aside all personal interests."

Romania attaches particular importance to the education of the younger generation, holding that since youths lack experience and are susceptible to harmful effects, it is necessary to step up education among them. It is necessary to encourage the youths from all nationalities to foster the loftiest ideals so that they will steadfastly serve the party, the people, and socialism, struggle for the independence, sovereignty, progress, and prosperity of the motherland, and strive to master the latest science and the latest achievements in human understanding. Romania stresses that schools at all levels should train revolutionary youths who are enthusiastic and courageous and who are ready at all times to make any sacrifices for the interests of the motherland and socialism and in defense of national independence and peace.

Romania has repeatedly pointed out the need to conduct education in history, holding that the glorious history of Romania is the most precious legacy of the Romanian people and serves as a basis for education in patriotism and socialism among the masses of the people. It holds that education in history will enable people to understand the long history of Romania and the history of struggle carried out by the Romanian people for survival, social and national freedom, independence, and unification. In recent years, by holding various celebration activies such as the 2,050th anniversary of the founding of Dacian centralized state power, the 100th anniversary of Romanian national independence, and the 35th anniversary of the founding of the RCP, Romania introduced the heroic struggle carried out by Stephan, Mikhail and others against foreign rule and for national survival. In the course of protracted struggle the Romanian people have always preserved their national characteristics.

Romania holds that fostering patriotism and cultivating the feelings of loving the motherland and the people represent the loftiest duty for literature and art. It calls on people in the literary circles to make contributions to the cause of bringing up new people with a high degree of socialist and revolutionary consciousness through their own works. Romania calls on literature and art workers to go deep among the masses and to derive inspiration fromthe people's life and labor and from their heroic struggle to build a new society. Romania holds that it had a glorious past, has a socialist present, and will have a golden future as envisaged by Iminescu and that it is an eternal theme from which literature and art workers receive encouragement and derive inspiration.

Li, Ratsiraka Hold Talks

[By correspondents Xu Zhi and Huai Chengbo]

[Text] Antananarivo, 25 Mar (XINHUA) -- PRC President Li Xiannian, paying a state visit here, held formal talks with Malagasy President Ratsiraka at the latter's office this morning. The talks proceeded in a sincere and friendly atmosphere, according to the spokesmen of both sides.

At the talks, President Ratsiraka extended a warm welcome to President Li on behalf of the Malagasy Government and people. He said: During President Li's visit, the two sides will explore new fields and new ways of strengthening the economic and technical cooperation between the two countries, in order to further promote friendly relations and cooperation between them.

President Li said that he was very glad to visit Madagascar now and to see his old friend, President Ratsiraka, again. He expressed the belief that his current visit would be conducive to deepening mutual understanding and friendship between China and Madagascar and promoting the further development of friendly relations between the two countries. He said: The Chinese Government and people always pay close attention to the progress and development of the Malagasy people. In recent years, the Malagasy Government has taken positive, effective measures to overcome natural disasters and the grave effects caused by an irrational international economic order, to vigorously develop industrial and agricultural production, to strive to become self-sufficient in food and to promote the development of communications, transportation, and education.

President Li also praised the Malagasy Government for pursuing a nonaligned foreign policy; keeping up the struggle against imperialism, colonialism, and racism; supporting the national liberation movement; and advocating the establishment of a new international economic order and the Indian Ocean as a peace zone. He said that Madagascar's correct propositions and just stand have received favorable comments from the international community.

During the talks, President Li, on behalf of the Chinese Government and people, expressed deep sympathy with the Malagasy Government and people on the recent disaster caused by a cyclone in the country. He also announced the Chinese Government's decision to donate 2,000 metric tons of cement to help Madagascar alleviate the disaster. The two sides also exchanged views on the international situation and issues of common interest which had occurred since President Ratsiraka visited China last year.

Participating in the talks from the Chinese side were: Chen Muhua, state councillor; Qi Huaiyuan, vice minister of foreign affairs; Lu Xuejian, vice minister of foreign economic relations and trade; Tang Longbin, assistant to the minister of foreign affairs; and Yang Guirong, Chinese ambassador to Madagascar.

Malagasy participants in the talks were: Jean-Baptiste Ramanantsalama, member of the Supreme Council of the Revolution and secretary general of the presidential office; Jean Bemananjara, minister of foreign affairs; Pascal Rakotomavo, minister of finance and economic affairs; Captain Guy Sibon, minister of defense; and Jean Jacques Seraphin, minister of health.

[Text] Antananarivo, March 25 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese President Li Xiannian said here today the Madagascar-China Friendship Association has made valuable efforts to promote the development of the friendly relations between the two countries. Li Xiannian made this remark when he met President of the association Justin Rakotoniaina this evening. Rakotoniaina, who is also member of Madagascar's Supreme Revolutionary Committee, thanked the Chinese Government for its help accorded to the association.

The purpose of the association is to develop and strengthen the friendship and the mutual understanding between Madagascar and China, Rakotoniaina said. The meeting proceeded in an cordial and friendly atmosphere.

Goes Sightseeing

OW252130 Beijing XINHUA in English 2057 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Antananarivo, March 25 (XINHUA) -- Chinese President Li Xiannian visited the museum of the Palace of Queen and the Tsimbazaza Park here this afternoon. Li and his wife Lin Jiamei, accompanied by Celine Ratsiraka, wife of President Ratsiraka, and Justin Rakotoniaina, member of the Supreme Revolutionary Council of Madagascar, were warmly welcomed by hundreds of flag-waving people lining both sides of the route leading to the museum. The 77-year-old Chinese leader, despite a five-nation tiring journey, climbed up the steps to the building of historic interest in high spirit.

The Queen Palace was built in 1610 during the period of King Andrianjaka. It became the country's monarchical centre until the nation fell into the hands of the French colonialists in 1896. The Palace was turned into museum in 1897. The Tsimbazaza Park is a show-place of fauna and flora of Madagascar. Li viewed attentively specimens of inspects, fauna and flora and unearthed objects at the museum of scientific collection and visited an orchid garden. Li was also fascinated by the lovely precious animal lemur, special only in Madagascar. Like China's panda, lemur, with fox-like face and monkey-like body, is under special care and protection in the country.

President Li is here on a 4-day state visit. Li and Ratsiraka held the first round of talks this morning. At noon, Ratsiraka hosted a banquet in honour of the visiting Chinese president.

URUGUAYAN MINISTER ON DEVELOPING TIES

OW221316 Beijing XINHUA in English 1303 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Text] Brasilia, March 21 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Uruguayan Minister for Exterior Relations Enrique Iglesias said here today "the Uruguayan Government is working for developing relations with People's China." Replying a question from XINHUA at a press conference, he said that Uruguay pursues a policy of developing relations with all countries disregarding their ideologies.

Iglesias arrived here yesterday to attend a meeting of the Uruguay-Brazil mixed commission to discuss economic, trade and technological cooperation between the two countries. Referring to the Central American conflicts, he called on the countries concerned to end support for all non-governmental armed forces in the region. Only when the Central American countries trust each other and the support for non-governmental armed forces in the region stops can the Central American problem be solved, he said.

YOUTH DELEGATION ENDS VISIT TO COSTA RICA

OW191148 Beijing XINHUA in English 1125 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Text] San Jose, March 18 (XINHUA) -- A Chinese youth delegation headed by Li Gang, vice secretary general of the China Youth Federation, today concluded its week-long visit to Costa Rica. The Chinese youth delegation was invited by the youth organization of the National Liberation Party of Costa Rica. It was received by Jose Figueres, chairman of the ruling National Liberation Party, Rolando Araya Monge, general secretary, and Edgar Ugalte, secretary, of the International Affairs Commission of the party. During the meeting of the delegation and the youth organization of the National Liberation Party, the two sides expressed their wish to make more contact's and enhance understanding between the youths of the two countries. The leaders of the Costa Rican youth organization hoped that such a gathering could be held frequently and young students and peasants of the two countries could visit each other in the near future. The Chinese delegation will visit other Latin American countries after it leaves Costa Rica, the first leg of its Latin American tour.

Leaves Barbados For Trinidad, Tobago

[Text] Bridgetown, March 24 (XINHUA) -- A Chinese youth delegation left today for Trinidad and Tobago after a five-day visit to Barbados. Led by Li Gang, deputy secretary-general of the All China Youth Federation, the three-member mission came at the invitation of Barbados League of Young Socialists, youth arm of the ruling Barbados Labor Party (BLP). The league president, Leroy Parris, had participated in the international youth year activities in Beijing last year as the guest of the Chinese federation.

"These two visits marked the beginning of the exchange of youth organizations between our two countries," Li said at a reception held by BLP General Secretary Patricia Symmonds. Li told the host that the Chinese youth organization, with more than 300 million members aged between 14 and 28, is devoted to developing China and maintaining world peace. The federation has established friendly relations with more than 400 youth organizations in 130 countries. The Chinese delegation visited a number of industrial and agricultural projects in Barbados and was impressed by its tourism industry. The delegates also exchanged information with the local youths on their international activities. The Chinese met with youth delegates from St Lucia, St Vincent and Grenadines and Dominica, who were here on a Caribbean youth meeting. The Chinese delegation arrived on March 20 following their Costa Rica visit. It will tour Suriname and Brazil after a visit to Trinidad and Tobago.

NPC CONTINUES WITH SECOND DAY OF SPEECHES, TALKS

Song Ping Speaks

OW260210 Beijing XINHUA in English 0156 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 26 (XINHUA) -- China's major tasks this year are to maintain a necessary rate of economic growth, obtain better returns on investment, achieve a basic balance in foreign exchange and improve the people's daily life. This was stated by Song Ping, state councillor and minister in charge of the State Planning Commission, when delivering a report on the draft 1986 plan for national economic and social development at the Fourth Session of the Sixth National People's Congress here today.

China's total agricultural output value for 1986 will increase by three percent (or six percent if village-run industries are included) over that of last year, and grain output will reach at least 400 million tons, as against the 378.9 million tons last year. Total industrial output value will increase by eight percent. Last year, total agricultural output value rose by three percent (excluding village-run industries) while total industrial output value jumped 18 percent.

In his report on the Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-90) delivered yesterday, Premier Zhao Ziyang pointed out the excessive rapid growth of industry in the past two years was mainly due to inordinately large investment and to the import of great quantities of raw and semi-finished materials. Such a situation cannot last long.

On economic restructuring, Song Ping said that China will consolidate, assimilate, supplement and improve the reforms, and lay the groundwork for further advance in the reform over the next two years. In economic construction, the country will continue to keep investment in fixed assets and consumption funds from growing too fast and strive to balance total social demand and supply, so that the national economy can develop in a steady and balanced way, according to Song.

While ensuring the steady growth of grain output, it is necessary to develop a diversified rural economy in accordance with local conditions. Referring to the development of township-run enterprises, Song Ping stressed the preleminary processing of farm produce and the improvement of services before and after the production process. These enterprises yielded a total output value of 93.5 billion yuan last year. All localities and departments should regard helping poor areas to overcome backwardness as an important item on their agenda. China will earmark 800 million yuan this year to aid the underdeveloped areas, Song said.

The draft plan sets a nine percent increase for light industry and a seven percent increase for heavy industry this year. Output of primary energy (coal, petroleum, natural gas and hydroelectric power) will be equivalent to 858.5 million tons of standard coal, an increase of 19.5 million tons. Output of rolled steel will reach 37.6 to 38.4 million tons, an increase of 810,000 to 1,610,000 tons.

Total payroll for workers and other employees will increase by 14 billion yuan. The average monetary wages for workers and employees will rise by seven percent and the average per capita net income in rural areas is expected to be up seven percent.

Total value of retail sales will reach 482 billion yuan, an increase of 12 percent over last year.

The draft plan sets the total volume of imports and exports at 56.8 billion U.S. dollars with exports increased and imports reduced.

Total enrolment of polytechnic school students will reach 710,000, an increase of 6.3 percent. Colleges and universities will enroll 600,000 undergraduates and 45,000 postgraduates.

Song Ping said China will adjust the pattern of investment while strictly controlling the scale of investment in fixed assets. Investment in energy industry, transport and raw and semi-finished materials industry will be 51.4 percent of the total investment in capital construction, as against 46.8 percent last year.

The draft plan promises an adequate supply of goods for the market and keeping prices basically stable so as to improve the people's living standards.

Song Ping called for effective measures to boost exports, import the necessary advanced technology, key equipment and badly needed raw and semi-finished materials and reduce the import of ordinary equipment and materials so as to achieve a basic balance in foreign exchange. He urged the adoption of a flexible approach to trade and a variety of forms such as barter trade, import-based export, entrepot trade, multilateral trade and frontier trade, as well as the expansion of tourism to increase non-trade foreign exchange earnings.

Wang Bingqian on 1985 Budget

OW260230 Beijing XINHUA in English 0221 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 26 (XINHUA) -- China reaped a surplus of 2.817 billion yuan in its 1985 state budget instead of an estimated deficit of 3 billion yuan, a high-ranking official said here today. Wang Bingqian, China's state councillor and minister of finance, released these figures today in his report on the implementation of the state budget for 1985 and the draft state budget for 1986 to the current Fourth Session of the Sixth National People's Congress. To eliminate the deficit and stabilize the economy, Wang said, China adopted a series of measures to expand production, develop financial resources, increase revenues and restrict expenditures.

According to present estimates, he said, state revenues in 1985 totalled 185.411 billion yuan (including domestic receipts of 182.9 billion yuan).

This was 24.7 percent more than the 1984 figure, he said. If such special factors as the excessive high industrial growth rate in the first half of 1985 were deducted, revenues still rose by about 16 percent, which is a fairly high growth rate. According to Wang, China's 1985 state expenditures totalled 182.594 billion yuan, of which 56.973 billion yuan, an increase of 20 percent, was spent on capital construction, and 31.716 billion yuan, an increase of 20.5 percent, was allocated to the operation of culture, education, science and public health services.

People's living standards also improved markedly with the growth of production, Wang Bingqian said. Average per capita income of urban residents in 1985 rose by 10.6 percent to 752 yuan, and that of rural residents increased by 8.4 percent to reach 397 yuan.

Predicts Balanced 1986 Budget

[Text] Beijing, March 26 (XINHUA) -- China's state budget for 1986 has the total revenues and expenditures in balance at 214.147 billion yuan, according to Minister of Finance Wang Bingqian here today. He said this in his report on the implementation of the state budget for 1985 and the draft state budget for 1986 at the annual session of the National People's Congress.

Wang, also a state councillor, said that in drafting the state budget for 1986 changes were made in the method by which revenues and expenditures were listed, thus resulting in their enlarged figures. Based on comparable counting method, however, the 1986 budgetary revenues from domestic sources are estimated to exceed the previous year's -- 182.9 billion yuan -- by eight percent, an increase corresponding to this year's 7.4 percent growth rate for total industrial and agricultural output value.

Of the total revenues in the 1986 state budget, the minister said, foreign loans will account for 5.5 billion yuan, as against 2.5 billion yuan last year. The state will allocate a total of 56.78 billion yuan for capital construction in the 1986 budget, equa equaling the figure of last year. The budgeted expenditure for aiding rural production and for other operating expenses in agriculture totals 11.79 billion yuan, a 16.1 percent increase over the 1985 figure. These funds will be used mainly to improve conditions for agricultural production, disseminate agricultural science and technology, and ensure the steady growth of grain production, thus accelerating the growth of the rural commodity economy, Wang explained.

Operating expenses budgeted for education, science, public health in 1986 come to 35.7 billion yuan, up 12.6 percent over the figure of last year. The expenditure for national defense is 20.02 billion yuan, as against 19.14 billion in 1985. The minister said that through the concerted efforts of the people of all nationalities, the budget for 1986 will be successfully executed.

Panel Discussions Held

OW260732 Beijing XINHUA in English 0727 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 26 (XINHUA) -- More than 2,900 deputies to the current session of the Sixth National People's Congress, China's legislative body, broke into panel discussions here this afternoon. Discussions center around premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the draft Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-90), as well as the draft 1986 plan for national economic and social development and the draft state budget for 1986. It is learned that the panel on these subjects will last about six days. The 31 delegations from all over the country live in the capital's 15 hotels and guesthouses.

JIANGXI SECRETARY, OTHER DEPUTIES PREPARE FOR NPC

OW250927 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1420 GMT 24 Mar 86

["Newsletter: Advance From the Sixth 5-Year Plan to the Seventh 5-Year Plan -- On What Was Learned at the NPC Deputies' Lodgings" -- by XINHUA reporter]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 24 Mar (XINHUA) -- In March, spring scenes are everywhere in the capital.

More than 2,800 deputies have come here from various parts of the motherland for the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC, held at a time when the Sixth 5-Year Plan has been successfully completed and the prelude to the Seventh 5-Year Plan has already begun. With the session to be held at such a historical time, the deputies not only are excited but also feel the import of their serious task. After arriving at their lodgings, they have had no time to rest. Some have earnestly read the relevant documents. Others have devoted themselves to preparing sepeches. Still others have been busy exchanging information. All of them are determined to contribute to the success of this session.

"This session will surely be a significant milestone," said deputy Wan Shaofen, who assumed the leading post as the secretary of the Jiangxi Provincial CPC Committee last June. "Through this NPC Session, the Seventh 5-Year Plan, formulated by summing up the work of the Sixth 5-Year Plan, will enable us to see more clearly the road of building socialism with distinctive Chinese characteristics. Participating in this session of historical importance, I feel deeply the sacred duty of a people's deputy."

"The year 1986 is a foundation-laying year for the Seventh 5-Year Plan. We must succeed in fighting this battle!" So saying, Wan Shaofen picked up, from a sheaf of documents on a small table, a report on the implementation of the Sixth 5-Year Plan in Jiangxi and the program for the province's Seventh 5-Year Plan. While going through the report, she quickly read a series of figures as compared with previous records, eloquently displaying the achievements scored by the province in implementing the Sixth 5-Year Plan. This year, she said, in-depth reform will be carried out so as to bring Jiangxi's favorable conditions into full play, and the work of the old revolutionary base areas will make big strides, while industry will develop in a steady and sustained manner. Wan Shaofen delineated the great development plan of Jiangxi, a province noted for its glorious revolutionary tradition. She said: Jiangxi has great potential, and its people can make great achievements. Jiangxi is full of promise.

MEMBERS PRAISE ACCOMPLISHMENTS, ROLE OF CPPCC

OW260932 Beijing XINHUA in English 0907 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text[Beijing, March 26 (XINHUA) -- As China's economic and social reforms are proceeding, those in the country's top political consultative body feel they are experiencing a golden time in their careers.

In the past few years, said Sun Qimeng, a member of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference (CPPCC), a think tank as the public calls it, our organization has been reinforced at various levels, the membership increased, and our work has made notable progress. This is a golden time, the best we've ever experienced since the founding of New China in 1949, said Sun, who is also a vice-chairman of the Democratic National Construction Association, one of the eight non-communist parties in China.

His view is shared by many of the 1,700 CPPCC members attending an annual session of the organization's National Committee, which began March 23 in Beijing. Founded in 1949, the CPPCC is made up of political parties, mass organizations and people from all walks of life, and its role, as its charter defines, is to provide consultation for the country's state affairs.

At our session last year, said Qian Sanqiang, a noted scientist in China and also a CPPCC member, we put forth several suggestions regarding the structural reform of science and technology. As far as I know, many of them have been adopted and enforced by the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party in its policy-making process.

Citing his experince in a recent inspection tour of Henan Province, Qin Yizhi, also a leader of a non-communist party, said that many of the CPPCC local committees he contacted had played a very important role in helping the local governments run their administration. Many of the local committees I've seen are largely made up of retired officials and outstanding representatives from all fields, Qin said. Since their views and suggestions often carry great weight, the local governments pay due attention to them.

In the past few years, the CPPCC has conducted a wide range of international non-government exchanges, and these, in the view of Wang Guangying, president of the Hong Kong-based Everbright Enterprise Company, have provided new channel for people in other countries to understand China better.

On the cooperation between the ruling Communist Party and people without party affiliation, Yang Jike, vice governor of Anhui Province said that it is the duty of the ruling party to fully practice democracy so as to bring all positive elements into full play and run the country well. On the other hand, he said, it is our duty to offer frank opinions, suggestions and criticisms.

Thanks to its contributions to China's political and economic life, said CPPCC member Zheng Jian, who represents the All-China Federation of Taiwan Compatriots, the status and role of the CPPCC has been better understood. We enjoy an increasingly high prestige, he said.

FREEDOM OF CREATION IN LITERATURE, ART EXPOUNDED

HK250957 Beijing LILUN YUEKAN in Chinese No 2, 25 Feb 86, pp 23-25

[Article by Guo Rui: "Freedom of Creation in Socialist Literature and Art and Its Basis"]

[Text] For socialist literature and art, freedom has two implications. First, as a kind of creative social work, socialist literature and art can only be free and must be free. Freedom is an intrinsic attribute of socialist literature and art creation. Second, creative socialist literature and art are developing from the realm of necessity to the realm of freedom. In this sense, freedom is a lofty realm that creative literature and art should reach. These two implications complement each other and coincide with each other. Therefore, only when the creative freedom of literature and art is fully respected and guaranteed can writers and artists attain the lofty realm of artistic freedom. If they give up their pursuits of the realm of freedom, efforts to respect and guarantee freedom of creation will lose significance. The two aspects of freedom are based on the great socialist practice led by our party and the great cause of the four modernizations. Understanding the two implications of freedom of creation in such a dialectical and comprehensive way will help to further improve relations between the party, writers, and artists and will promote the development of socialist literature and art.

I

A fundamental requirement of creative literature and art is that writers and artists must communicate their thoughts and feelings to other people. In order to express real knowledge, deep insight, and penetrating judgment, they must be able to freely select and refine their experiences in real life. In the process of creation, writers and artists must always maintain a high degree of creative passion and must let their imaginations move freely across limitless time and space in order to fully realize their creative intentions.

They must also continuously cultivate new inspiration for creation. Their work is full of extremely complicated mental activity and intense psychological activity. If writers and artists cannot maintain a free and active mental condition, they will not be able to continue their work at all. Only in free creation can writers and artists fully display their individual gifts and capabilities and can their works display distinctive personal characteristics in form and the content. Only be creating such works can their work be regarded as successful and can their works be of artistic value.

At the same time, we should point out: Marxist theory on literature and art and Marxist aesthetics view people's artistic activities and aesthetic judgment from the angle of human historical development and social practice. Therefore, freedom in literature and art creation should not be understood in abstract terms. For example, in capitalist society, on the one hand, capitalist production provides socioeconomic and material conditions for the development and progress of art; on the other hand, material conditions are opposed to art and poetry, because, under the capitalist system, art works are treated as commodities and artists hold a social status of ordinary commodity producers. Under these circumstances, their freedom of creation cannot be but limited and restrained. In view of this situation, Lenin pointed out that only socialist literature is truly free literature.

It is a pity that in our country, freedom in literature and art was not respected as it should have been for a fairly long time. Under the influence of the ultraleftist ideology, some of our leading cadres were accustomed to using administrative orders to lead literature and art work, settling controversies and issues in literature and art by means of political movements and class struggle; replacing literature and art criticism with "revolutionary mass criticism" and the method of seizing on others' faults, using a big stick against others, putting labels on others; and using the methods of guiding economic construction and material production to guide literature and art.... All this has affected the attitudes of literature and art workers and has dampened their enthusiasm for art creation. This state of affairs has been fundamentally changed since the downfall of the "gang of four" with the consistent efforts of our party, especially since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and the fourth literature and art workers' congress. But this does not mean that there is no problem in this regard. Much work remains to be done in order to ensure the freedom of literature and art creation. But we should also point out that when we oppose arbitrary intervention in literature and art we are not advocating a passive attitude or anarchy. High respect for freedom of creation and correct guidance of the orientation of creation must be closely integrated. This is a leadership skill that the party's cadres in charge of literature and art work should cultivate.

Undoubtedly, socialist writers and artists should have the right to create their works freely and freely express their personal feelings in their works. In fact, all progressive writers and artists who maintained close relations with the people in past historical periods ardently longed for and demanded this right; some of them even sacrificed their lives or paid a huge price in striving for this right. However, their anger at the suppression of freedom of creation and their treasuring of freedom of creation did not arise from personal need. For these progressive writers and artists, freedom of creation was not the ultimate goal. It only represented the wishes of the people and of their class and was a necessary condition for conveying the voice of the times.

This is related to the second implication of freedom of creative socialist literature and art. It involves a higher philosophical concept. Freedom here means a good command of objective laws.

Engels pointed out: "Freedom does not consist of an imaginary independence from natural laws but of the knowledge of these laws and the possibility which is thus given of systematically making them work toward definite ends.... The freer a man's judgment in relation to a definite point in question, the greater the necessity with which the content of this judgment will be determined...." ("Selected Works of Marx and Engels," Vol 3, pp 153-154) The degree of freedom people enjoy in literature and art can only be assessed and judged in the achievements scored by literature and art in grasping the realities and revealing the tendencies of social development. The richer and deeper the things a writer or an artist can provide for understanding laws governing social development in an aesthetic form, and the wider and greater an influence his works can have on the transformation of reality, the more freedom he can enjoy in his creation and the greater the artistic value of his works. Whether a writer or an artist can enjoy real freedom in his creation does not depend on his personal feelings but on the role of his works in the particular historical activities of the people in changing the realm of necessity into the realm of freedom, such as our present construction of the four modernizations. The personal freedom of a writer or an artist can be regarded as real freedom only when his works can promote the people's freedom in advancing social historical development. So freedom is a lofty realm of art that socialist literature and art should pursue.

Truth is a process of development, and art can also be divided into different levels. In socialist society, literature and art works belong to different levels according to various degrees of freedom they acquire and different artistic values they possess. Lenin said that the circus is interesting entertainment, but it is not enough if our writers and artists can only provide art like a circus for socialist laborers. They should create "communist art" which is on a higher aesthetic level. That is to say, artists should consciously shoulder the task of creating really new and great art for the people. Only in such art creation practice can they find the "door leading to freedom." The historical task pointed out by Lenin for writers and artists still holds true.

In order to fulfill this historical task, and in order to ensure real creative freedom in literature and art, our writers and artists should consciously transform their own outlooks, which are the subjective factor in literature and art. In recent years, we have emphasized the positive role of writers and artists in literature and art, and this has increased the personal characteristics of their works. This represents a major step forward in our modern literature and art. However, we should also notice that we have not paid sufficient attention to the self-transformation of writers and artists. This is not favorable to the achievement of real freedom of creation. Writers and artists are not completely independent subjects in an abstract sense. They are, first of all, human beings in society who can transform nature and society. The abilities of writers and artists to carry out aesthetic and artistic creation are not their natural instincts, but are products of mankind's historical practice and are determined by particular conditions of social life. Therefore, the freedom of writers and artists in creation must be relative. As the objective world is always changing as a result of man's labor, people's thoughts, feelings, morals, habits, and ways of life are also changing continuously. Many huge changes occur one after another in the process of historical development. Therefore, only writers and artists who can continuously transform and improve their aesthetic ability and artistic creativity can reach the realm of freedom. Social life in our country is experiencing many unprecedented and profound changes, so writers and artists must transform themselves and must truly become "engineers of men's souls." This task has been once again placed before us.

III

Here, I would like to emphatically discuss the relation between socialist creative freedom of literature and art and party spirit. For a period in the past, some writers and artists wittingly or unwittingly set party spirit against freedom of creation.

This problem is related to the long-standing influence of "leftist" ideology. In the past, the freedom of creation required by socialist writers and artists was called "bourgeois freedom." Thus, the freedom that socialist literature and art creation should enjoy became incompatible with communist party spirit. Of course, Lenin severely criticized the hypocrisy of the bourgeois slogan of "absolute freedom" in his famous thesis "Party Organization and Party Publications." He sharply pointed out that bourgeois writers, painters, and actors cannot be freed from the influence of the purse of the bourgeoisie, and that the slogan of "absolute freedom" is used to conceal the class nature of bourgeois literature and art.

However, this in no way means that Lenin also negated the freedom of creation of socialist and proletarian literature and art. On the contrary, he clearly pointed out that it is necessary to "use really free and open literature and art that are related to the proletariat" to fight against "bourgeois literature and art which pretend to be free." In his view, only socialist literature and art are really free, because they represent the unity of freedom of creation and the principles of communist party spirit. Therefore, it is completely unreasonable to link freedom of creation with the bourgeoisie. At the same time, it is incorrect to negate the communist party spirit of our literature and art because we detest the shackles of "leftist" ideology on our creation.

The party spirit principles for proletarian and socialist literature and art founded by Marx and Engels and developed by Lenin are one of the cornerstones of Marxist aesthetics and literary theory. According to these principles, literature and art should be an important component of the proletariat's cause and the party's cause. Today, socialist literature and art in our country should be part of the four modernizations program and the construction of spiritual civilization under the leadership of the party.

Proceeding from party spirit principles, socialist writers and artists should not regard literature and art as merely their personal affair, nor should they regard themselves as "onlookers" or "experts" who do not have to bear any responsibility for social life in reality. Instead, they should consciously take a position in line with party spirit, actively participate in the party's cause, closely link their creative activities with the communist ideal, use their work results to help train new socialists, improve the people's moral standards, and advance the socialist cause. The construction of the four modernizations, led by our party, is turning the social practice of the people in our country into really free activities. Only by plunging into this great cause can our writers and artists really enjoy freedom of creation. In this sense, we can say that communist party spirit is an important guarantee for freedom of creation in socialist literature and art.

Facts have proven that many outstanding writers and artists in our country have consciously insisted on communist party spirit principles in literature and art. For example, in the field of literary creation, a large number of writers have paid close attention to the development of economic reforms led by the party and have made efforts to reflect reforms in their works.

In the last 2 to 3 years, some successful novels have been published. They include "The Heavy Wings" by Zhang Jie, "Number Five Garden Street" by Li Guowen, "Man's Style" by Zhang Xianliang, "The New Star" by Ke Yunlu, "The Door to Paradise" by Wang Lixiang, and so on. These works successfully portray the images of communists and new socialists who are bent on reforms and also sharply expose various defects in the economic system and political life of our party and state. They reflect the tide of the times and the people's demand for reforms. Therefore, they display a deep sense of the times and provide rich food for thought. The success of these works is the result of the writers' efforts to link their artistic life closely with the party's cause. This shows that only by advancing together with the party's cause can we find the broad road which leads to the lofty realm of true artistic freedom.

BAN YUE TAN ON NEED FOR IMPROVING PARTY STYLE

HK241554 Beijing BAN YUE TAN in Chinese No 5, 10 Mar 86 pp 14-15

[Commentator's article: "Rouse Oneself With Vigorous Efforts To Improve Party Style"]

[Text] It is the desire of the people that party style be good, the people united, and the country prosperous. China is a socialist country under the leadership of the Communist Party and is engaged in a grand cause of socialist modernization, which has a bearing on the destiny of 1 billion people. The important historical mission has fallen on the shoulders of our party, and the people have placed high hopes on our party. The emergence of problems in party style has worried the party; such problems brought setbacks to our cause.

At the very beginning of the new year, the CPC Central Committee made up its mind to make great efforts to stop unhealthy trends and to create a healthy atmosphere. It held a meeting of more than 8,000 cadres and issued 5 circulars calling for examining and handling important major cases. Work in this respect has been grasped vigorously and speedily. People have come to understand clearly that the party Central Committee has attached great importance to work to improve party style and has made it the order of the day.

The investigation and handling of the major smuggling case involving the Ministry of Astronautics Industry has sounded the alarm for those who are seriously influenced by bureaucratism. The execution of three children of senior cadres in Shanghai for rape and taking liberties with women has manifested that everybody is equal before the law. The broad masses of the people clapped and cheered upon seeing this. They have seen, through this, the party's determination, the might of laws and discipline, and the hope of a change for the better in the party style.

Why is it that the party style has to be grasped so vigorously and speedily?

The purpose of grasping party style is to promote a fundamental change for the better in the common practice of the entire society. More than 3 years have passed since the convening of the 12th national party congress in September 1982. The goal of achieving a fundamental change for the better in party style and common societal practices within 5 years has not yet been attained. In the coming year and a half, we must vigorously grasp our work to attain this goal so that we can give an account of it to the whole party and the people of the whole country.

The purpose of grasping the work to improve party style is to eliminate interference with and obstacles to reforms. Economic reform in China, which has attracted world-wide attention, is being carried out in a thorough manner. Our party is leading the people in courageously forging ahead amid probing and exploration. In the historical tide of reform, it is inevitable that the waters are muddled, and the bad is mixed with the good. Many things have emerged in the guise of reform, and violations of laws and discipline have been found. These have affected the reputation of reform and the confidence of the people.

Only by improving party style will various kinds of unhealthy trends be dispersed and only by improving party style will the people resolutely follow our party to achieve success in the socialist modernization. The central organs have set an example in improving the party style for us to follow. The Central Committee has also formulated and published a series of regulations for improving party style for us to follow.

The leadership at various levels has grasped major important cases; this has shown us that the net of justice is merciless. If all communists and leading cadres actively respond to the call of the Central Committee, act as servants of the people, dedicate themselves to modernization, stand up for what is right, and remain uncorrupted, a fundamental change for the better in party style will be imminent.

It is now March. The cold winter is over, the snow has melted, and the spring breeze is blowing. Party style is changing for the better, and the common practices of society are changing for the better. Our motherland, with a territory of 9.6 million square kilometers, is full of vigor. The broad masses of the people have full faith in effecting a fundamental change for better party style and in the success of reform!

LIAOWANG ON FRESH UNDERSTANDING OF SOCIALISM

HK241207 Beijing LIAOWANG in Chinese No 9, 3 Mar 86 pp 22-23

[Article by Zhao Yao: "Gaining a Fresh Understanding of Socialism -- Part One"]

[Text] Editor's note: To gain a fresh understanding of socialism in practice is a very important task for communists in our time. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our party has expounded many fresh viewpoints and established many new conclusions in this aspect. These major successes in acquiring a better understanding of socialism have enriched the treasure house of Marxist theory. This article aims at giving a trial explanation of these fresh viewpoints. [end editor's note]

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our party has undergone a process of acquiring a better understanding of socialism. Its main content includes by and large the following questions.

On the Transition Period

In his book "Critique of the Gotha Program," published in 1875, Karl Marx advanced in integgated theory on the transition period, stating: "Between capitalist and communist society lies the period of the revolutionary transformation of the one into the other. There corresponds to this also a political transition period in which the state can be nothing but the revolutionary dictatorship of the proletariat."

In the book, however, Karl Marx time and again saw communism and socialism as similar concepts. Whether the transition period he described refers to a transition from capitalism to the high stage of communism, or to the first stage of communism, may lead us to a different understanding of the problem.

V. Lenin gave a clear explanation of Karl Marx' theory on the transition period. In his famous work "The State and Revolution," he expounded on the transition from capitalism to communism, to the first stage of communism, and to the high stage of communist society, as three different periods of time in three different chapters. This makes clear that the transition period covers the transition from capitalism to socialism.

Our party has been adhering to and developing the ideology of Karl Marx and V. Lenin. Not long after the founding of the republic, Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out: "The time from the founding of the PRC to the basic completion of socialist transformation constitutes a transition period."

In December 1953, when he checked and polished the outline for publicizing the general line for the transition period -- "Mobilize the Whole Nation and Go In for Building China into a Great Socialist Country," compiled by the CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department, Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out: "The interval from the founding of the PRC to the completion of the building of socialist society embraces the historical period of the transition from the new democratic society to socialist society in our country. This notion of the "transition period" was included in our first Constitution in 1954. However, this transition period was later viewed as a transition from capitalism to "communism in the full sense," and also termed the "great transition." This point of view actually equated the concept of "transition period" with the concept of "socialist society" and also provided the theoretical basis for widening class struggle.

After the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our party deepened its comprehension of socialism and once again acquired a better understanding of the question of the transition period according to the Marxist-Leninist standpoint. The "resolution on certain questions in the history of our party since the founding of the PRC" (hereinafter referred as the "resolution") noted: "China has undoubtedly established a socialist system and entered the stage of socialist society." This indicates that China has ended the transition period and entered the first phase of communist society.

On the Stages and Protracted Nature of Socialist Society

Karl Marx predicted that communist society includes the first stage and high stage of development, and socialist society should also be developed by stages. After the October revolution, V. Lenin expounded on and proved that socialist society covers a historical period of considerable length and should be developed by stages. He said: "The building of socialist society that we look forward to requires considerable time," and pointed out: There is an "early phase of development of socialism" and "developed socialism." He also used the terms "complete socialism," "perfect socialism," "consolidated socialism with ultimate victory," and "absolutely consolidated socialism." However, due to the successes and victories won by the Soviet Union in its socialist construction, people gradually neglected the protracted nature of building socialism and took a naive view of the realization of communism.

In socialist construction, our country also could not remain clearheaded for a time, and was inclined to think that socialism could be built in a short period. The resolution on the establishment of the people's rural communes, passed in 1958, said: The realization of communism in our country is no longer a matter of the distant future. At that time, some localities and units went so far as to chant the slogan of achieving communism within a few years. We finally understood the protracted nature of socialism, but we thus believed that for a long period of time, classes, class contradictions, and class struggles would remain in our country, there would be a two-line struggle between socialism and capitalism, and there would be danger of capitalist restoration. This point of view is categorically wrong. After the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we summed up the historical experience in earnest and acquired a better understanding of the protracted nature of socialism and its building by stages. The "resolution" adopted at the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee pointed out profoundly: "Our socialist system is still in its early phase of development," and "our socialist system will have to undergo a long process of development before it can be perfected." This point of view shows no difference from Lenin's ideology or from the notes that Comrade Mao Zedong took when he was reading a textbook on Soviet political economics. Comrade Mao Zedong then wrote: The stage of socialism also falls into two phases. The first phase refers to underdeveloped socialism, and the second phase takes the form of fairly developed socialism. The second phase is probably much longer than the first. Practice proves that this standpont is correct.

On the Principal Contradictions in Socialist Society

This is a major theoretical problem of overall importance to the socialist cause, which was not expounded in the works of Marx, Engels, and Lenin but which was put forth in the practice of socialism. Our party had a relapse in understanding the problem. The Eighth CPC National Congress, held in 1956, affirmed the following point: "Since socialist transformation was basically completed, the contradictions in our country are no longer those between the working class and the bourgeoisie, but the "contradictions between the people's demands for quick economic and cultural development and the failure to meet such demands," and the "essence of the contradictions is that between the progressiveness of the socialist system and the backwardness of the productive forces, when the socialist system is already established in our country." It must be noted that the basic guideline of the inference is correct, and the shortcoming is that the wording is not accurate enough.

As is known to all, this basic guideline was negated at the Third Plenary Session of the Eighth CPC Central Committee. The meeting declaring instead that the "contradictions between the proletariat and the bourgeoisie are the major contradictions in our country." This point of view was not only divorced from historical conditions in China but also ran counter to the basic tenets of scientific socialism. In addition, it also had a great effect on our social and political life in the 20 years following the meeting and provided the theoretical basis for the widening of the class struggle and the launching of the "Cultural Revolution."

The 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee decided to shift the focus of the work of the whole party to economic construction. This actually solved the problem concerning the principal contradictions in our country. The "resolution" adopted at the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee theoretically summarized the principal contradictions in our socialist society. The "resolution" pointed out: "Since socialist transformation was fundamentally completed, the principal contradiction our country has had to resolve is that between the growing material and cultural needs of the people and the backwardness of social production. It is imperative that the focus of party and government work be shifted to socialist modernization centering on economic construction and that the people's material and cultural life be gradually improved by means of an immense expansion of the productive forces." This is an indication that our party has acquired a deeper understanding of socialism.

On the Essential Tasks of Socialist Society

What are the essential tasks of our party and the state in the historical period of socialism? This question was clearly explained long ago by classic works of Marxism. In the "Communist Manifesto," Marx and Engels pointed out: "The proletariat will use its political supremacy to increase the total quantity of productive forces as rapidly as possible." After the October revolution, Lenin also noted: "After seizing state power, the proletariat should take the increasing of industrial output and the immense expansion of productive forces as its most important and fundamental interests." However, for a period in the past, as a result of our incorrect comprehension of the principal contradictions in socialist society, we had a vague and even erroneous understanding of the essential tasks of socialist society. Such vague and erroneous understanding finds expression in the following aspects: First, the so-called "pauper's transition"; second, adherence to the principle of "taking class struggle as the key link; third, seeking the so-called "equality" of all members of society, which is actually egalitarianism; and fourth, criticizing the "thory of productive forces." After the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our party corrected the aforementioned mistakes one by one in the spirit of setting things right.

Comrade Deng Xiaoping penetratingly pointed out: "Marxists attach the highest importance to the development of productive forces. The communist principle of distribution of "from each according to his ability, to each according to his need" calls for a high level of development of productive forces and a lavish abundance of material wealth. Therefore, the most essential task in the historical period of socialism is to expand the forces of production." Taking the expansion of the forces of production as the most essential task is necessary in resolving the principal contradictions in socialist society, building a strong socialist country, and eliminating classes and class differences, as well as necessary in changing socialist society into communist society.

On Class Struggle in Socialist Society

After the socialist system was established in our country, we committed the mistake of broadening class struggle between 1957 and 1976.

The 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee flatly negated the slogan of "taking class struggle as the key link." The "resolution" adopted at the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee theoretically summarized class struggle in the entire historical period of socialism with the following main points: Class struggle no longer constitutes the principal contradiction after the exploiters have been eliminated as a class. However, owing to certain domestic factors and influences from abroad, class struggle will continue to exist within certain limits for a long time, and may even grow acute under certain conditions. This indicates that the standing and role of class struggle in the historical period of socialism have greatly changed, and class struggle no longer constitutes the principal contradiction, but a secondary contradiction. The party should serve the needs of the central task of modernization. The 12th CPC National Congress also made it clear that in the new period of development of our socialist cause, we must attend, both in ideology and in action, to two aspects. On the one hand, we must persist in the policy of opening to the world, as well as in our policies for invigorating the domestic economy, and, on the other, we must resolutely strike at the serious criminal activities in the economic and other spheres that endanger socialism. Maintaining the aforementioned theoretical views on the problem of class struggle in the entire historical period of socialism is of great significance in practice because it can prevent us not only from repeating the mistake of broadening class struggle, but also from having the erroneous view that class struggle is dying out.

JINGJI RIBAO EXAMINES ALL-PEOPLE REFORM OWNERSHIP

HK240311 Beijing JINGJI RIBAO in Chinese 15 Mar 86 p 3

["Three Target Models for the Reform of the System of All-People Ownership"]

[Text] The reform of the all-people ownership system is a key link in the structural reform of ownership, and the purpose of such reform is to give better play to the superiority of public ownership. There may be three types of target models for the reform of the all-people ownership system.

The first target model is to perfect state ownership through economic structural reforms. This target model is based on the proposition that all-people ownership can only be effected in the form of state ownership. So, reform can only strengthen and perfect rather than weaken state ownership. the key to reform lies in various degrees of separation of ownership from operational power. Thus management and operation forms may be diversified. That is to say, enterprises, should be divided into a number of types according to their position and function in the national economy and to their character and size. Then, different systems are applied to different types of enterprises.

Some enterprises can be owned by the whole people and directly managed by the state; more enterprises which are owned by the whole people should be run by themselves, and the state should exercise indirect management over them through various economic means. Some small enterprises can be leased or contracted to collectives or individuals who must bear all responsibility for their profits and losses, as they have the authority to run these enterprises independently.

The second target model is to effect all-people ownership in the form of capital stock. The theoretical foundation for this model is that enterprises run on the basis of capital stock represent an organizational form of production and business operation developed in a commodity economy, and in the process of large-scale socialized mass production. The form of capital stock also enables laborers to directly own and use the means of production under the conditions of a commodity economy and, to a certain degree, play a role as capital owners. This can directly link ownership with laborers and demonstrate the economic relations in which laborers can have simultaneous economic authority and economic benefit by directly owning the means of production in the socialist commodity economy. Therefore, part of the assets of the enterprises owned by the whole people should be transferred to the enterprises themselves on a compensable basis, or workers should be encouraged to become stockholders of their enterprises so that the enterprises will be run jointly by the state, the enterprises, and the workers.

The third target model is to change all-people ownership into enterprise ownership. The reason for this is that the state is just a category of the superstructure. Although the state also has some economic functions, it is not in any way an economic entity. Under the state ownership system, laborers can only be indirectly linked with the means of production. This has been a major reason for the lack of enthusiasm among enterprise workers for many years and for the low economic efficiency of the enterprises. Therefore, all-people ownership should be gradually changed into enterprise ownership through reforms. Thus, enterprises can run themselves independently and bear sole responsibility for their profits and losses. The function of the state is to regulate enterprise activities by making use of various economic levers.

Which target model is most representative of the development orientation of socialist ownership? This is still a major issue meriting deeper discussion.

ENLIVENED, STRENGTHENED AGRICULTURE URGED

[Commentator's article: "Adding Stamina to Agricultural Development"]

[Text] Document No 1 of 1986 issued by the CPC Central Committee has proposed that the improvement of agricultural production conditions is one of the major tasks in rural work. Production conditions are the material and technological basis for production and its development. Following a series of reforms with the contract system based on output as the main aspect, the potential of agriculture in our country has been tapped in a concentrated manner, and a favorable situation of a large, prolonged increase in output has appeared. It can now be seen that the continuous improvement of production conditions will determine whether or not agriculture can develop steadily and in a sustained manner and whether or not it will have stamina for its development.

At present the material and technological basis of agriculture in our country is still very flimsy. Since liberation, various localities have paid much attention to this problem and have done a great deal of work in the construction of water conservation works.

However, in the past few years, work in this respect has been weakened and the phenomenon of "living off one's past gains" has appeared in many localities. After years of operation, the existing agricultural basic facilities are in need of repairs and reconstruction. Their capacity to resist natural disasters has been reduced since they have not been properly maintained and managed, and their problems are increasing. Because of lax management and maintenance as well as damage, the effective irrigation and drainage area is decreasing. A large percentage of mechanical equipment is operating with problems and is outdated and ineffective.

If water conservation works are not built, agriculture will not be stable. To construct more water conservation works for irrigation and drainage is an effective measure to increase agricultural output in our country. The major tasks in the construction of rural water conservation works at present is to repair as soon as possible damaged wells, irrigation canals, ponds, weirs, and dams so that they can form a complete irrigation network. We should also perfect the management responsibility system in order to give play to the role of existing projects. In addition, we should build new water conservation works. In agricultural production, land is the most important means of production. We must adhere to the principle of increasing soil nutrients while using them in order to ensure the fertility of land. We must transform low-yield fields in a planned manner. We must give good protection to land resources and resolutely stop the phenomenon of indiscriminately using farmland for other purposes.

To develop farm machines and a service system is also indispensable in improving agricultural production conditions. We must develop farm machines in various ways and at various levels and pay attention to increasing their benefits. For example, we should develop small and inexpensive machines which serve many different purposes in order to meet the needs of peasant households. We should proceed from items which are most badly needed by the peasants and establish and expand a technical service system such as services for cultivating fine strains of crops, the prevention and treatment of insect pests, and other services. We should try our best to create a a good environment for production and management.

With the development of the commodity economy and the progress of agricultural modernization, we must also pay attention to building basic facilities for post-production work such as processing, storage, classification, packaging, transportation, marketing, and so on. On the one hand, we should give play to the role of existing facilities of the state-run commerce and increase their use ratio. On the other hand, we should help and encourage villages in localities where agricultural and sideline products are produced in a concentrated manner to build some necessary facilities scattered around production areas so that production, marketing, and storage can complement each other, purchasing and marketing can be more convenient, and the flow of products can be more rational.

To improve production conditions, funds are needed. In addition to increasing necessary investment made by state and local authorities, we should encourage pooling funds through various channels and at various levels. In most localities, it is necessary and possible at present to guide the peasants to appropriately increase the percentage of accumulation on the basis of gradual improvement in the living standard with each passing year so that they can invest more funds in improving production conditions. Funds from former collective properties and other funds should be mainly used for the construction of various basic facilities. Moreover, it is necessary to pay attention to labor accumulation, particularly in building small water conservation works. In pooling peasant funds and in labor accumulation, we must pay attention to the capacity of the peasants and should not burden the peasants. We should not take showy actions, even less should we repeat the mistake of egalitarianism and indiscriminate transfer of resources.

In its proposals on the Seventh 5-Year Plan, the party Central Committee has proposed that the state should appropriately increase its investment in the capital construction of agriculture. Since last winter, rural areas in various localities have attached greater importance to the construction of water conservation works and have made a good start. We must pay great attention to the work of improving agricultural production conditions and gradually lay a relatively advanced material and technological foundation for agriculture in order to add stamina to its development.

PROMOTION OF GRAIN PRODUCTION ENCOURAGED

[Commentator's article: "Learn To Use Economic Means To Promote Grain Production and Circulation"]

[Text] As a large country with a population of one billion people, the grain issue has always been one of first priority related to the national plans and people's livelihood. In considering the development of grain we should first pay attention to grain production, and ensure that we give play to the peasants' initiative in growing grain. Second, we should pay attention to circulation and give play to localities' initiative in transferring grain away from their areas. In solving both problems, we should learn the way to apply certain economic means.

The practice of purchasing grain by contract is an important measure in applying economic means to pushing forward grain production. This year, the CPC Central Committee's Document No 1 decided to readjust and reduce the tasks of contracted purchases of grain in various areas, in the light of their different conditions. This will be more conducive to giving play to the peasants' initiative in producing and selling grain to the state in the areas that are suited to grain production.

According to the spirit of the CPC Central Committee's Document No 1, in areas where the commodity economy is developed, and where there are diverse channels to carry out diversified undertakings, we should satisfactorily grasp the work of subsidizing farm workers and grain farmers with industrial income and satisfactorily reduce the disparity of income between those engaged in industry and those engaged in agriculture, and thus ensure the fulfillment of the tasks of grain production and contracted grain purchases. In areas where there is potential to develop grain production, and where there are few sources of income from other undertakings, through reducing the tasks of contracted purchases and increasing the portion of grain purchased in the market at negotiated prices, we can enable these areas to earn more income from the increase in grain sold in excess of the ordered amounts. In major commodity grain production areas where there is relatively a lot of land and a relatively high commodity rate of grain, by refraining from reducing the amount of contracted purchases, we can, to the greatest possible extent, satisfy peasants' demands to increase their grain production. But in a very small number of poor areas, we should mainly adopt the method of purchasing grain in the market in order to increase peasants' income. We can expect that supplemented with necessary ideological work, the adoption of these measures will heighten grain farmers' initiatives in various areas and enable us to attain our goal of increasing grain production.

Besides giving play to peasants' initiative in grain production by our policies, another important problem is to rouse localities' initiative in transferring their grain away from their areas. In viewing the grain issue, we should pay attention to market and circulation as well as to production. On the one hand, the grain issue is difficult to solve because generally speaking, there is not much grain. On the other hand it is difficult because there is surplus grain in some areas and grain shortages in others, but we lack the necessary means of regulation to make up the shortage with the surplus.

Because of the all-round financial responsibility system, and the complicated relations of interests between various areas and departments, it becomes increasingly difficult to rely on administrative means to make up the shortages with the surplus. If the surplus grain in grain production areas cannot flow out, then it will be very difficult to make up the shortage in years of bad harvest with the surplus in years of bumper harvest, or to make up the shortage in some areas with the surplus in others. As a result, it will be very difficult to enliven the grain production sector. Therefore, we should regard the problem related to grain circulation as a practical problem of great importance and pay close attention to it.

The key to solving the problem related to blocked grain circulation is to straighten out relations of economic interests between grain supply and grain consumption areas. We should put an end to the unreasonable practice of eating out of the same big pot, that areas which supply grain suffer greater losses when they supply more grain for other areas, and that areas that get the supply of grain are not charged with payments for subsidies. If we satisfactorily solve this problem, we will also be able to push forward vigorously and encourage grain production, thus better solving our country's grain problems.

The grain problems have a bearing on the whole situation and on all sectors and spheres. It is necessary for us to attach sufficient importance to them and conscientiously and vigorously study the series of problems related to grain production and circulation in order to successfully develop our grain production.

SPORTS MINISTER COMMEMORATES HE LONG'S BIRTHDAY

OW222117 Beijing XINHUA in English 1636 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 22 (XINHUA) -- A bust, built in memory of He Long, founder of China sports and late Chinese sports minister, was unveiled in the Beijing indoor stadium here today. The unveiling ceremony was held at the occasion of the 90th anniversary of He Long's birthday. And the stadium, site of the bust, was built in 1955, two years after the then vice-premier took the office of minister of the state physical culture and sports commission. It was the first indoor stadium in the Chinese capital. He left the post in 1966 and died in 1969. He Long, a late general of the Chinese Army, had been a sports fan since he served in the Chinese Red Army during the 1920s. During the eight-year war against Japanese aggression, he was a division commander of the eighth-route army. He founded the noted basketball team "Fight", the first ever for the communist-led Chinese Army.

Current Chinese Sports Minister Li Menghua spoke highly of the late general and minister, at today's ceremony. "A beloved founder and leader of sports cause of New China, he made painstaking efforts and obtained brilliant achievement in the development of the cause," Li said. The bust was designed by Shitu Zhaoguang, lecturer of the Central Fine Arts Institute here.

HUBEI VIEWS ON IMPLEMENTING CENTRAL DOCUMENT

["Excerpts" from Views of Hubei Provincial CPC Committee and People's Government on Implementing Central Document No.1]

[Excerpts] In accordance with the arrangements and demands on rural work made by CPC Central Committee document No. 1, in rural work in Hubei this year we should, on the basis of summing up experiences and persevering in reform, get a good grasp of implementing the various economic policies, vigorously promote science and technology, strive to improve the production conditions, and strengthen the service setup. The provincial CPC committee and people's government demand that the leadership at all levels and the departments concerned firmly embrace the idea of taking agriculture as the foundation, strengthen their concept of the masses, and do a thoroughly good job in serving the rural areas, agriculture, and the peasants, so as to promote sustained, steady, and coordinated developming of the rural economy. We should:

1. Enhance the peasants' enthusiasm for growing grain, and maintain steady growth in grain output. In readjusting the rural production structure this year, we must continue to get a good grasp of grain production, stabilize the sown area, improve yields and quality, and maintain steady growth in output, to ensure that total output exceeds that of 1984. We should reduce the amount of grain purchased by contract and increase the proportion of grain purchased at negotiated prices. The peasants will thus gain advantage from producing more and selling more. We should gradually perfect the purchase contracts and strictly control and appropriately reduce the prices of production materials.

2. Rationally readjust the industrial crop pattern and stabilize cotton production.

3. Actively exploit the mountain and river resources and speed up the building of bases for forestry, animal husbandry, indigenous products, and fisheries, and accelerate infrastructural construction.

4. Consolidate and develop the township enterprises and strive to improve their product quality.

5. Improve the circulation setup and further enliven commodity circulation.

6. Further perfect the cooperative system, starting with services.

7. Actively popularize and apply advanced technology and speed up the technological transformation of all rural undertakings.

8. Get a good grasp of agricultural capital construction and continually improve the production conditions.

9. Enliven capital flow and improve the results of using capital. We must do well in using the existing loans and recover irrational loans. It is strictly forbidden to issue loans for private purposes. We should expand social savings deposits, and develop rural insurance. It is essential to strictly control non-productive construction, reduce the scale of capital construction, develop lateral ties, and bring in capital from elsewhere.

10. Step up supervision and inspection and seriously implement the various measures for supporting construction in the mountain areas.

11. Expand county-level decisionmaking powers and make the economy more lively, the county is the point linking the city with the village, and the point at which macroeconomic control and microeconomic regulation meet. We must gradually expand county-level decisionmaking powers, so that the county can better play its part in taking care of the overall situation. The departments in charge of various sectors at the provincial and prefectural levels should do a good job in providing professional guidance for the counties, and avoid random use of administrative intervention. The counties have the right to refuse to implement documents issued by the provincial departments that do not match the spirit of central and provincial CPC committee documents.

12. Tangibly improve leadership style and strengthen specific leadership for rural work.

HUBEI'S GUO ZHENQIAN SPEAKS AT ECONOMIC WORK MEETING

HK140937 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 12 Mar 86

[Excerpts] At the current provincial economic work meeting, Guo Zhenqian, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and acting governor, pointed out yesterday: This year, the province's industrial and communications fronts must take their services, consumptions and economic results as the major breakthrough points. They should make efforts in enterprise management.

Guo Zhenqian said: Poor product quality, high consumption of energy resources and raw materials, and poor economic results are the fatal weakenesses of the province's economic work. It is because of backward management, in addition to backward technology. For this reason, we should focus on the key products and closely integrate them with good quality and low consumption. We must develop a series of tasks for improving quality and reducing consumption. At the same time, by arranging work around the focal point of improving quality and reducing consumption, we should make great efforts to strenghten enterprise management. In management, we must stress quality, economic results and reserve forces.

Guo Zhenqian stressed: For this year's industrial and communications production, we must follow the principle of consolidation, assimilation, augmentation and improvement. We must make great efforts in the work of reforms, transformation and re-organization. When doing this, we must focus on large and medium-sized enterprises, and do well in it promptly. We must pay attention to transferring the production of components and spare parts to other areas, and practice specialization in production. Therefore, we shall promote both local industries and town and township enterprises, as well as help the large and medium-sized enterprises spend their efforts on product quality, the development of new products and the improvement of technology.

BEIJING: LI XIMING VISITS PRODUCT EXHIBIT OF HANDICAPPED

[Text] On the evening of 4 March, Li Ximing, secretary of the municipal CPC Committee, accompanied by the leading comrades of the municipal CPC Committee, the municipal Advisory Commission, and the municipal people's government, including Jiao Rnoyn, Han Boping, Li Giyan, Zhang Mingyi, Ad Yu, Guo Xianrui, Zhang Baifa, Sun Fuling, and Bai Jiefu, visited a trade fair displaying products turned out by the municipal establishments set up under the municipal welfare program for supporting "handicapped and disabled" people.

The trade fair opened on 28 February and attracted a large number of people from various circles. As of the evening of 4 March, more than 30,000 people had visited the fair to buy commodities for production and livelihood. During his visit, Comrade Li Ximing was briefed by the responsible person of the municipal civil affairs bureau on the development of such establishments in the municipality and on their production situation. He also talked in front of the stalls with the handicapped tellers and urged them to refrain from allowing their will to weaken, although they are handicapped in order to make more contributions to building the four modernizations.

The trade fair will close on 7 March.

SHANXI 1985 SOCIAL, ECONOMIC STATISTICS

HK240140 Taiyuan SHANXI RIBAO in Chinese 25 Feb 86 pp 1, 2

["Communique of the Shanxi Provincial Statistical Bureau on Fulfillment of the Province's 1985 Economic and Social Development Plan, issued on 25 February 1986"]

[Text] Under the leadership of the Shanxi Provincial CPC Committee and Government, in 1985 the people of the whole province conscientiously implemented the principles of invigorating the domestic economy, opening up to the outside world and vigorously pushing forward the reform of the economic structure focused on the urban economy with the spirit of constantly blazing new trails and forging ahead. Reform invigorated the urban and rural economy and promoted the economic and social development. The total product of society (Footnote 1) (All figures for the total product of society and national income cited in the communique are calculated in terms of 1985 prices, and the rate of growth over the previous year is calculated on comparable prices) came to 38.42 billion yuan, 12.8 percent higher than in 1984. National income reached 16.64 billion yuan, an increase of 8.1 percent over 1984. The total output value of industry and agriculture was 28.47 billion yuan, 10.7 percent above the previous year. The major economic targets set by the Sixth 5-Year Plan were fulfilled in an all-round way. Along with the sustained growth of production, the market was brisk, revenue increased, living standards continued to rise, and the economic situation as a whole developed in a favorable direction.

I. Agriculture

In 1985 Shanxi's rural areas underwent the second stage reform in earnest and made remarkable progress in readjusting the production setup and reforming the system of state monopoly for the purchase and marketing of farm products. The rural areas presented a scene of all-round development. The social product of the rural areas totaled by 14.07 billion yuan, up 13.4 percent from 1984. The total output value of agriculture was 5.51 billion yuan, 7.8 percent less than the previous year. Of the sum, the total output value of industry and agriculture by villages was 9.43 billion yuan, up 8.7 percent from 1984; and the proportion of forestry, animal husbandry, sideline occupation, and fishery rose from 50.5 to 57.2 percent.

As the sown area of grain in 1985 was 4,103,000 mu less than the previous year, and owing to natural disasters and the fact that some areas relaxed their efforts on grain production, the total output of grain was 8,227,000 tons, a drop of 493,000 million tons. Nevertheless, it was the third bumper harvest year in the history of the province. While the total output of grain dropped, the output of wheat continued to increase. The total output of wheat reached 2,951,000 tons, 51,000 tons more than the previous year. The output of major industrial crops increased by a big margin, with the exception of cotton which decreased due to the planned reduction of the sown area.

The output of major farm products was as follows:

	1985	Percentage increase Over 1984
Grain	8,227,000 tons (16.45 billion jin)	- 5.7
of which:
Wheat	2,951,000 tons (5.901 billion jin)	1.7
Cotton	73,000 tons (147 million jin)	-44.8
Oil-bearing crops	444,000 tons (889 million jin)	21.1
Hemp, jute, and flax	3,779 tons (7.56 million jin)	100.7
Tobacco	4,702 tons (9.4 million jin)	18.0
Vegetables	2,915,000 tons (5.83 billion jin)	4.3

Thanks to the further implementation of the forestry policies and to the situation of the masses' enthusiasm for afforestation, the whole province afforested an area of the 3.65 million mu and planted 280 million trees.

Animal husbandry continued to develop. Increases were registered in the numbers of hogs and large animals in stock at year end. But the number of sheep in stock at year end dropped.

Output of major animal by-products and the number of live-stock were as follows:

	1985	Percentage increase Over 1984
Output of pork, beef, and mutton	207,000 tons	- 3.0
Milk	83,000 tons	37.5
Sheep wool and goat hair	3,415 tons	-16.0
Hogs slaughtered	2,706,000 head	- 4.6
Large animals in stock at year end	2,604,000 head	4.1
Pigs at year end	3,711,000 head	9.9
Sheep and goats at year end	4,131,000 head	-18.6

At the end of 1985, the aggregate power capacity of the province's farm machines reached 11.185 million horsepower, a 6.2 percent increase over the previous year. The number of large and medium-sized tractors was 35,000, down 5.6 percent; small capacity and walking tractors, 113,000, up 18.3 percent; trucks, 30,000, up 18.9 percent; and irrigation and drainage equipment, 2.023 million horsepower, down 6 percent. A total of 398,000 tons of chemical fertilizers were applied during the year, 4.5 percent less than in 1984. The total consumption of electricity in rural areas was 1.51 billion kilowatt-hours, an increase of 5.7 percent over 1984.

II. Industry

In 1985 the reform of the industrial structure invigorated the enterprises, promoted the development of production, and brought about better economic results. The total industrial output value for 1985 was 22.96 billion yuan, an increase of 16.3 percent over 1984.

After deducting the output value of rural industry run by villages, the figure would be 19.04 billion yuan, an increase of 11.3 percent over the previous year. Of the total, the output value of state-owned industry increased by 9.1 percent over 1984. Collectively owned industry grew by 24.9 percent, individually owned industry went up 85 percent, and industry of other economic categories rose 200 percent. The output of 60 of the 89 major industrial products met or topped the planned quotas. Output of 25 industrial products including bicycles, tobacco, bulbs, and chemical fertilizers failed to meet their 1985 planned quotas.

The total output value of heavy industry in 1985 was 16.33 billion yuan, a 16.2 percent increase over the previous year.

The output of major heavy industrial products was as follows:

	1985	Percentage increase over 1984
Coal	214,220,000 tons	14.5
Electricity	18,46 billion kwh	10.2
Pig iron	2,294,000 tons	13.2
Steel	1,837,000 tons	4.2
Rolled steel	1,108,000 rons	7.6
Cement	4,587,000 tons	14.4
Plate glass	1,130,000 standard cases	-12.1
Sulphuric acid	161,000 tons	-42.9
Soda ash	21,000 tons	10.3
Chemical fertilizers	393,000 tons	-24.2
Chemical insecticides	2,947 tons	-48.7
Calcium carbide	194,000 tons	14.7
Machine tools	1,288	24.0
Walking tractors	15,993	-1.7
Internal combustion engines	210,000 horsepower	33.9
Transformers	1,616,000 kilovolt-amperes	31.9
Mining equipment	16,345 tons	83.8

The output value of light industry in 1985 was 6.63 billion yuan, a 16.5 percent increase over the previous year. Its proportion in the total output value of industry as a whole increased from 28.8 percent in 1984 to 28.9 percent.

The output of major light industrial products was as follows:

	1985	Percentage increase over 1984
Cotton yarn	77,762 tons	7.8
Cloth	375,55 million meters	8.4
Woolen piece goods	2.65 million meters	9.9
Silk fabrics	9.265 million meters	3.2
Machine-made paper and paper board	187,000 tons	25.3
Sugar	30,118 tons	12.5
Spirits	83,580 tons	38.1
Cigarettes	187,000 cases	-10.1
Chemical pharmaceuticals	1,280 tons	10.8
Bicycles	175,000	-12.1
Sewing machines	10,300	110.0
Television sets	180,000	58.1
Cassette recorders	29,000	630.0
Household washing machines	234,000	74.7
Furniture	3,360,000 pieces	47.6

Industrial economic results improved somewhat. Per-capita productivity for state-owned enterprises was 10,529 yuan, a 4.1 percent increase over 1984. Turnover period for working funds of budgeted state-owned industrial enterprises was 134 days, 1 day less than the previous year. Turnover in the forms of profit and taxes totaled 1.43 billion yuan, a 15.1 percent increase over 1984, outstripping the growth of output value. However, the total cost of comparable products went up 6.3 percent.

III. Energy

In 1985 the further acceleration of energy construction and production and of the pace of transportation alleviated the nation-wide long strain on energy supply.

Of the investment in capital construction, 1.93 billion yuan went into energy projects, a 10 percent increase or 180 million yuan more than in 1984. Of this sum, 1,301 billion yuan was channeled into coal mining industry, up 4.8 percent, adding 2.88 million tons of coal mining capacity; and 630 million yuan went into power industry, up 22.8 percent, adding 700,000 kilowatt-hours of power generating capacity.

In 1985 the output value of energy industry totaled 5.72 billion yuan (not including the output value of village-run coalpits), an increase of 8.3 percent or 443 million yuan more than in 1984. The annual output of primary energy production (converted into coal) was 182.35 million tons, up 13.5 percent; and the output of secondary energy production reached 16.69 billion tons, up 11.5 percent.

In 1985 Shanxi allocated and transfered 135 million tons of coal to 25 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions. When added to the amount exported, the total figure would be 138 million tons, a 10.9 percent increase or 13.65 million tons more than in 1984. The sum accounted for 65.9 percent of the total coal production. During the year, a total of 2.207 billion kwh of power was transmitted, a 19.8 percent increase or 365 million kwh of power more than in 1984.

The province exported 3,408 million tons of coal in 1985, an increase of 11 percent or 338,000 tons more than the previous year. Foreign exchange earned through coal export was $144.51 million, 63.7 percent of the total foreign exchange earned through the export of commodities.

IV. Investment in Fixed Assets and the Building Industry

Total investment in fixed assets came to 9.45 billion yuan, 37.2 percent or 2.56 billion yuan more than in 1984. Of that total, investment in fixed assets of state-owned units came to 6.67 billion yuan, a 35.6 percent rise over 1984; of urban and rural collectively owned units, 1.26 billion yuan, up 3.7 percent; and of urban and rural individuals, 1.52 billion yuan, up 100 percent. Of the investment in fixed assets of state-owned units, 5.04 billion yuan went into capital construction, an increase of 36.3 percent or 1.34 billion yuan more than in 1984. Of that total, local investment reached 1.65 billion yuan, a 45.1 percent increase or 510 million yuan more than in 1984. Local investment in capital construction stood at 978 million yuan after deducting the amount not included in the plan, 8 percent more than the 906 million yuan planned by the province.

The tempo of the construction of 16 key projects arranged by the state was quickened, absorbing 2.43 billion yuan in investment, accounting for 102.4 percent of the annual plan. During the year, the province undertook 2,630 construction projects, 574 more than in 1984. Of the total, 1,257 were wholly or partly completed and put into operation was 47.8 percent.

In addition to coal and power, capital construction last year helped add the following production capacity: 204.9 km of new highways, 89.1 km of new railways already in use, and 77.1 km of new double-track railways already in use.

State-owned units in 1985 made use of a total investment of 1.64 billion yuan for equipment replacement, technical upgrading, and other purposes, a 33.5 percent increase of 410 million yuan more than in 1984. Of this amount, 1.41 billion yuan was invested in equipment replacement and technical upgrading, 79.7 percent of the annual plan figure 1.77 billion yuan. Of the investment in equipment replacement and technical upgrading, 200 million yuan was used to increase the variety of products and to raise the quality of products, up 83.8 percent; and 50 million yuan was used to save energy amd raw and semi-finished materials, up 0.2 percent. Of the 1,896 projects undergoing equipment replacement and technical upgrading last year, 763 were completed and put into operation.

The reform of the administrative systems of the building industry and capital construction further developed in 1985. Of the 6,736 state-owned building units, 5,263 implemented the various forms of contract responsibility systems. Reform brought about better economic results. The output value of the building industry in 1985 totaled 2.32 billion yuan, an increase of 23.9 percent over the previous year. Per-capita labor productivity increased by 18.6 percent over that of 1984.

Geological units discovered 16 mineral-bearing areas in 1985. Of this, marked progress was made in 3 areas and headway was made in surveying the other 13 areas. Tunnelling footage completed in the year outstripped the annual plan by 6 percent.

V. Transportation, Posts and Telecommunications

The total volume of goods transported by all means of transportation was 291.64 [as published] million tons, up 14.1 percent from 1984. Of this, the volume of railway freight was 160.92 million tons, an increase of 9.3 percent; and that of road goods was 130.71 million tons, up 20.6 percent. The various transportation departments handled 36.1 billion ton-kilometers of goods, up 16 percent from 1984. Of this, the railways handled 30.87 billion ton-kilometers, a 13.6 percent increase; and trucks handled 5.23 billion ton-kilometers, up 32.5 percent. The railways handled 160.92 million tons of coal, a 9.3 percent increase over 1984.

The various transportation departments carried 105.64 million passengers in 1985, up 12.6 percent from 1984. Of this, the railways carried 33.91 million passengers, down 3 percent; and public vehicles carried 71.73 million passengers, up 21.9 percent. The gross volume of passenger transportation was 9.326 [as published] billion person-kilometers, a 16.7 percent increase over 1984. Of this, the volume of railway passengers transportationwas 6.214 billion person-kilometers, up 13.3 percent; and that of road passenger transportation was 3.104 billion person-kilometers, up 24.1 percent.

Transactions in posts and telecommunications amounted to 67.467 million yuan, up 11.8 percent from 1984. Of this, the number of letters handled went up 21.8 percent, newspapers and magazines distributed went up 7.4 percent, the number of telegraphs went up 17.9 percent, and long-distance telephone calls were up 8.9 percent. The year-end number of telephone subscribers in urban areas reached 56,600, an increase of 10.5 percent over 1984.

VI. Domestic Trade

The total value of commodities purchased by state-owned commercial departments and the supply and marketing cooperatives reached 9.01 billion yuan in 1985, a 12.8 percent increase over the previous year.

Of this, net domestic purchases amounted to 5.58 billion yuan, up 9.6 percent; and the commodities allocated from other provinces totaled 3.43 billion yuan, up 18.4 percent. Of the net pruchases of commodities, the total value of farm and sideline products was 1.74 billion yuan, down 10.3 percent; and that of manufactured goods was 3.84 billion yuan, up 21.8 percent.

The province's 1985 retail sales reached 10.21 billion yuan, an increase of 20.7 percent or 12.2 percent after deducting the factor of price increases. Of the total retail sales, consumer goods grew 26.7 percent, while farming materials and equipment dropped 9.5 percent. Compared with the previous year, sales of most principal consumer goods were as follows: Grain, up 11.6 percent; edible oils, up 17.1 percent; pork, down 5.2 percent; eggs, up 28.6 percent; sugar, up 17.9 percent; cotton cloth, up 2 percent; synthetic fabrics, up 6.8 percent; woolen piece goods, up 19.7 percent; silks and satins, up 5.5 percent; knitting wool, up 32.9 percent; cotton jersey and trousers, down 9 percent; knitwear, up 6.3 percent; leather shoes, up 27.1 percent; bicyles, down 3.4 percent; electric fans, up 130 percent; television sets, up 62 percent; cassette recorders, up 240 percent; washing machines, up 60 percent; and refrigerators, up 2.760 percent.

Retail sales in all sectors of the economy increased. Total value of retail sales in the public-owned sector was 4.67 billion yuan, up 4.8 percent from 1984; the corresponding figure in the collective sector was 3.71 billion yuan, up 20.5 percent; and that in the joint-management sector was 16 million yuan, up 250 percent. Sales in the individual sector reached 1.28 billion yuan, an increase of 120 percent over 1984. Retail sales by peasants to non-agricultural residents totaled 540 million yuan, 57.3 percent over the previous year.

There were 1,295 commodity fairs in both the cities and the countryside at the end of the year, 172 more than in 1984. Volume of business of the commodity fairs totaled 1.35 billion yuan, a 65.7 percent increase over the previous year. The number of individuals in both urban and rural areas engaged in industry and commerce increased to 303,000 households or 614,000 people, 81,000 households or 203,000 people more than in 1984.

Purchases and sales of the material supply departments rose repectively by 21.4 and 19.8 percent over 1984. The supply of pig iron increased by 8.2 percent; rolled steel, up 6.1 percent; timber, up 1.1 percent; and cement, up 17.3 percent. Costs for distributing these materials dropped by 0.3 percent from 1984.

The general price indices for state purchases of farm and sideline products rose an average of 6.5 percent over the previous year. The overall level of retail prices went up an average of 7.6 percent. This included 8.5 percent in the urban areas and 6.6 percent in the rural areas. The price of fresh vegetable rose 35.9 percent; meat, poultry, and eggs, 20.7 percent; aquatic products, 18.6 percent; fruit, 29.6 percent; grain, 9.8 percent, Chinese medicines, 8.9 percent; books, magazines, and periodicals, 23.2 percent; and fuel, 15.5 percent. Prices for garments and daily necessities remained basically the same as in the previous year and prices for cultural and recreational goods dropped somewhat. The cost of living index for workers and staff rose 8.5 percent over 1984. Of this, prices for consumer goods rose 7.9 percent and those for services went up 15.8 percent.

VII. Foreign Economy and Tourism

Total value of imports and exports in 1985 came to $301 million, a 47.3 percent increase over the previous year. Exports totaled $227 million, 36.2 percent more than in 1984; and import totaled $74 million, up 96 percent. In exports, the proportion of manufactured goods dropped from 95.7 percent in 1984 to 88 percent; and that of farm and sideline products rose from 4.3 to 12 percent. Exports of major commodities in 1985 rose over the previous year. Coal exports rose 11 percent; alumina, 300 percent; nails, 340 percent; spirits, 26.4 percent; astragalus membranaceus, 54.9 percent; cloth, 61.3 percent; fur coats, 130 percent; and detergent, 41.9 percent. Exports of miscellaneous grain, garments, Glavber's salt, and yeast also increased by a big margin over 1984.

A total of 16,537 visitors came to Shanxi in 1985 on tours and visits and for trade, sports, scientific, and cultural activities, a 9.5 percent increase over the previous year. The figure included 14,785 foreigners, a 17.5 percent increase over 1984; and 1,752 Overseas Chinese and Chinese compatriots from Hong Kong and Macao, down 30.6 percent. Foreign exchange income from these sources was valued at 12.89 million yuan, an increase of 190 percent over 1984.

VIII Science, Education, and Culture

In 1985 Shanxi submitted 476 provincial scientific and technical research results to the state, a 5 percent increase over the previous year. During the year, 16 scientific and technical research results won prizes from the state and 7 innovations received national awards.

Institutions of higher learning enrolled 14,107 students, 2,430 more than in 1984. These institutions had a total enrollment in 1985 of 41,946 students, 5,608 more than the previous year. Adult higher education institutions enrolled 12,088 students last year, 8,571 more than in 1984. That increased the total student body to 30,244 last year, 21,497 more than the year before. Graduates from these schools totaled 8,499 and 7,162, respectively.

Senior middle schools had 229,000 students, 16,000 more than in 1984. Junior middle schools had 1,341,000 students, 51,000 more than in 1984. Secondary technical schools had 51,448 students, 4,732 more than the previous year. Apprentice schools had 18,569 students, 2,902 more than in 1984. Agricultural middle schools and vocational middle schools had 75,808 students, up 11,760. The students enrolled by agricultural middle schools and vocational middle schools accounted for 49.8 percent of those enrolled by senior middle schools. Adult middle schools had 259,000 students, an increase of 50,000 or so over 1984.

In 1985 there were 3,352,000 pupils in primary schools, down 4.6 percent. In the 36 counties that passed the acceptance test on popularizing primary education, the rate of children entering school rose from 98.76 percent in 1984 to 98.95 percent. A total of 7,731 kindergartens accepted 593,000 children, 108,000 more than in 1984. Headway was made in education for the blind, deaf, mute, and mentally retarded.

Last year the province had 6,680 cinemas and film projection teams, 175 performing art troupes, 128 cultural clubs, 103 public libraries, and 56 museums. There were 3 radio stations, 12 radio transmitting and relay stations, 6 television stations, and 16 television transmitting and relay stations, each with capacity of more than 1,000 watts. The province published 540 million copies of provincial, prefectural, and city newspapers, up 27.1 percent from 1984; 78.64 million copies of magazines and periodicals, down 22.8 percent; and 99.91 million copies of various kinds of books, up 1.7 percent.

IX Public Health and Sports

The number of hospital beds reached 82,000 by the end of 1985, an increase of 4.8 percent. Professional health workers numbered 110,500, up 3 percent as compared with 1984. The total included 48,600 doctors (including physicians trained in traditional Chinese and Western medicine), up 0.6 percent; and 16,500 nurses, a 0.8 percent increase over 1984.

In 1985 the province's athletes won 38 gold, 35 silver, and 47 bronze medals in the national games. Two of them broke 2 national records twice and 35 broke 48 provincial records on 64 occasions. A total of 1,072 sports meets were held at and above the county level with a participation of 318,000 athletes. A total of 1.31 million people met the requirements prescribed by the "State Standards for Physical Culture and Sports Training."

X. Living Standards

Living standards in both the cities and the countryside further improved in 1985. A sample survey of 2,100 peasant families in 35 counties showed an average annual per-capita net income of 358.3 yuan (including 319.21 yuan from productive activities and 39.09 yuan from cash and articles remitted or brought back by family members working away from home and relief funds issued by the state), a 5.8 percent increase of 19.52 yuan more than last year's 338.78 yuan (footnote 2) (net increase of the peasants in 1984 was 350.5 yuan); if calculated in terms of 1985 prices (excluding the case presented by the peasants to each other and the income from selling property), the figure should be 338.78 yuan). Average per-capital living expenses were 272.74 yuan, up 21.6 percent. A sample survey of 840 worker and staff households in 8 cities showed an average annual per-capita income of 580 yuan, a 15.9 percent increase. Living expenses reached 558.6 yuan, up 25.8 percent from 1984. Deducting the rise in the cost of living index, real income rose by 6.2 percent and expenses rose by 15.3 percent. A sample survey of 200 inhabitant households in 4 counties showed an annual per-capita income of 477 yuan and living expanese of 428.9 yuan.

In 1985 jobs were found for 134,000 people in urban areas. The province had 3,771,000 workers and staff by the end of the year, 193,000 more than in 1984. Self-employed workers in cities and towns totaled 83,000. The annual wages of workers and staff in 1985 totaled 4.01 billion yuan, up 12.7 percent from 1984. The average annual cash wage for workers and staff was 1,098 yuan, a 7.2 percent increase over the previous year.

By the end of 1985, urban and rural savings deposits totaled 5.29 billion yuan, 30.6 percent more than the 1984 year-end figure.

Social welfare work improved somewhat. There were 13 social welfare institutes run by the civil administration departments in 1985 which provided for 882 elderly, disabled, mentally retarded, and orphaned people who lost their ability to work, had no income, and had nobody else to support them. Rural collectives provided for 38,704 elderly, widowed, disabled, and orphaned people, 650 more than in 1984.

XI Population

According to a sample survey of 45,902 residents in 256 groups (village in 52 counties, the provinces birth rate in 1985 was 17.32 per thousand, the mortality rate was 6.36 per thousand, and the natural growth rate was 10.96 per thousand. By the end of 1985, the province had 26,265,000 people, 262,000 more than the previous year.

SHANXI PROVINCE UNVEILS 'AMBITIOUS' IMPORT, EXPORT PLANS

[By staff reporter Chen Zhisong]

[Text] Taiyuan -- Shanxi Province has mapped out ambitious plans for the development of its exports and imports over the next five years.

It is expected that by the year 1990, the province's exports will be worth $400 million, which represents an average annual growth rate of 13.2 percent during the Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-1990).

"Shanxi's exports have a lot of potential because the province is blessed with rich natural resources," Li Shuangchai, deputy chief of the Shanxi Provincial Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Bureau Office told CHINA DAILY.

Reserves of six of the province's 86 mineral despoits are the largest in China -- coal, alumina, refractory rock, limestone, gypsum and perlite.

Its coal, farfural chemicals, and Huangqi (a Chinese herbal medicine) exports are the largest in China. Other major export goods include Fen and Zhuyeqing liquors, Meihua brand silk filament, and the traditional medicines Kwi Ling Chi Chiew and Dingkundan.

Being a major maize producer, Shanxi is also considering expanding its maize exports. This year, it has been licenced by the state to export 500,000 tons of maize, compared to 80,000 tons in 1985. Some of the province's major export producers will be allowed to import and export directly from this year. And export-oriented factories will receive priority in their construction. The province now has some 20 export products that are capable of earning $1 million that of foreign exchange in one year. [as published]

When asked about the province's import business, Li told CHINA DAILY that foreign capital and technology imports over the next five years should show no remarkable increase as the state had tightened up on spending in this field.

However, 58 key businesses have been listed for major technical modernization with foreign help during the next five years, including the Taiyuan Iron and Steel Complex, the Taiyuan Heavy Machinery Plant and the Shanxi Fertilizer Plant.

Imports of complete sets of industrial equipment will be reduced to a minimum. Attention will be focussed on the exploitation and consolidation of technology imported during the last five-year plan period. In that time, the province established 178 co-operative projects with foreign countries, involving turnover of $138 million. Of the projects, 115 involved technical improvements in the coal, metallurgical, machine, textiles, chemical, electronic and light industries. By 1985, 60 of the 178 projects had gone into operation, resulting in improve economic efficiency. A recent provincial survey on 30 of these businesses shows that they are yielding $3 for every one invested.

"Shanxi Province is a latecomer in the import and export field. Shares in foreign capital and technology import are small compared with the coastal provinces," said Li.

To date, the province has set up import and export agencies in the cities of Tianjin, Guangzhou, Shenzhen and in the U.S., Central Africa and Hong Kong.

TIANJIN MAKES ARRANGEMENTS FOR PARTY RECTIFICATION

SK260346 Tianjin TIANJIN RIBAO in Chinese 12 Mar 86 p 1

[Excerpts] A good job should be done in consolidating the party organizations at the grassroots levels, combating negative phenomenon inside the party, upgrading the ideological and political quality of broad masses of party members at the grassroots levels, building the party's basic organizations into strong combat bastions, and in enabling the broad masses of party members at the grassroots levels to play a vanguard and model role on the forefront of conducting production and reforms.

All these were the tasks adopted at the party rectification work conference sponsored by the municipal CPC Committee with regard to carrying out party rectification at the grassroots levels this year.

The work conference on party rectification sponsored by the municipal CPC Committee opened on 9 March and concluded on 11 March. At the conference, the responsible comrades of the municipal CPC Committee delivered reports on behalf of the leading group for party rectification.

At the conference the participating comrades held group discussions.

The conference pointed out: Our municipality scored marked achievements in carrying out second-stage party rectification work last year. According to the central arrangements and the work plan mapped out by the municipal CPC Committee, our municipality will carry out in an overall way party rectification work at the grassroots level this year. The number of units that should undertake party rectification work totals 10,644 with 215,658 party members. The party rectification work at the grassroots levels throughout the municipality will be basically concluded next spring.

The conference stressed: In line with the central spirit and the state of affairs in party organizations at the grassroots levels throughout the municipality, the work emphasis of party rectification among units at the grassroots levels should be as follows:

1. Efforts should be made to regard the work of straightening out party style as very important. It is necessary for every unit to earnestly deal with the prominent problems that have hindered the tasks of achieving a fundamental turn for the better in party style and social morale, correcting various malpractices, strictly enforcing party discipline, and earnestly investigating and dealing with serious cases.

2. A good job should be done in conducting education on party spirit, on ideals and discipline, on the spirit of serving the people wholeheartedly, and on the four basic principles.

3. Efforts should be made to straighten out understanding on the situation and policies, to eliminate "leftist" influence, to combat one-sidedness in ideology, and to correctly discern problems cropping up along the road of advance.

4. Efforts should be made to enhance the building of leading bodies in party organizations at grassroots levels and to build these bodies into institutions that are upright in ideology, political line, and workstyle, that can unite as one, that are full of vigor, and that can lead the masses to march forward along the socialist road.

Wu Zhen, deputy secretary of the municipal CPC Committee, attended the conference and delivered a speech, in which he stated: To make a success of party rectification work this year, it is imperative to regard the work of straightening out party style as an important political task and as the emphasis in conducting party rectification work and consolidating or developing the achievements scored in the party rectification drive, and to attach great importance to the work. All units that should take up party rectification work this year, or those who have completed the work must do a good job in grasping the important task of straightening out party style. In straightening out party style, efforts should be made to firmly grasp the three links of having leading cadres take the lead, earnestly dealing with the malpractice on one's own front, and upgrading the political quality of party members. In waging the party rectification drive, efforts should be made to promote and ensure smooth progress in the programs of conducting reforms and economic construction.

XINJIANG BOOSTS TRADE WITH USSR, OTHER COUNTRIES

OW260818 Beijing XINHUA in English 0758 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Urumqi, March 26 (XINHUA) -- Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region will increase its total value of imports and exports by 11 percent this year to 323 million U.S. dollars, a foreign trade official here said today.

The official in this regional capital said Xinjiang would boost foreign trade with the Soviet Union, Pakistan and other neighboring countries over the next five years.

It would export 350 million U.S dollars of goods by 1990, up 94.4 percent over 1985 and import 150 million U.S dollars, up 36.4 percent.

To achieve this, regional authorities would set up several cotton and fruit export production centers, and factories to process animal by-products.

Cotton exports would increase by up to 20,000 tons a year to 140,000 tons by 1990, cotton cloth to 50 million meters, woolen fabrics to one million meters and carpets to 100,000 square meters. There would also be big increases in exports of animal by-products, minerals, machinery, fruit and other food.

Last year, Xinjiang's foreign trade was worth 291 million U.S. dollars, almost four times the 1980 figure.

The official said the total volume during the Sixth Five-Year Plan (1981-1985) came to 814 million U.S. dollars -- 17 percent above the quota.

KUANG CHIAO CHING ON FUJIAN LEADERSHIP CHANGE

HK230550 Hong Kong KUANG CHIAO CHING in Chinese No 162, 16 Mar 86 pp 6-7

[Article by contributing reporter Lu Li: "The Whole Story About Chen Guangyi Replacing Xiang Nan"]

[Text] Two Special Planes Carried Xiang Nan, Hu Ping, Hu Hong, and Chen Guangyi to Beijing, and Hu Yaobang and Zhao Ziyang Immediately Convened a Group Meeting

In mid-February, two special planes respectively took off from Fuzhou and Lanzhou, carrying leaders of Fujian Province and Gansu Province to Beijing. Those coming from Fujian included provincial party committee Secretary Xiang Nan, provincial party committee Deputy Secretary and provincial Governor Hu Ping, and provincial party Advisory Commission Chairman Hu Hong; from Gansu, provincial Governor Chen Guangyi was called to Beijing. Shortly after they arrived in Beijing, Hu Yaobang and Zhao Ziyang held a secret meeting with these people from the southeast and the northwest. Why did the CPC central leaders meet with these four local leaders at the same time? The answer has been brought to light: At that meeting, the top leadership in Beijing decided to assign Chen Guangyi to replace Xiang Nan as secretary of the Fujian Provincial CPC Committee.

The rumor that Xiang Nan will soon be transferred from Fujian has been circulated in overseas areas from time to time, but the rumor was merely guesswork. Now Xiang Nan's departure is a fact.

Because of his being overage, Xiang Nan has many times requested that the CPC central leadership let him retire from office. There are different reports about Xiang Nan's age in China and in overseas areas. It has been learned from authoritative sources that Xiang Nan was born in 1918, so he is nearing 70. He is now in good health and is full of vigor. He has been shouldering the arduous tasks of leading the party and government in Fujian for 5 years. However, it is just a matter of time before he retires to the second line according to the principle of rejuvenating the ranks of cadres and substituting the old with the young.

Beijing Transferred Jia Qinglin to Fujian

In light of the needs of actual work, the CPC central leadership asked Xiang Nan to continue working in Fujian for some time. At the same time, the central authorities and Fujian Province have also begun to readjust the leading body of the province. Last year the National Conference of Party Delegates, the people's congress, and the CPPCC meeting all made some readjustments in their leading organs, with some old people stepping down and some new people being promoted to fill in the vacancies. In particular, Beijing transferred Jia Qinglin, who is relatively young, to Fujian and appointed him deputy secretary of the provincial party committee. Jia is now the number three leader in the province next to Xiang Nan and Hu Ping.

Chen Guangyi Will Arrive in Fujian in Mid-March

Xiang Nan's retirement has been arranged. After repeated studies and discussions, the CPC top leadership has finally decided to transfer 52-year-old Chen Guangyi, who was born in Putian City of Fujian, back to his home province from Gansu to take over Xiang Nan's job. It is learned that the CPC central leadership is still discussing this transfer and other personnel arrangements with the Gansu provincial party and government leaders, and some formalities have yet to be gone through. It is expected that Chen Guangyi will not come to Fujian until mid-March. Xiang Nan and his wife Wang Zhiqing (director of the Fujian provincial cultural, educational, scientific, and public health committee) will move back to Beijing, but no new jobs have assigned to them yet.

Many cadres and ordinary people in Fujian are talking about Xiang Nan's departure. They all praise this broad-minded old secretary who dared to make explorations in reforms and to undertake responsibilities and who always sets strict demands on himself.

Xiang Nan came to his leading post in Fujian in January 1981, and has now stayed in this post for 5 whole years. The past 5 years coincided with the period of the Sixth 5-Year Plan, in which Fujian Province experienced major changes through the adoption of measures for setting things in all fields right and for various reforms and through opening up to the outside world and speeding construction.

As is known to all, during the disastrous 10-year Cultural Revolution, Fujian was well-known as a severely afflicted area. Moreover, there were many knotty and complicated problems left over from the previous 20 to 30 years. When coming to Fujian to shoulder the heavy task of leading this province in 1981, Xiang Nan faced a lot of difficulties. But he bravely went ahead together with cadres and people in the whole province to vigorously carry out the tasks, principles, and policies laid down by the central authorities for the new period. He has done a great deal of work for creating a new situation in Fujian. His achievements can be summarized into the following five points:

The Five Issues That Xiang Nan Has Solved in Fujian

First, as soon as Xiang Nan took office in Fujian, he began to grasp the key link of setting straight the guiding principle and emancipating people's minds so as to break through the "leftist" conventions and to eliminate the residual influence of the "leftist" ideology. He took the lead in resolutely promoting the agricultural production responsibility system, and this began to give rise to major changes in the Fujian countryside.

Second, Xiang Nan has made great efforts to ensure the implementation of various policies. He does not pay attention to the implementation of merely one or two policies, but he pays attention to the implementation of all policies. He has redressed many mishandled cases in Fujian, including those concerning the underground party organizations in Fujian, the urban work department, and other historical problems. He has personally dealt with affairs concerning the implementation of the policies toward Overseas Chinese and their relatives at home, toward cadres, and toward intellectuals. This has greatly gratified cadres' and people's feelings.

Third, in the past 5 years, Xiang Nan has done a great deal of work to implement the policy of "enlivening the domestic economy and opening up to the outside world." In particular, he has done much pioneering and exploring work. Fujian has built a special economic zone in Xiamen, has opened the Fuzhou area and the Minnan triangle areas, and has achieved good results in these opening areas by adopting various special and flexible measures.

Fourth, Xiang Nan has spared no effort to promote Fujian's economic construction. In the past, as a "forefront" province, there were no key construction projects in Fujian for more than 30 years, and the province could not free itself from the poor and backward conditions for a long time. This is a fact known to all. After coming to Fujian, Xiang Nan made many inspection tours in all parts of the province and instructed all localities to bring the advantages of the natural conditions of having mountains and seas and the advantages of having overseas relatives and special policies into full play. Proceeding from the actual conditions, Fujian has built eight major bases and successfully fulfilled the tasks of the Sixth 5-Year Plan. The economic growth rate of Fujian has exceeded the national average, and the living standards of the people in Fujian have been markedly raised.

Fifth, while making efforts to develop material civilization, Xiang Nan also pays full attention to the development of spiritual civilization. He attaches great importance to education, technology, scientific research, and management, and sets great store in the development of intellectual resources. Xiang Nan has made special efforts in all this regard. He has personally written editorials and articles for FUJIAN RIBAO, and this has deeply impressed the people.

Of course, no one will deny that Fujian Province has encountered various problems and made some errors in the past 5 years, and there are still many difficulties and contradictions that have yet to be solved in the process of advance. At the same time, we do not mean that all achievements of Fujian Province in the past 5 years must be attributed to the efforts made by Xiang Nan alone or by a small number of people. It is due to the joint efforts made by the 26 million people in Fujian, with whom Xiang Nan has worked, that the province has made such remarkable achievements. However, if one reviews the situation over the past 5 years, one may admit that the past 5 years represent the best period in terms of development in Fujian. In the past 5 years, a solid foundation has been laid for Fujian's future reforms, opening, and construction. This good situation is indeed valuable, because it has not come easily.

At the Meeting, Hu and Zhao Praised Xiang Nan

It has been learned that when holding a meeting with Xiang Nan, Hu Ping, Hu Hong, and Chen Guangyi, central leaders Hu Yaobang and Zhao Ziyang fully affirmed the results and achievements in the past 5 years that Xiang Nan made in Fujian. They particularly praised Fujian for resolutely carrying out the central authorities' principles, policies, measures for the new period. They expressed great expectations for Fujian's future development and hoped that Fujian will continue to make efforts, will maintain unity and stability, and will develop the good situation.

Chen Guangyi Graduated from Northeast Polytechnic College

On the part of Chen Guangyi, it is certain that he is now facing a heavy load of work. Chen Guangyi, 52, graduated from the Northeast Polytechnic College. In school, he majored in metallurgy. He graduated from the college in 1953. He belongs to the first generation of college graduates trained by New China.

Chen Guangyi Was a Leader of a Silver Refining Plant

After graduation, Chen Guangyi worked for a long time in the metallurgical department and lived in northwest China for a long time. He previously worked in a famous silver plant, and he has rich experience in dealing with technical affairs. A few years ago, he was promoted to the provincial leading body and was elected a member of the CPC Central Committee at the National Conference of Party Delegates in September last year. (Hu Ping also entered the Central Committee on that occasion.) Chen Guangyi was born in Putian City of Fujian Province. His mother still lives in his home town. Chen's wife is from Sichuan and is also a college graduate. As it is understood, the central leadership fully trusts Chen Guangyi in deciding to transfer him to Fujian, and Chen also expressed his determination to carry forward Fujian's work and develop the achievements made by Xiang Nan. It is expected that he will arrive in Fujian in mid-March. After meeting with other provincial leaders, it is expected that the first thing he will do is to make an inspection tour in various areas of the province as Xiang Nan did.

Zhou Hui, Secretary of the Nei Monggol Regional Party Committee, May Also Be Replaced

Reportedly, another overage provincial-level secretary -- Nei Monggol regional party committee Secretary Zhou Hui -- will also be replaced soon, and a younger cadre will take over his job.

At present the only overage provincial-level leader remaining in office is Xu Jiatun, director of the XINHUA Hong Kong Branch. However, according to the wishes of most people in Beijing and in Hong Kong, he is expected to continue in his important post for some time, because it is hard to find another suitable person who will also be accepted by Hong Kong people to take over his job. Therefore, Director Xu may still remain in his leading post in Hong Kong for a few years.

ATTITUDE TOWARD 'CULTURAL DISSENT' SEEN CHANGING

HK200923 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 20 Mar 86 p 2

[Article by K.C. Tsang: "China Eases Up on Cultural Dissent"]

[Text] Subtle changes are occurring in China's approach to dealing with "erroneous elements" in the cultural field, as a result of more open policies and continued pressure from overseas Chinese communities. There have been a number of cases in the past two years involving men of letters, whose thinking and works ran foul of the authorities. Some lost their jobs, others simply gave up writing or are writing less and, of course, still some others simply switched to the party line. But regardless of the nature of the "offences," the treatment of artists or writers has improved somewhat as the Government becomes more conscious of public opinion overseas, especially those in Hong Kong and the North American Chinese communities.

In the past, when a person was condemned for misconduct, either morally or by way of his writings, he would go into complete eclipse. He would be ostracised by the community, and all his past deeds, however glorious, would no longer be counted publicly. For a writer or novelist, this meant his works would not see daylight again once the author was condemned for a criminal offence or for political reasons. In those days it did not matter much whether the crime was political or criminal as there was often no distinction made between the two.

Such a policy, highly feudalistic in nature, was in fact inherited from imperial times, which officially ended with the demise in 1911 of the Qing dynasty under the infant Emperor Henry Pu Yi. In imperial times, the only way of getting into official-dom was through examinations on Confucian learning from the lowest grade in the village to the highest examinations in the emperor's court. For all those who failed the imperial exam, their fate -- at least that of the majority -- was sealed and they were destined to lead a miserable life. Those who became frustrated and incurred the wrath of the emperor or his officials through their words or writings could easily be condemned in what is known as "jailing for a literary offence." It has been very much a Chinese tradition to hold literature or writers with a dissident view in contempt.

In the case of communist China, the numerous struggles waged against the intellectuals in the anti-rightist campaign during the mid-1950s and the cultural revolution a decade later were to a large extent aimed at the thinking and writings of individuals. The "offences" arose from deviations in thinking from the official line. This is no different from offences committed in imperial times by those who were ostracised for having gone against Confucian beliefs. One exception was during the rule of Emperor Qin Shi Huangti, who ordered the burning of Confucian works and condemned thousands of Confucian intellectuals to death. Emperor Qin's mass clampdown was, again, ideologically based because at that time the learning of Confucianism was held in contempt.

The anti-rightist campaign and the cultural revolution reflected a struggle between two lines of thinking -- the capitalist and the socialist lines -- in addition to a struggle for political power. A new, more enlightened approach towards treating intellectuals and their work began to emerge only in the past couple of years. The communist authorities have become more sensitive to issues, notably those involving writers who have an appeal among overseas Chinese.

One must not underestimate the pressure generated by the intellectual class of Chinese people living overseas, particularly North America. Some Hong Kong-based periodicals regularly feature the life and work of intellectuals in China, which have attracted great attention among overseas Chinese. These articles often follow in great detail issues concerning controversial literary figures in China and have aroused concern among leaders in Beijing, which would not wish to upset the feelings of overseas Chinese intellectuals. China is working hard to win the goodwill of the overseas Chinese, many of whom have contributed towards the country's development and whose support would be significant in China's effort at unification with Taiwan.

Another reason for a more tolerant attitude is the open policy adopted by the Chinese authorities. Such a development is the result of a recognition of backwardness in the economic and cultural fields, although there is still a long way to go for China to become a land of free creativity in the sense we have come to know.

Despite high or excessive sensitivity towards critical literary works, such as those by popular writer Liu Binya, the policy these days does not go to the lengths of sending offenders into political exile. Mr Liu was spared the hardship of going into disgrace or becoming a "political untouchable," just because some of his works had incurred the wrath of those in power. Directly or indirectly, Mr Liu has now been muffled. But in the past, the stinging criticisms in his famous semifictional work, "Between Men and Devils," could have cost him his life or a long jail term for having written "anti-party materials." While Mr Liu continues to keep his pay and technically keeps most of his literary positions on committees, he has nevertheless come under enough pressure for him not to go further in his criticism. He has since vowed not to write more under the present atmosphere.

The treatment of Mr Liu and a few other literary figures in recent months suggests that subtle changes are occurring across the cultural front, although there is still plenty of room for relaxation.

The punishment meted out to famous writer Zhou Erfu in March is another case which throws new light on the current approach in disciplining offenders who are party members and have allegedly committed a misconduct which had nothing to do with their literary work. According to a CHINA NEWS SERVICE report on March 3, Mr Zhou, who had enjoyed high fame being vice-president of the Chinese People's Committee for Friendship With Foreign Countries, was also stripped of all his leading official positions in the cultural field. This was in addition to yet another punishment of expulsion from the party. Mr Zhou's offences arose from his visit to the Shintaro Shrine in Tokyo last October while he was in Japan as head of an official delegation. The report said Mr Zhou visited the shrine in spite of the strong advice against it by officials in the Chinese Embassy in Tokyo. Obviously, Mr Zhou, being a senior party member, put himself on the line by going against China's policy of condemning any honour accorded to the Japanese war dead, because of Japanese atrocities in China during the invasions before and during World War II. It seems, at least on the surface, that the action against Mr Zhou was justified on the grounds that being the leader of an official Chinese delegation, he had committed an act in a foreign country, which in the view of the Chinese Government was detrimental to the prestige of the state.

Agency reports also said that Mr Zhou was fired also for misconduct involving sex during his Tokyo visit. The first offence alone would be severe enough to have caused Mr Zhou to be sacked.

One major difference in the treatment of the writer is that despite the "heinous crimes" he had committed, his works such as "Morning in Shanghai" were not banned. This is clearly an attempt to make a distinction between the conduct of a person and his works. The same applies to writer Liu's works.

The CHINA NEWS SERVICE said there was no interruption on the broadcast of serialisation of his works on Central People's Radio, which began on December 29. Moreover, Chinese authorities promised that publication and sale of his other works will not be affected by the punishment. However, despite the more lenient treatment so far as the writer's works are concerned, there should be little doubt in anybody's mind that he will lose a lot of his friends.

What is inadequate in the balance of justice in this case is that Mr Zhou's version of the story, his defence, has yet to be heard, for details of the disciplinary hearings have not been disclosed. The question of accountability arises in Mr Zhou's case as he was a public official and the decision to expel him from the party was made by the central disciplinary committee -- the highest authority on party disciplinary matters in China. To those concerned about developments in China, any defence put up by Mr Zhou would be of great interest indeed. Attempts will be made by publications specialising in China to find out more about the case. Intellectuals in Hong Kong and North America, who are interested in cultural development in China, will be interested in the case. After all, sketchy details involving punishment against a well-known man of letters will not satisfy the public. A more open attitude on the part of the authorities will raise the level of accountability to the public and stop speculation.

It remains to be seen whether the treatment of Mr Zhou -- expelling him from the party for his act being "unworthy of a party member" but imposing no restriction on the circulation of his works -- will be an exception. The official CNS report did not say that the same treatment would apply to all others as a rule. It simply pointed out that the action against Mr Zhou "is different from the usual practice." Time will tell whether the treatment of Mr Zhou will establish a new practice that is more rational and which befits a more open society.

3 HONG KONG, 2 MACAO RESIDENTS ELECTED TO CPPCC

HK190212 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 19 Mar 86 p 10

[Text] Three Hong Kong residents and two from Macao were among 61 people elected yesterday to the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference.

The Hong Kong members are prominent surveyor Mr F.Y. Kan, the chairman of the Hon Wing Book Co, Mr Shek King-yee, and the director and general manager of the Yue Hwa Chinese Products Emporium Ltd, Mr Yu Kwok-chun.

The two Macao residents are company chairman Mr Wong Hua-hang and the general manager of the Tai Fung Bank, Mr Ho Aajau-Wah.

Mr Ho is the son of the late Mr Ho Yin, who was also a CPPCC member and the former chairman of the Tai Fung Bank. Mr Ho, 31, will be the youngest CPPCC member. Mr Kan is president of the Hong Kong Institute of Surveyors and a member of the 180-strong Basic Law Consultative Committee which was set up in December to advise on the drafting of the Basic Law. The five were named in a dispatch from the China News Service, but they have yet to receive official confirmation from the New China News Agency. Mr Kan said last night he would be honoured to serve the body. The inclusion of the five new members will take the number of Hong Kong and Macao delegates to 54.

REPORTAGE ON U.S.-LIBYA CONFLICT IN GULF OF SIDRA

XINHUA Examines 'Feud'

OW261606 Beijing XINHUA in English 1546 GMT 26 Mar 86

["News analysis: Deeply-Seated Feud Stirs Up U.S.-Libya Clash" (by Bao Guangren) -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Washington, March 25 (XINHUA) -- The Mediterranean has again become a grisly scene of regional conflict as a U.S. Navy fleet fired at four Libyan patrol boats, sinking three and damaging the other. U.S. Navy jets also bombed a Libyan missile base and a radar base yesterday.

A White House spokesman said the U.S. fleet, which began a military exercise last week in the Gulf of Sidra, launched the attack after Libya fired six missiles at U.S. aircraft. Libya, however, condemned the U.S. encroachment in its territorial waters and air space.

The bloody incident is apparently no accident. The United States has been at odds with Libya over the Gulf of Sidra for 13 years. The intensified hostility between the two countries recently has come to a head as the United States flexed its muscles on the doorstep of the North African state.

In 1973 Libya declared that the whole area of the Gulf of Sidra was under its jurisdiction. Libyan leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi threatened to attack any forces daring to cross what he called the "line of death" in the Gulf. But the United States and other Western nations have ignored Al-Qadhdhafi's warning and have insisted on recognizing only a 12-nautical-mile territorial limit and thus regard the Gulf of Sidra as part of the high seas that allow free passage by any country.

Clashes flared as U.S. Navy forces moved into the disputed Gulf in August 1981. The result: two Libyan aircraft were shot down by U.S. jet fighters.

For five years, almost from the very beginning of his presidency, U.S. President Ronald Reagan has tied Al-Qadhdhafi to worldwide terrorism. This accusation, however, has been denied in most cases by the Libyan leader. Since then, U.S. policy toward Libya has been a blend of economic sanctions and military blackmail.

President Ronald Reagan, in his first State of the Union message to Congress on January 26, 1982, vowed to "act with firmness" toward Libya, Cuba or any other nation that "would export terrorism and subversion." He depicted Al-Qadhdhafi as "enemy no. one" of the Western world on many later occasions.

Hostilities between the two countries heated up after Reagan blamed Libya for plotting the attacks in Rome and Vienna international airports last December in which 20 people were killed. Libya however denied any involvement in the attacks. After the Vienna and Rome insidents, President Reagan ordered Americans living in Libya to leave the country by February 1 and imposed economic sanctions.

Meanwhile, a U.S. fleet was sent to the Gulf of Sidra to begin a "demonstrative" war game in January. This action incurred strong condemnation from Libya and many other Third World countries, the Arab nations in particular.

The U.S. Government, which has always tried to find ways to punish Libya, was encouraged by its rival's military constraint. So, three U.S. aircraft-carriers steamed into the Gulf of Sidra last week for a 10-day exercise, which at last stirred up the exchange of fire between the two nations.

Despite White House explanations that the U.S. attacks are merely defensive and retaliatory actions, the American press here indicated that the U.S. attack is nothing but an outburst of its pent-up outrage against Al-Qadhdhafi.

It is apparent that the Americans' crossing the "line of death" was designed to provoke Libya into a military action so that the United States could teach Al-Qadhdhafi a lesson. A Pentagon source said that even several weeks before the incident U.S. forces were put on alert and were ready to act as soon as an opportunity arose.

The United States has also long been anxious to destroy Libya's air-defense base at Sidra built with the help of the Soviets. The missile base is on the top of a list of targets in a possible U.S. counterattack proposed by the White House staff after the Rome and Vienna airport attacks last year. But the Pentagon cannot justify its action since there has been no evident link between the base and the terrorists.

The U.S. Congress seems to condone the U.S. attacks. Still, there are some congressmen who criticized Reagan for violating the war powers act because he failed to consult with Capitol Hill before taking military action.

Many Americans are worried about the possible escalation of the U.S.-Libya conflict, which they think might cost a great number of American lives. Some others are also concerned that the U.S. punitive measures will backfire, triggering more hideous terrorist vengeance.

The Libyans are on a nationwide alert. Al-Qadhdhafi vowed yesterday that his country will "brave confrontation" with the United States as hundreds of thousands of Libyans took to the streets to protest the U.S. attacks. Suicide squads have been organized in the country which has also threatened to "execute all American experts" in the Arab world. Mounting tensions between the two feuding nations are drawing the attention of the whole world.

RENMIN RIBAO on Conflict

[Roundup of reports by RENMIN RIBAO reporters' groups in Algiers, Cairo, Damascus, and Washington: "Grave Military Conflict Occurs Between the United States and Libya"]

[Text] Algiers, Cairo, Damascus, Washington, 25 Mar -- The Libyan news agency reported that the Libyan air defense forces yesterday brought down three U.S. fighters which invaded Libya's territorial airspace during a military exercise off the Libyan coast. Reports from Libya said a U.S. fleet yesterday invaded Libya's territorial waters in the Gulf of Sidra and U.S. fighters attacked the outskirts of Surt and some Libyan ships. In self-defense, the Libyan air defense forces brought down three U.S. fighters in the Gulf of Sidra.

The Libyan Government called UN Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar last night to lodge a strong protest against the U.S. air raid upon Libya, condemning the U.S. invasion of Libya as an act seriously threatening the peace and security of the region and the world, and pledging to exercise its legitimate right of self-defense to punish the United States for its invasion of the country. The Libyan Broadcasting Service said Libya would make good its pledge and deal "ruthless blows" to the invader. The Libyan people today held nationwide demonstrations against the United States.

The U.S. Government yesterday afternoon denied the report that three U.S. planes had been brought down by Libya, but announced that planes of the U.S. 6th Fleet had sunk a Libyan patrol boat and destroyed another in the Gulf of Sidra, and had raided a missile launch site in Libya proper. White House spokesman Speakes said the above U.S. operation was carried out after Libya fired six long-range missiles at planes of the U.S. 6th Fleet.

It is reported that U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger has announced that the current U.S. military exercise in the Gulf of Sidra will be continued, and has ordered all U.S. troops in the Mediterranean to be prepared for war. According to other reports, a spokesman for the U.S. Department of Defense said Libya fired at least six ship-to-ship missiles at U.S. warships in the Gulf of Sidra early this morning and the U.S. side "hit back at the enemy," destroying two Libyan vessels and some radar installations on the coast.

U.S.-Libyan relations have been very tense since the terrorist operations at the Vienna and Rome airports last December. The United States has repeatedly held massive military exercises near Libyan territorial waters this year. Since the beginning of this year, the serious confrontation between the two countries in the controversial Gulf of Sidra had threatened to break out into armed conflict at any moment. Libya has announced the waters in the Gulf of Sidra to the south of 32 degrees 30 minutes north latitude to be Libyan territorial waters, and intrusion of this zone by planes or warships of any country will be regarded as violation of Libya's sovereignty. However, the United States claims that the waters 12 nautical miles off the Libyan coast are high seas where U.S. vessels and planes have the right to enter. At present, 3 aircraft carriers with 240 aircraft and 30 warships of the U.S. Navy have assembled in the Gulf of Sidra to participate in the fifth military exercise this year off the Libyan coast.

Sources close to the U.S. Department of Defense revealed in private that the United States' purpose in holding military exercises is to lure Libya to wage war so that it can take the opportunity to retaliate against Libya. THE WASHINGTON POST pointed out: The United States "purposely provokes Libya to attack so that it can find an opportunity to retaliate against Libya." U.S. media also believe that the United States must have been well prepared for the conflict, in light of the capacity of the missiles used by the U.S. planes.

The current conflict has drawn the attention of all circles. Klibi, secretary general of the Arab League, denounced in Tunisia yesterday the military exercises by the U.S. fleet in the Gulf of Sidra as a violation of Libya's sovereignty. The French Government has expressed its "deep concern" over the current armed conflict and voiced its hope that the right of free communications in international waters will be "respected." Meanwhile, Italian Premier Craxi discussed the situation in the Mediterranean at a special cabinet meeting today.

U.S. Press on Clash

OW262141 Beijing XINHUA in English 2117 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Washington, March 26 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. military confrontation with Libya in the Gulf of Sidra in the past two days was an action pre-arranged by the United States to "provoke" Libya into an attack on American planes so the U.S. could then retaliate, U.S. newspapers, such as THE WASHINGTON POST and THE NEW YORK TIMES said today. Press reports said U.S. President Ronald Reagan approved on March 14 the plan for the three U.S. aircraft carriers to manoeuver in the Gulf of Sidra.

Libya claims that the Gulf of Sidra is part of its territorial waters, but the United States and other Western countries refuse to recognize the claim. "U.S. officials said Reagan decided to send (U.S.) Navy vessels into the Gulf after being told it would almost certainly lead to a military confrontation with Libya", wrote THE NEW YORK TIMES.

At a national security policy group meeting on March 1, Reagan was told that Libya would probably attack the U.S. fleet by shooting first at U.S. planes with Soviet-built SA-5 missiles. Reagan decided to give the U.S. 6th Fleet's commander the discretion on how to respond, reports said. According to THE WASHINGTON POST, U.S. aircraft carrier operations north of Libya were first ordered in late January, but the Defense Department wanted to wait until three carriers were available near the Gulf of Sidra before testing Libyan leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi's claim that the entire Gulf is Libyan territory. U.S. officials said Al-Qadhdhafi's claim presented the U.S. with 'a golden opportunity' to test Libya but not undertake any preemptive or retaliatory action against targets that had not attacked U.S. forces first." They said in that case "any U.S. response would be defensive" and "international law and public opinion would be on our side".

Press reports said earlier that a report was presented to Reagan last July which said that Al-Qadhdhafi "threatened U.S. interests," and U.S. diplomatic pressure and economic sanctions had failed to curtail his "terrorism," and that "much stronger measures should be undertaken to thwart the Libyan leader." At that time the Central Intelligence Agency and Departments of State and Defense all agreed that an "unmistakable warning was to be sent" to Al-Qadhdhafi, although it was not yet clear how, where or when. A top-secret CIA study presented last July concluded that the U.S. "had an opportunity to redraw the map of North Africa," it is reported.

Last June, the U.S. airliner TWA flight 847 was hijacked with one American killed and 39 other held hostage for 17 days. Reagan said, according to the POST, that the televised humiliation aboard the TWA jet was too much to endure and that the U.S. would act in the future. The U.S. then decided a demonstration of U.S. resolve was necessary.

Reports also said Reagan approved a CIA covert operation designed to undermine Al-Qadhdhafi. He directed that the U.S. should coordinate with its allies in the Middle East to see Al-Qadhdhafi removed from power.

U.S. anger against Libya increased last December when Rome and Vienna airports were attacked by terrorists. The CIA claimed a strong Libyan connection in the attack and anti-Qadhdhafi planning was accelerated. In January, Reagan ordered that more money and attention be given to the covert CIA plan designed to undermine Al-Qadhdhafi publicy. Reagan ordered increased economic sanctions against Libya.

U.S. officials said "seeds were sown" for the clash with Libya after those terrorist attacks and the planning for a possible battle began about the same time Reagan was imposing the economic sanctions.

Gorbachev Criticizes U.S.

OW262142 Beijing XINHUA in English 2128 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, March 26 (XINHUA) -- Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev today condemned the United States for its "act of aggression" against Libya.

At a dinner given for visiting Algerian President Chadli Bendjedid, Gorbachev said that the U.S. military action was "not an unexpected incident but a punitive operation conceived and planned in advance."

He said that before the military act the U.S. ships conducted "provocative and threatening manoeuvres off Libya's coast" and the U.S. Administration implemented" a trade, financial and technological blockade" of Libya.

The Soviet leader stated that his country "resolutely denounces the aggressive anti-Libyan actions of the USA" and "is in solidarity with the Libyan people."

Algerian President Chadli Bendjedid arrived in Moscow Tuesday for a friendship visit.

Gorbachev Calls for Withdrawal

OW270722 Beijing XINHUA in English 0705 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, March 26 (XINHUA) -- Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev today promised to withdraw the Soviet Fleet from the Mediterranean if the United States will "do the same."

"If the United States, which is situated thousands upon thousands of miles from the Mediterranean, pulled its fleet out of there, the Soviet Union would simultaneously do the same," he stressed. Gorbachev was speaking at a dinner in the Kremlin in honour of Chadli Bendjedid, visiting president of the Algerian People's Democratic Republic. "The Soviet Union stands for making the Mediterranean, the cradle of many civilizations, into a zone of stable peace and cooperation," Gorbachev said.

He went on to say that the Soviet Union proposals included reducing armed forces, withdrawing ships carrying nuclear weapons from the Mediterranean, renouncing the deployment of such weapons in Mediterranean non-nuclear countries, and urging the nuclear powers to make a commitment not to use such weapons against any Mediterranean country. "We are prepared to go even further. For the Soviet Union in principle there is no need to have its naval fleet in the Mediterranean on a permanent basis. The Soviet Union has to keep its ships there permanently for this sole reason: The U.S. 6th Fleet armed with nuclear-missile weapons and threatening the security of the USSR, its allies and friends is in the immediate proximity of its borders.

"We are prepared without delay to enter talks with the United States on this issue," he announced.

Referring to the upcoming second congress by the non-aligned Mediterranean countries, Gorbachev suggested the organization be extended to cover the United States and all other related countries somewhat like the Conference on European Security and Cooperation.

U.S. Ignores Soviet Offer

OW270234 Beijing XINHUA in English 0151 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] Washington, March 26 (XINHUA) -- The United States actually refused the Soviet Leader's offer today to withdraw the Soviet Fleet from the Mediterranean if the United States withdraw its warships there.

Asked at a regular news briefing today how the U.S. will respond to the Soviet offer, State Department spokesman Charles Redman avoided a direct answer. Redman said, "We have briefed the Soviet Union as to why we're there. That's well understood. And as a consequence, I think I'd leave my answer at that."

He said that in Moscow there have been some contacts between the U.S. Embassy and the Soviet Ministry of Foreign Affairs on the issue. But he refused to go into details.

USSR'S POLICY TOWARD AFGHANISTAN, CAMBODIA

HK260849 Beijing BAN YUE TAN in Chinese No 5, 10 Mar 86 pp 56-57

[Article by Tang Tianri: "Moscow's Offensives Along Two Lines"]

[Text] Recently, Moscow has launched offensives along two lines in Afghanistan and Cambodia, where regional conflicts are going on. One is the peace offensive. It has repeatedly shown its willingness to see a political solution to the Afghan and Cambodian issues and expressed the hope that "substantive progress" will be made in this respect in the new year. The other is the military offensive. It has further intensified its war of aggression against Afghanistan and supported Vietnam in intensifying its war of aggression against Cambodia. It has also affirmed that the Afghan and Cambodian resistance forces will be wiped out in 3-5 years, making it possible for the Afghan and Cambodian issues to "vanish by themselves."

The key to political solutions to the Afghan and Cambodian issues lies in the total withdrawal of Soviet and Vietnamese troops respectively from Afghanistan and Cambodia. Although Moscow has continuously spread news of a "political solution," it has not shown any sign of "flexibility" on the crucial issue of troop withdrawal. Before and after New Year's Day, the Soviet leaders repeatedly declared that the Soviet Union would not unconditionally withdraw its forces from Afghanistan and that only by "completely ceasing, and pledging not to resume, external armed intervention and other interventions would it be possible to reach a political solution to the Cambodian issue." Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Kapitsa even asserted that the Soviet Union would not make any concessions on this issue. On the Cambodian issue, the Soviet Union would not like to see Vietnam unconditionally withdraw its troops from Cambodia either. The Soviet leaders had to admit that the Democratic Kampuchean National Army is "a political force" and they called on Sihanouk and Son Sann to first "sever their relations" with the Democratic Kampuchean National Army and then "get into contact and hold talks" with the puppet Cambodian regime. The Soviet Union also held that Vietnam's withdrawal from Cambodia would depend on various conditions, such as the "increased combat effectiveness" of the puppet troops, the "gradual elimination" of the Democratic Kampuchean resistance forces, and a "pledge to realize a peace zone" in Indochina by the international community.

Obviously, the essence of such a "political solution" and Moscow's intention in desiging such a blueprint are that: First, Moscow is attempting to disintegrate, crush one by one, and finally wipe out the Afghan and Cambodian resistance forces with the tactics of defeating them without a battle in order to achieve the objective which it could not achieve on the battlefield. Second, through the so-called "international guarantee" it is attempting to lure the international community into giving up the community's support for the Afghan and Cambodian resistance forces and accepting the Soviet invasion and occupation of Afghanistan and the Vietnamese invasion and occupation of Cambodia as a fait accompli. This shows that the Soviet Union does not have the slightest desire or sincerity in reaching a political solution to the Afghan and Cambodian issues in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the UN General Assembly.

So far, the Soviet Union still persists in solving the Afghan and Cambodian issues by military means. Moscow asserts that if the road to a political solution leads nowhere, it cannot but "take the road of a nonpolitical solution." According to the estimates of the Soviet leaders, by persisting in the Soviet war of aggression against Afghanistan for another 4-5 years and Vietnam's war of aggression against Cambodia for another 2-3 years it will be possible to completely wipe out the Afghan and Cambodian resistance forces. By that time, the Afghan and Cambodian issues will "vanish by themselves" and the withdrawal of Soviet and Vietnamese troops from Afghanistan and Cambodia will naturally present no problems.

In order to attain this objective, the Soviet Union has launched a large-scale new winter offensive in the Afghan battlefields. The spearhead of this offensive is primarily directed toward the areas around of all major cities, important military bases and the eastern and western borders, as well as both sides of vital communication lines. It has especially stepped up attacks against key sectors in the eastern and southeastern parts close to the Pakistani border. The Soviet troops have also frequently dispatched small commando units to launch surprise attacks against the guerrillas in an attempt to wipe out the effective strength of the guerrillas. According to sources in the Afghan resistance forces, the battles this winter were fiercer than in any other winters in the past. Recently, the Soviet Union has reportedly transported to Afghanistan such advanced weapons as new types of aircraft, long-range artillery, and heavy tanks in preparation for a spring offensive. Moreover, the Soviet Union has doubled its economic and military aid to Vietnam since last year, drastically increasing the aid from $2 billion annually in the past to $4 billion. Large quantities of Soviet-made tanks, artillery, mines, rockets, aircraft, and so on have been continuously transported to the Cambodian battlefields by sea and air in order to help carry out the "operational plan" for annihilating the Democratic Kampuchean resistance forces in 2-3 years and step up the blockade of the border areas and the encirclement and suppression campaigns in the interior.

In the face of powerful enemy offensives and pressures, and Afghan and Cambodian resistance forces still have high morale. They have extensively and ingeniously launched guerrila warfare and constantly won fresh victories. At present, the guerrillas are very active in all parts of Afghanistan. They have particularly intensified their combat activities in the northern provinces close to the Soviet border and attacked military facilities behind the enemy lines. In various central provinces, where fighting has alwasy been relatively quiet, news of the guerrillas inflicting heavy losses on the enemy has also kept pouring in. Ever since they went deep into the interior, the Democratic Kampuchean resistance forces have relied on and mobilized the masses, extensively launched guerrilla warfare, continuously expanded the war zones, and attacked and destroyed the enemy's effective strength. Having to fight both on the border and in the interior, the Vietnamese forces have spread their forces so thin that they find it difficult to hold their own. The history and realities of the anti-aggression struggles by the peoples of Afghanistan and Cambodia show that even through the Soviet Union and Vietnam continue to take the path of conquering by force of arms, thier attempts to wipe out the Afghan and Cambodian resistance forces and to make the Afghan and Cambodian issues "vanish by themselves" will never succeed. The only way to solve the Afghan and Cambodian issues is for the Soviet Union and Vietnam to withdraw all their troops from Afghanistan and Cambodia respectively.

RENMIN RIBAO COMMENTS ON U.S. POLICY ON NICARAGUA

[Commentary by reporter Jing Xianfa: "Another Setback for the Reagan Administration in Its Central America Policy"]

[Text] After 2 days of heated debate, on 20 March, the U.S. House of Representatives finally vetoed President Reagan's proposal to provide $100 million aid to anti-government forces in Nicaragua. Although, for more than a month, President Reagan has been traveling all round the country and making speeches, and has sent Philip Habib, an experienced diplomat, to several Central American countries in an effort to win support for the proposal, the proposal was finally vetoed by the House of Representatives. This is another setback for the Reagan administration in its Central America policy.

Since Reagan entered the White House, the United States has been increasing it military and other types of aid to the anti-government forces in Nicaragua. According to the report of U.S. NEWS & WORLD REPORT, over the past 5 years, the United States has provided $470 million military aid to the anti-government forces in Nicaragua, which is three times more than the total amount of aid provided by the Carter administration. According to the estimates of the relevant department, the anti-government forces in Nicaragua have only 4,000 to 5,000 people. So the scope of the military aid provided by the United States is already unprecedentedly large. However, on 25 February this year, Reagan again asked the Congress to approve $70 million military aid and a $30 million "humanitarian" aid to the anti-government forces in Nicaragua. Such an insatiable way of doing things was immediately and strongly opposed by the personages of insight in various circles and in the two parties in the U.S. Congress.

First, in the Congress, many Democratic congressmen opposed this proposal because they worried that such a military aid proposal would get the United States more involved in the Central American turmoil, and get the United States involved in "another Vietnam war." Thomas P. O'Neill, speaker of the House of Representatives, warned the Congress: "The shadow of the Vietnam war is still over our heads," the miliaary aid proposal "aims at sending American youth to the battlefield" (in Central America).

Because of the extensive coverage of the Nicaragua question by the U.S. media over the past few weeks, public opinion in the United States has begun to doubt the "legitimacy" of the American support for the anti-government forces in Nicaragua, which are trying to overthrow the Sandinista regime. The CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR pointed out that one-third of the so-called "freedom fighers" in the anti-government forces in Nicaragua are members of the National Guard of the former dictator Anastasio Somoza, and that "the opposition does not have a political leader agreed upon by all the opposition parties, and the political program of the opposition cannot get support from the Nicaraguan people." For the past few days, there have been mass demonstrations in Washington D.C., protesting the American Government's support for the subversive activities of the anti-government forces in Nicaragua.

That the United States has been providing military aid to the anti-government forces in Nicaragua has aroused serious concern among various countries in Central America. Those countries are worried that the American military support for the anti-government forces in Nicaragua will encourage the overthrown military dictators in those countries to stage a comeback. Those countries are also worried that the increased American military support for the anti-government forces in Nicaragua will finally result in a reduction in the amount of American economic aid to other Central American countries. What is more, Nicaragua has signed border agreements with several neighboring countries, which do not like to see their relations with Nicaragua being harmed by the escalation of the anti-government military activities in Nicaragua.

The Contadora Group, which has been playing an important role in the political arena in Central America, always opposes direct or indirect American arena in Central America, always opposes direct or indirect American military involvement in the settlement of Central American issues. In February this year, the Contadora Group and the countries which support it sent their foreign ministers to Washington to meet the American Secretary of State George P. Shultz, demanding that the United States first delay the delivery of its military aid to the anti-government forces in Nicaragua and then resume negotiations with the Sandinista government so as to create conditions for the Nicaraguan Government and the opposition in Nicaragua to begin negotiations. But the United States refused the proposal put forward by the Contadora Group.

That the military aid proposal put forward by President Reagan has been vetoed by the House of Representatives shows that the American Government's Central America policy does not enjoy popular support either at home or abroad.

U.S. GROUPS LOBBY FOR INCREASED EXPORTS TO USSR

OW251141 Beijing XINHUA in English 1053 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Washington, March 24 (XINHUA) -- American industrialists, anticipating increased business with the Soviet Union under its economic modernization plans, are stepping up pressure on the Reagan administration to relax trade curbs that they say are undermining their ability to compete, said a NEW YORK TIMES report today. The report said the Reagan administration has been torn by internal strife in recent years between hard-liners, who argue that practically all trade with Moscow enhances its military potential, and pragmatists, who stand for an increased trade to improve political ties. According to U.S. Commerce Department, U.S. exports to the Soviet Union totalled 2,423 million dollars last year, while U.S. imports from the Soviet Union amounted to only 443 million dollars.

The American Committee of East-West Accord, composed of eminent personalities from the business, academic and diplomatic circles, is now leading a new lobbying effort to dismantle the trade barrier, including a recent meeting with Commerce Secretary Baldrige to convey its trade message, the report said.

The business leaders want Washington to know that if the East-West political climate improves, there could be substantial Soviet markets for non-strategic American technology and equipment, electronics and telecommunications. Observers noted the Reagan administration has already taken modest steps to improve the trading climate, but it still maintains elaborate controls over the export of strategic goods and technology.

The U.S. Commerce Department has adjusted its licensing policy for controls on exports of oil, gas exploration and production equipment and technology to the Soviet Union. Total U.S. exports to the Soviet Union should amount to about 2,300 million dollars in 1986, while imports will probably reach 500 million dollars, according to commerce department estimates. Non-agricultural exports are expected to rise to about 800 million dollars, from 558 million dollars in 1985. The most possible new sales by U.S. companies involve food processing and packaging, agricultural machinery, construction, mining, oil and gas, and medical equipment, chemical and analytical and scientific instruments.

As for U.S. farm exports to the Soviet Union, under a current agreement, the Soviets agreed to buy a minimum of 9 million tons of U.S. wheat and corn annually.

PRC DELEGATION TO USSR ON NUCLEAR TECHNOLOGY

HK261438 Hong Kong AFP in English 1415 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 26 (AFP) -- China confirmed Wednesday that it plans to send a delegation to the Soviet Union to study possibilities for Sino-Soviet cooperation in civilian nuclear technology.

During a meeting here last week with a Soviet delegation, "the Chinese side noted that it intended to send people to the Soviet Union for study and inspection first, after which the two sides might explore the possibility for technological cooperation in the field of nuclear power stations," a Foreign Ministry spokesman told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE.

Informed East European sources indicated Monday that Soviet First Vice-Premier Ivan Arkhipov proposed during his recent visit here that his country pass on to China, civilian nuclear technology, including reactors.

The sources, who said their information was based on the minutes of last week's talks, said China had indicated it would send a delegation of nuclear experts to visit sites in the Soviet Union soon, and that the Soviet side gave assurances that "all could be visited."

Almost all of China's nuclear experts received their training in the Soviet Union before Beijing and Moscow fell out in 1960. It was partly as a result of the earlier Soviet assistance that China was able to begin mastering nuclear technology for itself several years later and to explode its first atomic bomb in 1964, analysts here say.

Mr. Arkhipov led the Soviet delegation to last week's meeting, the first session of the Sino- Soviet Commission on Economic, Trade, and Technological Cooperation which was created last July in Moscow.

ROUNDUP VIEWS USSR ECONOMIC REFORM MOVEMENT

OW261644 Beijing XINHUA in English 1626 GMT 26 Mar 86

["Round-up: Reform Time in Soviet Union" (by Wang Chongjie) -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, March 26 (XINHUA) -- A nationwide economic reform movement is underway in the Soviet Union -- and its timing is by no means fortuitous. Disclosures during the past 15 years indicate that the antiquated model of economic development created in the early 1930s has seriously hindered the country's economic growth.

Addressing the recent 27th Soviet Communist Party Congress, party leader Mikhail Gorbachev said that "the inertness and stiffness of the forms and methods of administration, the decline of dynamism in our work, and on escalation of bureacracy -- all this was doing no small damage." As a result, the country's "economy, which has enormous resources at its disposal, ran into shortages," and its "output of most types of industrial and agricultural goods fell short of the targets" set by the state for the last three five-year-plan periods covering 1971-1985.

"The situation today is such that we cannot limit ourselves to partial improvements, a radical reform is needed," he added. In fact, the economic-system reform has been a topic of discussion since 1983, when the then party leader Yuri Andropov began experiments of enlarging self-management power in industrial enterprises.

Since taking office as party general secretary a year ago, Gorbachev has repeatedly expressed his determination to reform the country's economic mechanism and the whole management system and taken a series of measures in this regard. The guidelines for reorganizing the economic system, defined by the 27th party congress three weeks ago under Gorbachev's leadership, will, according to Gorbachev, mainly lead to "strengthening the role of center in implementing the main goals of ecomomic strategy and in determining the rates and proportions of national economic growth, its balanced development," and to "overcoming the practices of interference by the center in daily activities of the lower economic links."

"A resolute enlargement of the framework of the autonomy of associations and enterprises" is another objective of the guidelines. Towards this end, Gorbachev said, it is necessary to "transfer them to genuine cost accounting, self-support and self-financing, and to make the income level of collectives directly dependent on the efficiency of their work."

According to the guidelines, the Soviet Government is believed to "go over to economic methods of guidance at all levels of the national economy" and "for this purpose to reorganize the system of material and technical supply, improve the ststem of price formation, financing and crediting, and work out effective incentives to eliminate overexpenditure."

The guidelines also call for "introducting modern organizational management structure, and taking into account the trends towards concentration, specialization and cooperation of production", thereby, "setting up complexes of interconnected industries, research and technological inter-sectoral centers, various forms of economic associations and territorial-production formations."

The experiments of economic reform have now actually spread into various areas. In industry, for instance, "beginning with the current year, new economic management methods which have gone through experimental testing have been introduced in enterprises and associations that turn out half of the total industrial output," Gorbachev said.

"Their introduction in the service sphere, in construction and in transport has begun," Gorbachev pointed out, adding that "collective forms of work organization and stimulation, and also economic contract systems, are being applied on an ever wider scale."

In agriculture, the switchover to new methods of administration and management has yet to be completed. "The establishment, in the center and in the localities, of unified management bodies of the agro-industrial complex is undoubtedly a step of fundamental significance," he said.

The Kremlin, Gorbachev said, will "substantially broaden the autonomy of collective farms and state farms, and give them a greater incentive and responsibility for the final results."

In addition, Gorbachev said, "The contract and job-by-job systems of payment at the levels of teams, groups, and families to whom means of production, including land, will be assigned for a period specified by contract, will become widespread." These surpass both in scope and quality. The reforms carried out in the 1950s and 1960s.

To ensure the success of the reforms a major personnel shake-up has been made by the Kremlin both at the center and in the localities. Officials, who "hoped that everything will settle down and return to the old lines," have been replaced by people, "who work actively and have a high level of professional skill and a feeling for the new."

About 150 top officials, including over two dozens government ministers, lost their jobs in the past year. The recent party congress also saw a major reshuffle of the party Central Committee, 44 percent of its 307 full members and most of its alternate members are new. Changes have also been made both in the Politburo and the Central Secretariat.

The reforms have many skeptics, both in the Soviet Union and abroad.

However, Gorbachev said: "We are only at the beginning of the road. Time and energetic efforts are needed to reorganize the economic mechanism in our country with its vast and complex economy. Difficulties may arise, and we are not guaranteed against miscalculations either, but still the main thing now is to move ahead purposefully, step by step, along the direction we have chosen."

NEW ZEALAND'S PRIME MINISTER CONTINUES VISIT

Zhao Ziyang Welcomes Lange

OW261215 Beijing XINHUA in English 1201 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 26 (XINHUA) -- New Zealand Prime Minister David Lange, his wife and their party arrived here this afternoon after visiting Guangzhou, Guilin, Guiyang and Shanghai.

Late this afternoon, the Chinese Government held a welcoming ceremony for Prime Minister Lange at the plaza east to the Great Hall of the People. Cannons boomed a 19-gun salute as Zhao and Lange stood at attention for the two countries national anthems and then reviewed a guard of honor formed by the three services of the Chinese People's Liberation Army. Present at the ceremony were Chinese Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian, Minister of Textile Industry Wu Wenying, and Minister in Charge of the State Science and Technology Commission Song Jian. After the ceremony, Zhao and Lange tered the Great Hall of the People and had a cordial talk there.

Premier Zhao expressed his warm welcome to Lange on his visit to China. He said that the visit is a great event in the history of relations between the two countries, and will also contribute to the development of bilateral friendly relations.

Prime Minister Lange said his country is working to strengthen and expand the existing cooperation between the two countries.

Earlier today in Shanghai, the New Zealand guests visited a livestock farm and a carpet factory.

Zhao, Lange Exchange Speeches

OW261450 Beijing XINHUA in English 1434 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 26 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang said tonight that Sino-New Zealand relations rest on a solid foundation and have a broad prospect and that the continuous development of the relations accords with their mutual interests, adding that China is ready to make concerted efforts with New Zealand towards this end. He made these remarks at a banquet he gave in honor of visiting New Zealand Prime Minister David Lange.

Zhao said that since the establishment of diplomatic relations between China and New Zealand 13 years ago, bilateral friendly relations and cooperation have developed steadily. The exchange of visits by leaders and personnel in various walks of life of the two countries have increased their mutual understanding. Their two-way trade has expanded steadily and their cooperation in the fields of animal husbandry and light industry has scored encouraging progress.

Zhao spoke highly of the outstanding achievements the people of New Zealand had made in nation-building. He said that over the past few years, the New Zealand Government has carried out economic reform at home and is playing an increasingly important role in international affairs for seeking peace in the South Pacific region and the world at large and for strengthening regional cooperation. Zhao said that China is ready to make joint efforts, together with New Zealand and other peace-loving countries and peoples, for maintaining world peace and promoting the common prosperity of the world economy.

Lange said, "Two thoughts strike me when I reflect on our bilateral relationship. First, how pleasing it is that we have come so far in the relatively short time -- little more than 13 years -- since the establishment of diplomatic relations between us .

"Secondly, how much the relationship has flourished despite the many contrasts between our two countries and people."

Lange said, "We respect China's independence of mind in the conduct of its foreign relations, we like to think, too, that we in New Zealand have developed a more independent approach to foreign policy. Lange said, "Both of us are pacific countries with a common interest in ensuring that the great Pacific basin which holds so much economic potential for all those within it remains peaceful and stable. We can work together in future in pursuing that end." Lange said, "Both of us believe that a halt should be called to the dangerous arms race. And here I want to pay tribute to your government's decision, announced just a few days ago, not to undertake any further nuclear tests in the atmosphere."

Among those attending the banquet at the Great Hall of the People were State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian, Textile Industry Minister Wu Wenying, Minister in Charge of State Science and Technology Commission Song Jian, Minister of Public Security Ruan Chongwu and Minister of Light Industry Yang Bo.

Also present was Rewi Alley, a friend of Chinese people from New Zealand.

Zhao, Lange Hold Talks

[Text] Beijing, March 27 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and New Zealand Prime Minister David Lange expressed satisfaction with the development of relations between their two countries during talks here today.

Zhao said that cooperation between the two countries in various fields has seen great progress since the two countries established diplomatic relations in 1972. However, he said, there is still great potential for economic cooperation and trade between the two countries. He hoped that the two countries could expand their cooperation in light industry, animal husbandry and food processing.

Lange replied that New Zealand attaches great importance to developing its relations with China. He also made suggestions on possible cooperation projects in the fields of joint-venture enterprises and tourism.

The two leaders agreed in principle that the two governments should discuss agreements on the avoidance of double taxation, the protection of investment, and scientific and technical cooperation as soon as possible.

Lange briefed Zhao on the foreign policy pursued by the New Zealand Government. He said that New Zealanders are devoted to the promotion of disarmament so as to maintain world peace. He said that New Zealand appreciates China's support for its proposal to make the South Pacific a nuclear-free zone and for China's decision not to carry out another nuclear test in the atmosphere.

Zhao briefed Lange on China's stand advocating a total ban and complete destruction nuclear weapons, he said that China stood for the peaceful use of outer space, maintaining that it is highly dangerous to expand the arms race to space. On the situation on the Korean peninsula, Zhao said that China opposes any act that aggravates tension there. "We hope the dialogue between the North and the South of Korea will continue its momentum after the good start it has made," he added.

Lange said that New Zealand is also very concerned about stability on the Korean peninsula.

Zhao reiterated China's support for the recent proposal made by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea for a political solution to the Kampuchea issue. Lange in turn expressed his wish for a political settlement of the Kampuchea question.

ROUNDUP VIEWS SRV ECONOMIC DISORDER

OW261851 Beijing XINHUA in English 1840 GMT 26 Mar 86

["Roundup: Hanoi Hard Put To Check Economic Disorder" (by Lan Tian) -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, March 26 (XINHUA) -- Vietnam has taken some urgent measures recently to check the economic disorder which ensued from the government's "reform of price, wage and currency" since last August, according to reports received here.

In the first week of this month, the official Vientamese newspaper "NHAN DAN" admitted in five editorials and some other articles that "serious mistakes" were committed during the reform, resulting in "severe consequences" to the country's economic and social life. The consequences included soaring prices, confused markets, passive nd helpless state-owned commercial departments and other difficulties in production, currency circulation and people's daily life, the paper said.

"LAO DONG," the newspaper of the Vietnam Confederation of Trade Unions, noted in a survey report that the real income of the working people has dropped rapidly as prices are skyrocketing while their wages remain the same.

According to estimates of the authorities, the report said, a worker's living expenses accounted for 25 percent of his wage last August when the reform started, but the figure rose to 81 percent in February this year. Workers could not afford even the daily necessities for normal living and working, not to say other needs, the report complained, adding that some had to give up their jobs to engage in commercial transactions or side occupations.

Of the urgent measures Hanoi has taken, the top one is to resume the rationing of some daily necessities, such as stable foods, and to provide price subsidies. Other measures include reorganizing state-owned enterprises in the production of food and articles of daily use, allowing small properties to hire up to 10 workers, strengthening the control of markets by the state and transforming private traders.

The authorities also tried to boost the production of grain and other foods by extending the scope of responsibility systems among agricultural cooperatives and moving people from big cities to mountainous areas.

Some of the urgent measures, the official press said, were "special means under special circumstances" and had to be carried out within the first half of this year.

The foreign press reported from Hanoi that the residents there complained a lot about the current situation and had little confidence in the prospect of the reform. Since the resumption of the rationing, panic purchasing by long lines of people has become a common sight in front of state-owned shops in the capital.

A constant state of anxiety could be felt on the markets since the police often carried out mopping-up operations under the pretext of maintaining the order of commercial activities and the appearance of the city, the foreign press also reported.

CHINA DAILY BACKS CGDK PEACE PLAN FOR CAMBODIA

HK270337 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 27 Mar 86 p 4

[Commentator's article: "Hanoi's Quagmire]

[Text] The eight-point proposal for a political settlement of the Kampuchean problems put forward by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea last week is both flexible and practical.

The main feature of the proposal is that it calls for the withdrawal of Vietnamese forces from Kampuchea in two stages under a UN-supervised cease fire and suggests the inclusion of Heng Samrin in a four-party coalition headed by Norodom Sihanouk pending free elections.

Vietnam's armed occupation is the root of the Kampuchean issue and the withdrawal of Vietnamese forces constitutes the key to the solution. Instead of demanding that Vietnam get all troops out immediately as before, the new proposal calls for a phased pull-out. The Heng Samrin regime is a Hanoi-installed puppet that the international community does not recognize. Yet, out of the spirit of national reconcilliation, it is now offered a place in a four-party coalition.

Thus, the proposal testifies to the modified stand of the Kampuchean Coalition and demonstrates their genuine desire for a peaceful solution to the matter.

The proposal also affirms that in the future Kampuchea, as an independent, united, peaceful, neutral and non-aligned country, will be ready to co-exist peacefully with Vietnam and establish economic and trade relations between the two neighbours. This again is a clear demonstration of sincerity.

The Kampuchean problem concerns not only Kampuchea but has direct bearing on peace and security in Southeast Asia and the Pacific region as well. Hanoi's regional hegemonist behaviour is looked upon with anxiety by the world community. Hence, the successive UN resolutions on the Kampuchean issue in recent years. Now that the resistance coalition has made an offer fully in keeping with the spirit of the relevant UN resolutions and the declaration of the International Conference on Kampuchea, it naturally has won sympathy and respect from peace-loving countries.

However, the proposal was summarily rejected by Vietnam.

This recalcitrant attitude shows Vietnam is still bent on carrying on aggression in Kampuchea and all its professed desire for a political solution is hypocritical. This can lead only to further isolation for Vietnam.

The Chinese Government has fully endorsed the latest initiative. A fair and practical way to solve the Kampuchean issue, the proposal is in accordance with the national interests of Kampuchea and makes full allowance for those of the Vietnamese people. By rejecting it, Hanoi has denied itself a way out of the quagmire it is in.

Ever since Vietnam launched its armed invasion, China has repeatedly pointed out that this action would only bog Hanoi down. About eight years have passed since the invasion started, but there is still no way for Vietnam to extricate itself.

The resistance forces of the three parties in the coalition are intensifying guerrilla operations in the inland provinces, especially around Lake Tonle Sap and the capital, Phnom Penh, inflicting heavy casualties on the enemy. The long-drawnout war of aggression has demoralized the Vietnamese troops and has had a devastating effect on its economy. Sticking to its policy of aggression against Kampuchea, Hanoi will sink still more helplessly into the quagmire. And the Kampuchean people can count on China's firm and consistent support in their just struggle for national salvation until final victory.

RENMIN RIBAO DENOUNCES VIETNAM ON CAMBODIAN ISSUE

HK271153 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 21 Mar 86 p 6

["Jottings" by You Jun: "High-Sounding Words Only"]

[Text] A recent article published by Vietnam's NHAN DAN says that Vietnam has fought wars for several decades and "eagerly hopes for and needs peace" in order to build its country.

These are merely high-sounding words. After Vietnam won its war of national salvation against the United States and unified with its southern part, it did have peace and could indeed vigorously build its country. But who has sent 200,000 of its troops to invade and occupy a sovereign state -- Cambodia --, has undermined peace, and has thrown all the country's limited financial and material resources in an unjust war? Can those who have impatiently launched another war after fighting wars for more than 10 years, even before they have recovered their country's strength, be regarded as people who "eargerly hope for and need peace?" It is precisely the Vietnamese authorities and no one else who have caused all these troubles. It seems that they have made a wrong estimate. They think that by relying on a superpower they can ride roughshod, annex Cambodia in one stroke, and be sure to gain hegemony in Indochina.

However, the situation has unexpectedly developed to the reverse of their desire. They are now in a predicament in Cambodia, just as the United States was when it was fighting on Indochinese battlefields -- a predicament described by Henry Kissinger as being "involved in a war which we neither know how to win nor how to end."

Of course, if the Vietnamese authorities really "eagerly hope for and need peace," it is not yet too late. They can immediately stop aggression against Cambodia and withdraw all aggressive troops from Cambodian territory. The UN resolution approved by over 100 countries and the proposal by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea have precisely pointed out the road leading to peace, but the Vietnamese do not want to listen to these proposals and have clung to their unpopular practices. This being the case, what they say about their "eager hope for peace" is nothing but a cheap lie.

CGDK DEFENSE COORDINATION COMMITTEE MEETS

OW271140 Beijing XINHUA in English 1056 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] Bangkok, March 27 (XINHUA) -- The meeting of the Coordination Committee for Defense under the tripartite Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea (CGDK) noted with satisfaction the progresses obtained in the battlefields by their troops. This was disclosed in a press communique available here today.

The meeting yesterday was presided over by CGDK Prime Minister Son Sann and attended by ministers of the Defense Coordination Committee and other personalities concerned from the three parties of the CGDK.

The meeting examined the setting up of the two new committees in accordance with the decision of the CGDK Council of Ministers held on March 17 in Beijing under the chairmanship of Norodom Sihanouk.

The establishment of the Military Coordination Committee and the Committee for Press and Information was aimed at assuring a better and more efficient coordination in the resistance operations undertaken by each party of the CGDK, the press communique added.

"The general resistance against the oppressors is increasing continuously with the heroic participation of the civilian population and the Khmer soldiers forcibly recruited by the Vietnamese in the big cities as well as in the lesser localities," the press communique stressed.

Tripartite representatives pledged at the meeting to push forward with their struggle in various fields in order to drive the Vietnamese aggressors out of their country.

MEESE REAFFIRMS U.S. SUPPORT FOR AFGHANS

OW261946 Beijing XINHUA in English 1939 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Islamabad, March 26 (XINHUA) — The United States will continue to support the Afghan people in their struggle against Soviet aggression, visiting U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese said in Peshawar today. Meese was addressing Afghan refugees at the Katcha Garhi Tentage village on the outskirts of Peshawar this morning.

Referring to the tragic consequences of Soviet domination in Afghanistan, Meese told the refugees that "we can assess these from your physical and mental scars of torture and other inhuman acts like genocide and famine." He said that the Soviets had been trying to suppress the facts from the eyes of the world people. To achieve this end, he added, they had been killing journalists in Afghanistan.

Meese said that the Afghan people will not submit to the might of the Soviets and will continue to resist and expel them from Afghanistan.

He expressed his appreciation of the efforts made by Pakistan in supporting and assisting the Afghan refugees. Meese also expressed his appreciation of Pakistan's efforts to curb drug production and trafficking at a press conference here later today.

Edwin Meese arrived here yesterday for a two-day official visit to Pakistan. He held talks with President Ziaul Haq, Prime Minister Mohammad Khan Junejo and other senior Pakistan Government officials.

INDIA NOT TO RENEW OIL CONTRACT WITH USSR

OW261250 Beijing XINHUA in English 1242 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] New Delhi, March 26 (XINHUA) — India has decided to go in for spot purchase of crude oil from international oil markets instead of a renewal of contractual purchase at higher prices from the Soviet Union, THE INDIAN EXPRESS reported today. Following the failure of the OPEC countries to come to an agreement on oil production cuts, the spot prices of crude dropped to 11.70 U.S. dollars a barrel, the lowest in recent years.

The issue of falling oil prices was reviewed by Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi's cabinet recently and the Indian Government believed the steep fall in oil prices would be a big relief to India, and as a consequence, would help improve considerably its balance of payments position.

India has recorded during the first half of current fiscal year a trade deficit of 41.24 billion rupees (3.39 billion U.S. dollars). Increased imports of crude oil and oil products accounted for a large percentage of the deficit.

According to THE INDIAN EXPRESS, the Soviet Union was understood to be pressing India for renewal at a much higher price than the ruling price in international oil markets.

During the current financial year, India is expected to import some 14.3 million tons of crude oil to meet its domestic demands.

HUSAK SPEAKS ON FOREIGN POLICY AT CPCZ CONGRESS

OW241923 Beijing XINHUA in English 1859 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Text] Prague, March 24 (XINHUA) -- The basic task of Czechoslovakia's foreign policy is to create favorable external conditions for building a developed socialist society, said Gustav Husak, general secretary of the Czechoslovak Communist Party, in his political report to the party's 17th congress today. "The first task of our foreign policy is to strengthen friendship with our fraternal socialist countries, especially the Soviet Union, and develop and strengthen cooperation with them", Husak said. He stressed that Czechoslovakia will look for a new and the most efficient way of such cooperation in political, economic, scientific and ideological fields so as to perfect the mechanism and activity methods of the Warsaw Treaty countries and the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance.

On relations with China, he said: "We prepare to fully normalize relations with the People's Republic of China and develop friendly and cooperative relations with it." On Soviet-U.S. relations, he pointed out that the peace-loving people welcome the resumption of the summit meeting of the two countries and link their dialogue with the hope to avoid the threat of nuclear war. He condemned the United States for not being willing to take the road to the reduction of nuclear arms.

Talking about relations with capitalist countries, he said Czechoslovakia is willing to develop relations with these countries on the basis of equality, mutual benefit, cooperation and non-interference in each other's internal affairs and stands for frank, earnest and effective, dialogue. He said that even the most complicated problem between the socialist countries and capitalist countries can be solved by talks. He expressed Czechoslovakia's will to firmly stand on the side of the people of various countries that are struggling for real independence and strongly condemned colonialism and racial discrimination in various forms.

LI XIANNIAN HOSTS RETURN BANQUET FOR RATSIRAKA

[Text] Antananarivo, March 26 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese President Li Xiannian described here today his visit to Madagascar as "fruitful." He and his Malagasy counterpart share identical or similar views on various important issues and the aim of his visit to strengthen mutual understanding and friendship has been attained, Li said.

Li made the remarks at a return banquet he and his wife hosted for President Didier Ratsiraka and his wife in the Chinese Embassy here at noon. Li arrived here Monday on a four-day state visit, the first ever by a Chinese head of state since the two countries set up diplomatic relations in 1972. Li said that the two sides, satisfied with the fruitful cooperation in various fields and expressed the hope to continuously consolidate and develop the existing friendly relations of cooperation between the two countries. The Chinese president reiterated, "China treasures its friendship with Madagascar and, to develop Sino-Malagasy friendship and cooperation remains our firm and unshakable policy."

In his speech, Ratsiraka agreed with Li's remarks, saying the amicable encounter and exchange of views in the past few days have further strengthened the very solid existing ties between Madagascar and China. He said that leaders of the two countries at various levels have all along cooperated satisfactorily and are ready to develop a relation of mutual respect, commitment and effectiveness, treating each other amicably. The Malagasy leader said: "We have planted a robust seedling which will bear plentiful and sweet fruits. It is called friendship, unity and harmony." Present at the banquet were Malagasy Prime Minister Desire Rakotoarijaona, speaker of the National People's Assembly Lucien Andrianarahinjaka and other senior Malagasy officials. Chinese State Councillor Chen Muhua, and other Chinese officials were present at the banquet.

Li arrived here Monday on a four-day state visit to Madagascar, the last leg of his marathon journey which took him to Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Egypt and Somalia.

During his stay here, Li and his host, President Didier Ratsiraka held two rounds of talks on ways and means to strength friendship and cooperation between the two countries and on other issues of mutual concern. In a written speech issued at the airport before departure, the Chinese president described his visit as "very successful".

Ratsiraka, his wife and other Malagasy senior officials were present at an airport ceremony to give the guests a warm send-off. The Chinese Ambassador to Madagascar Yang Guirong, was also present to bid Li farewell. Ratsiraka today presented a pair of lemurs to the Chinese people through President Li. This precious animal, with a fox-like face and a monkey-like body, is found only in Madagascar.

Earlier this morning, three documents were signed between the two sides. In one, China donated 2,000 tons of cement to help the Malagasy people in cyclone-ravaged areas rebuild their homes. Another covers an agreement creating a mixed commission on fishing and aquatic products.

CHEN MUHUA ON OVERSEAS CHINESE POLICY

OW262128 Beijing XINHUA in English 2112 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Antananarivo, March 26 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese State Councillor Chen Muhua, speaking for Chinese President Li Xiannian, today urged the Chinese residents in Madagascar to observe Malagasy law and customs and live on good terms with the Malagasy people. Chen is a leading member of President Li's entourage, which arrived here Monday for a four-day visit.

Addressing more than 400 people representing the Chinese residents in Madagascar at the Hilton Hotel here this evening, Chen said the Chinese Government has been consistent in its policy on affairs concerning Chinese nationals living abroad and attached importance to the protection of these just rights and interests. Touching upon the issue of China's national reunification, Chen said the concept of "one country, two systems" put forward by the Chinese Government has not only successfully solved the problem of Hong Kong, but had also clearly shown the way to the solution of the problem of Taiwan. The Chinese state councillor called on the Chinese residents of Madagascar and those people who are of Chinese origin but have obtained Malagasy citizenship to make their contribution to the early reunification of Taiwan and the mainland of China. She expressed her hope that, by serving as links in the friendship between China and Madagascar: The Chinese residents and the people of Chinese origin will make fresh contributions to the development of friendly relations and cooperation between the two countries.

Madagascar, with more than 6,000 Chinese residents, has the largest Chinese community among African nations. Chinese began to come to the Indian Ocean island country in 1896.

TEN SECTIONS OF SEVENTH 5-YEAR PLAN SUMMARIZED

OW270100 Beijing XINHUA in English 0048 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 27 (XINHUA) -- China's draft Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-90), in the form of a ten-part document, is being discussed at the annual session of the National People's Congress. The introduction to the document lists the 11 principles of the country's economic and social development over the next five years.

The first part, in five chapters, sets forth the major tasks during the period. Included are economic growth rates and economic efficiency, production and distribution of the national income, finance, banking and foreign exchange, as well as targets for the expansion of science, technology, education and social development. The second part, in 10 chapters, deals with the industrial structure and policies. Involved are agriculture, the consumer goods, energy, raw materials, machine-building, electronics, construction and building materials, transport, and posts and communications industries, and commodity circulation. The third part, in seven chapters, entitled Regional Distribution and Economic Development Policies, specifies economic targets and policies for the eastern, central and western regions, as well as for areas inhabited by minority nationalities and border regions. The fourth part, in five chapters, outlines the tasks and policies for development of science and technology. The fifth part, also in five chapters, lists targets and measures for educational development.

The sixth part, in six chapters, outlines China's tasks in the fields of trade and economic cooperation, and technological exchanges with other countries. This sector covers imports and exports, use of foreign funds, technology imports, the four special economic zones and 14 coastal cities and three areas open to foreign investment, tourism, contracting for projects abroad, the export of labor services and international aid. The seventh part, in four chapters, specifies the investment pattern and policies. The eighth part, also in four chapters, lists goals and tasks for the reform of the economic structure. The ninth part, in six chapters, deals with the people's livelihood and social security, including population control measures, labor and employment, incomes, public health and environmental protection. The last part, in four chapters, is devoted to the task of developing socialist culture and morality while promoting material civilization. This involves cultural, ideological and political work, the furtherance of democracy and the legal system, and social order.

Drafting of Plan Explained

OW270148 Beijing XINHUA in English 0135 GMT 27 Mar 86

["How China's Seventh Five-Year Plan Was Drafted" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, March 27 (XINHUA) -- Nearly 3,000 legislators are now deliberating the 100,000-word draft of China's Seventh Five-Year Plan here. To outsiders, it may have looked like an instant motion presented for approval.

According to insiders in economic circles, the draft, which contains detailed strategies and numerous figures for China's social and economic development in the 1986-1990 period, has embodied three years of hard work and meticulous calculations by government officials with guidance from top Chinese leaders Hu Yaobang, Deng Xiaoping, Zhao Ziyang, Li Xiannian and Chen Yun.

Premier Zhao Ziyang, who directly oversaw the drafting, exchanged views with and solicited suggestions from visiting foreign business people, Overseas Chinese and such international organizations as the World Bank on China's economic development strategies and structural reform.

Although the formal drafting of the plan got underway in 1985, according to the sources, preparatory work including deliberations, investigations, calculations and feasibility studies, began nearly two years earlier. From 1983 on, the Secretariat of the Communist Party Central Committee, the central leading group in charge of finance and economy and the State Council called a train of meetings and symposiums to discuss the major tasks for the Seventh Five-Year Plan period and the policy measures that should be adopted to ensure the fulfillment of these tasks. These meetings involved thousands of people, including democratic personages, scientists of natural and social sciences, specialists in various fields, administrators at the provincial level and in charge of central government departments and large enterprises, economists who had participated in the drafting of previous five-year plans, as well as reform-minded people engaged in economic work.

From early 1983 to early 1985, planners at the central and provincial levels concentrated their efforts on such basic researches for the plan as investigations, calculations and feasibility studies. In September 1985, a national conference of the Communist Party passed a proposal for the Seventh Five-Year Plan for National Economic and Social Development, which set out the guidelines, principles, policies and tasks for the draft plan. Further studies and calculations were conducted again at the central and provincial levels along the line of the principles set in the proposal. In light of their researches, the various departments under the State Council and provincial governments submitted draft plans for specific sectors or fields of work to the State Planning Commission. Based on all this, an outline of the plan was worked out, and after several rounds of consultation and revision, the present draft plan finally took shape. Economists are of the opinion that the targets set in the draft plan are practical and feasible and the fulfillment of the plan will lay a sound foundation for vigorous development of China's economy in the 1990s.

["Highlights of Seventh Five-Year Plan (1)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, March 27 (XINHUA) -- The value of China's industrial and agricultural output will increase 38.2 percent in five years to 1,677 billion yuan by 1990, according to the draft plan being discussed at the current session of the National People's Congress. The value is based on 1980 prices. The latest draft of China's plan for 1986-90 projects annual average increases of 6.7 percent.

Agricultural output is expected to reach 353 billion yuan by 1990, up 21.6 percent from 1985 -- an average annual increase of four percent. According to the draft, industrial output value will jump 43.4 percent to 1,324 billion yuan by 1990 -- an average annual increase of 7.5 percent. Of this, light industry will account for 661 billion yuan and heavy industry 663 billion yuan. Gross national product -- the total value of goods and services produced in China -- is expected to reach 1,117 billion yuan by 1990, up 43.6 percent -- an average annual increase of 7.5 percent.

[Text] Beijing, March 27 (XINHUA) -- China's national income will grow 38 percent from 1985 to reach 935 billion yuan in 1990, according to the draft Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-90). Incomes will rise at an annual average rate of 6.7 percent.

During the five-year period, funds for consumption will total 3,007 billion yuan, with an annual ratio of 70 percent to the national income; and those for accumulation, 1,315 billion yuan, with an annual ratio of 30 percent. The real consumption standard per capita will increase to 517 yuan a year in 1990 from 404 yuan in 1985 -- an annual average rise of five percent.

Meanwhile, the country's investment in fixed assets will come to 1,296 billion yuan, with state-owned units accounting for 896 billion yuan. Such units will add new fixed assets worth at least 100 billion yuan over the next five years.

["Highlights of Seventh Five-Year Plan (3)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, March 27 (XINHUA) -- China's revenues will grow 6.7 percent annually over the next five years, to reach 256.7 billion yuan in 1990, according to the draft Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-90). Altogether, revenues during that period will amount to 1,119.4 billion yuan -- up 64 percent from the total for the Sixth Five-Year Plan period (1981-85).

The country's expenditures will be 256.7 billion yuan in 1990 and will total 1,119.4 billion yuan during the five-year period. Spending (including foreign loans) on capital construction will be 349.9 billion yuan during the same period -- 31.3 percent of the total expenditures. Meanwhile, expenditure on education, science, culture, public health and sports will come to 201.6 billion yuan -- 18 percent of the total expenditure. Such expenses will rise eight percent annually over the next five years.

Expenditure on national defense will be 102.1 billion yuan during the same period, accounting for 9.1 percent of the total: this compares to 13.1 percent during the Sixth Five-Year Plan period.

["Highlights of Seventh Five-Year Plan (4)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, March 27 (XINHUA) -- Following are quotas for output of China's major crops, animal by-products, aquatic products and forestry in the draft Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-1990):

The country will harvest an annual average of 415 million tons of grain (425 to 450 million tons by 1990) over the next five years -- up 12 percent from the average during the Sixth Five-Year Plan (1981-1985).

The annual average cotton output will be 4,250,000 tons -- slightly lower than the average for the past five years. Annual output of oil-bearing seed crops will average 17,120,000 tons (18,200,000 tons by 1990) -- a 42 percent rise over the average for the 1981-1985 period. China will keep its area sown to grain crops at roughly 110 million hectares over the next five years.

By 1990, annual meat output will be 22,750,000 tons, a 19.7 percent increase over 1985: dairy produce will total 6,250,000 tons, a rise of 110 percent; and 8,750,000 tons of eggs will be produced, up 65 percent. Output of aquatic products will rise by 29 percent to nine million tons a year by 1990. Trees will be planted on 27,670,000 hectares during the 1986-1990 period, with the aim of raising the country's forest cover to 14 percent in 1990 from 12 percent last year.

YANG DEZHI: PHASE ONE OF PLA REORGANIZING COMPLETE

HK261508 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1244 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Report by Li Wei: "Yang Dezhi Describes First Phase of Streamlining and Reorganization of the Chinese Army as Having Basically Come to an End"]

[Text] Beijing, 26 Mar (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- PLA Chief of General Staff Yang Dezhi today said the first phase of the plan to cut the Chinese Armed Forces by 1 million men has been successfully completed, and, as several thousand organizations at and above the regimental level have been abolished, the establishment of the Army has been further rationalized, and the Army has been further streamlined. Yang Dezhi made the above statement when talking about the PLA structural reform this afternoon at a meeting of the PLA delegation to the NPC to examine Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the draft of the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

It has been reported that the process of streamlining and reorganization of the Chinese Army is divided into two phases. The main target of the first phase is to streamline the Armed Forces' organizations, the ground force units (namely, the field army units and provincial military districts), and the combat units of the Navy and the Air Force. The main targets of the second phase, which is currently under way, are to streamline the logistics sector, military institutes, and hospitals affiliated with the PLA, as well as to hand over all the people's armed forces units at the county (prefectural) level to local authorities.

In regard to the fine situation of the Army during the Sixth 5-Year Plan, Yang Dezhi listed the following points: The consciousness of political unity with the Central Committee has been strengthened; the professional and cultural stands of the contingent of cadres have been markedly upgraded, with two-thirds of leading cadres at and above the regimental level having been trained in military institutes or academies; weaponry and equipment have been gradually improved; a good job has been done in supporting national construction and safeguarding the lives and properties of the people, including rushing to deal with emergencies and providing disaster relief on more than 58,000 occasions during the 5 years, involving a force of more than 3.3 million men, and more than 9,000 missions of planes and naval vessels; and several dozen airports, docks, and ports have been transferred to civil use or for military-civil use.

Yang Dezhi agrees with Zhao Ziyang's report, believing that the draft Seventh 5-Year Plan conforms to China's actual situation, it has unified planning with due consideration for all concerned and with overall arrangements, attaches attention to focal points and key links, and has practical and feasible major targets which can be realized through hard work. He expressed that during the period covered by the "Seventh 5-Year Plan," the Chinese Army will stick to the policy of acting in light of the overall situation in the country's economic construction.

If the country's economic construction needs support, the Army should provide personnel, funds, and materials. On such grounds, the Army will try its best to carry out its self-construction. The Army will continue to accomplish the task of the reform of the Army structure and the simplification and reorganization of troops, and will smooth its relations and establish and perfect various rules and regulations. The Army will also strengthen the research on national defense technology and continue to improve its weaponry and equipment. He said that during the period covered by the "Seventh 5-Year Plan," it is not possible to see a big increase in the national defense expenditure. The Army should not demand more funds from the state, but instead should try to reduce the burden of the state as much as possible and try to control well and make the best and most proper use of the limited national defense funds.

SONG PING INTERVIEWED ON PLANNING WORK

HK270224 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 12, 24 Mar 86 pp 3-4

["State Councillor Song Ping Answers LIAOWANG Reporter's Questions on Planning Work During the Seventh 5-Year Plan Period"]

[Text] On the eve of the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC, this LIAOWANG reporter interviewed Song Ping, a state councillor and director of the State Planning Commission, and asked him about the economic planning work during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period. Song Ping briefly answered these questions:

Question: It is said that the coming NPC session will deliberate and approve the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Will you outline the main tasks in China's socioeconomic development during the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan?

Answer: In the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, our country is faced with three major tasks: First, to create fine economic conditions for the economic structural reforms so as to ensure the smooth development of the reforms; second, to prepare material and technical conditions and intelligent resources essential to maintaining the momentum of development in the future; and third, to further improve the people's livelihood on the basis of production development.

These three tasks are interrelated. In order to implement economic structural reforms, economic development must be stable, and economic plans cannot impose too strict a target construction arrangements. In order to lay a good foundation for future development, we must continue to prioritize the development of the energy, transport, and raw materials industries and need to start some necessary backbone projects. However, the scale of construction must not be too big; otherwise, economic stability may be affected. In addition, when raising the living standards of the people, we must also invest in light industry and agriculture. Although the three major tasks are interrelated, they are not parallel. Economic structural reforms should be placed in the primary position. We must succeed in economic reforms so as to open a new road for building socialism with Chinese characteristics. This is a matter of far-reaching significance.

Question: During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, how will the planning department carry out its work?

Answer: In previous plans, centralized management by the state was too rigid and covered too wide a scope. Through economic structural reforms and measures for streamlining administration and devolution in economic management, the proportion of funds and materials directly controlled by the state has been gradually reduced, an increasing proportion of funds and materials has been put at the disposal of localities and enterprises.

Under these circumstances, the state will not be responsible for supplying all funds and materials needed in production and construction as before. According to the spirit of the central decision on economic structural reforms, the planning department will follow the principle of properly ensuring macroeconomic management and enlivening and decontrolling microeconomic activities, and will concentrate on keeping the major ratios in the national economy in an appropriate position and ensuring the balanced and proportionate development of the economy in general. Therefore, our planning work will be more complicated than before.

Question: Then, what are the things that we should pay special attention to in our planning work?

Answer: First of all, we should concentrate on reforming the planning system by narrowing the scope of mandatory plans and expanding the scope of guidance plans and market regulation. We should pay attention to both macroeconomic control and microeconomic decontrol. After more power is delegated to enterprises, we should give them better guidance so that enterpirses not only obtain power and benefits, but also undertake corresponding responsibility for bringing their operations into line with macroeconomic requirements. Rather than just caring about their own interests, enterprises must consider how to link their own interests with social interests. Some enterprises have earned profits illegally and have harmed the interests of the state and the people, mainly because they cannot properly handle the relationship between their own interests and the overall interests of the nation. So we must use the necessary administrative means, more effectively employ economic regulatory means, and formulate relevant economic regulations and laws. While practicing the market economy, capitalist countries are now also strengthening their state intervention in economic affairs in general so as to ensure the stable development of their economies.

In our country, we are pursuing a planned commodity economy, and we must consciously follow and apply the law and value in our economic work. Guidance plans are realized mainly through the use of economic levers, and the execution and formulation of mandatory plans must also follow the law of the value. Price is the most important and useful economic lever. However, prices for many goods in our country cannot realistically reflect the value of those goods, nor can they reflect the relation between supply and demand in society. For example, the price for coal is on the low side. Coal is needed in both industrial production and the people's livelihood. At present, we cannot immediately raise its price in an all-round way, because that will cause price rises and affect the people's daily lives. In order to bring the regulatory role of prices in production, circulation, and consumption into play better, we must further change the unreasonable state of prices. However, this is a highly sensitive issue, and we must be very cautious.

Moreover, as science and technology are playing an increasingly important role in the development of the modern economy, planning work should closely combine the development of science and technology with economic development. We cannot merely rely on the expansion of construction scale to promote economic development; we must also rely on technological transformation and the improvement of management. Industrial enterprises in our country can tap great potential in lowering energy and raw materials costs. At the same time, by means of upgrading products, improving product quality, and increasing the durability of products, we can also economize on raw materials in production. In short, we should ensure an appropriate growth rate, good product quality, and high economic efficiency through technological transformation.

Question: According to what you have said, planning work has become more difficult than before. Then, how can you ensure the realization of the guidance plans and ensure their role in macroeconomic control?

Answer: In order to ensure the realization of guidance plans, we must do our best to bring our plans into line with objective economic laws. At the same time, we should flexibly use economic levers. Credit, taxation, and other economic means should play an important role in macroeconomic control. At present, we do not flexibly and effectively make use of economic levers, and the regulatory role of credit and taxation is not obvious enough. Henceforth, we should reduce taxes to encourage the development of what we need, and increase taxes to restrain those we want to restrain. Similarly, when arranging loans, we should give priority to those we need to develop and should give preferential terms; otherwise, we should refuse to offer loans or raise interest rates. We still have to make great efforts in order to let planning work play a real role in macroeconomic control. At present, planning work is faced with many new problems. Although we have made substantial improvements, we still have to improve many things. The personnel in the planning department not only have to study the economic targets, they still have to study economic policies, ways to employ economic levers, and the states of prices, credit, taxes, and exchange rates. In short, the use of economic levers should be taken as an important part of planning work.

Question: In the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, as the scope of mandatory plans is narrowed and the scope of guidance plans is expanded, what kind of economic system will China have?

Answer: China's socialist planned economy is a planned commodity economy on the basis of socialist public ownership.

Fundamentally speaking, the economies in today's world can be divided into two major categories: the socialist category and the capitalist category. The economies in capitalist countries belong to the category of the market economy, and they are faced with contradictions inherent in the capitalist system. At present, many capitalist states have intervened in their national economies to different degrees so as to mitigate the contradictions. Ours is a socialist country, and our economy is a planned economy. The problems we encounter are completely different from the problems in capitalist countries. Our ongoing reforms will overcome the defects caused by rigid and excessive centralism, and will enable us to better follow the law of value, make use of market mechanisms, and invigorate the economy so as to open a new road in building socialism with Chinese characteristics.

Question: What other issues should we pay attention to in the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan?

Answer: We should pay attention to many issues. For example, in the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, our country will continue to carry out the policy of opening up to the outside world and will actively develop foreign trade and expand economic and technological exchanges with other countries. Therefore, we should make efforts to increase exports and earn more foreign exchange by putting more products on international markets. Last year, I visited Japan, and Mr Yoshihiro Inayama told me when talking about balancing our trade: "Only when one can export more can one import more, and only when one has the ability to repay debts can one borrow money." I agreed with this remark. Only by increasing exports can we import more advanced technologies and equipment from abroad. When contracting foreign debts, we must consider our ability to repay debts. Only thus can we ensure of the health of our economy in foreign economic exchanges. In addition, our country has rich resources for developing tourism, and the tourist industry can also earn foreign exchange. So we should make great efforts to develop this industry. However, in some localities, although the development of the tourist industry has increased the gross income of foreign exchange, their net income of foreign exchange has decreased. This is because they imported large quantities of tourist articles, including cigarettes, wines, and tableware, and this increased foreign exchange expenses and reduced the net foreign exchange income.

Moreover, we must improve the people's livelihood during the Seventh 5-Year Plan. We not only should increase the workers' incomes, but should also improve our social welfare. At present, there are an increasing number of retired workers in our country. We should take care of their livelihood. Some of these people have been living in difficult conditions since some prices rose, and the enterprises which they served previously cannot help them in this regard. So we need to establish a nationwide social security system as soon as possible on a sound basis, because the average age of our population will increase after we adopt the policy for birth control. This will enable retired workers to lead a happy life in their remaining years.

APPOINTING CADRES ON MERITS STRESSED

[Commentator's article: "Be Impartial and Honest, Appoint People on Their Merits"]

[Text] Over the past few years, under the guidance of the principle of the "four transformations" of cadres and in coordination with economic construction and reform, party organizations in many localities and departments have selected talented cadres and conscientiously readjusted their leading bodies. Marked achievements have been made in this respect. But at the same time, we should also be aware that problems pointed out by the "circular of the CPC Central Committee on selecting and appointing cadres strictly in line with party principles" still exist in some localities and departments. These unhealthy tendencies in organization and personnel work should be resolutely rectified.

The key to enabling the work concerning cadres to meet the needs of socialist modernization is to implement the principle of the "four transformations," to be impartial and honest, and to appoint people on their merits. Whether or not this is put into effect will produce a direct impact on whether or not socialist modernization can be successfully carried out, on whether or not the continuity of the party's Marxist line and policy can be maintained, and on whether or not the state can enjoy long-term peace and stability. Leading cadres at various levels will experience a severe test regarding this problem, which has an important bearing on the overall situation. They will face a test of whether they have strong party spirit, a high ideological level, and good political quality. Leading cadres who fail to stand up to such a test are not entitled to be qualified leaders, even though they do not have any problem with their conduct and money matters.

Some people say that they want to abide by the principle of the "four transformations" when appointing cadres, but in practice they select and appoint cadres by their own standards according to the feudal patriarchal clan system or kinship. This results from backward and outmoded ideas. So we are reminded that we should not underestimate the negative influence of erroneous ideas, and selfish ideas in particular, on the party's work concerning cadres. Only when leading cadres and cadres in charge of organization and personnel departments take the initiative in boldly ridding themselves of their backward and decadent ideas with regard to appointing people can they resolutely resist and overcome unhealthy tendencies in the work concerning cadres and appoint people on their merits. Ideological education in "appointing people on their merits and opposing appointing people by favoritism" should be earnestly and persistently disseminated among cadres at various levels, and in particular among leading cadres in party and government organs as well as in organization and personnel departments. This should be taken as an important component of education in party spirit. Sustained efforts should be made to rectify unhealthy tendencies in organization and personnel work, and this should be taken as an important component of the rectification of party style.

Whether one can appoint people "on their merits" instead of "by favoritism" depends on whether one is impartial and honest.

Problems of belittling talented cadres and practicing nepotism are always accompanied by unhealthy tendencies in organization and personnel work. Therefore, to enable cadres in charge of organization and personnel work to be impartial and honest in appointing people, it is necessary to constantly enhance their sense of keeping the public interest in mind and their responsibility for selecting talented people. Apart from reiterating the necessity for adhering to the basic principles and disciplines in the work concerning cadres, the central authorities have also promulgated a series of regulations for selecting and appointing cadres. For leading cadres and cadres in charge of organization and personnel work who abide by party discipline, there is absolutely no problem in implementing these regulations. These regulations will help stimulate their sense of responsibility for selecting and appointing talented people.

Exercising strict discipline over organization and personnel will be an important guarantee for holding firm to the principle of appointing people on their merits and for being impartial and honest. Whoever violates discipline concerning organization and personnel work must be criticized and dealth with without exception. People who ignore discipline concerning organization and personnel work and who abuse power for personal gain are not entitled to do leadership work or work concerning cadres. Party organizations at all levels are required to strengthen their supervision over the implementation of discipline concerning organization and personnel work. They should be impartial and incorruptible in solving whatever problems they discover. So long as leading cadres at all levels can follow the central authorities' circular and strictly abide by discipline concerning organization and personnel work, they will surely be able to stop unhealthy tendencies in appointing people, to shoulder the heavy responsibility for selecting and using cadres, which has an important bearing on the future and destiny of the party and the state, and to blaze a new trail in the work concerning cadres.

IMPROPER MEANS FOR CORRECTING UNHEALTHY TRENDS SEEN

["Short" commentary: "Do Not Ask Everyone To Make Self-Examination in Correcting Unhealthy Trends"]

[Text] At present, the work of rectifying party style and correcting unhealthy trends is focused on the major, important cases and is progressing healthily. The central organs and the Beijing municipal authorities have set examples, and various localities have followed suit, in carrying out this work in accordance with the six requirements put forth by the General Offices of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council in their circular on solving the several serious problems currently existing in the work styles of the public organs. Leaders at various levels have taken the lead in seriously making examinations and have started to improve the work styles of the public organs. Initial results have been achieved.

In carrying out this work, a few units have inappropriately expanded the scope of investigation and adopted oversimplified methods. For instance, instead of concentrating on investigating some violations of law and discipline, they issue questionnaires and ask everyone to reply to them. Some localities even ask everyone to report to his organization on his daily life including on matters which are purely personal. This method of work reflects at least a serious misunderstanding of the CPC Central Committee's general and specific policies on rectification of party style and will inevitably have evil consequences. The CPC Central Committee does not approve of it. Nevertheless, the number of violators of law and discipline among the cadres is very small. "Asking everyone to reply to a questionnaire" is at variance with the policy of the CPC Central Committee. A correct way is to realistically investigate and handle the matters of those who have violated law and discipline.

The work will be messed up if the scope specified by the CPC Central Committee is overstepped and one's proper economic activities are investigated wantonly, and if everyone is involved and asked to make self-examinations. This phenomenon deserves attention although it is somewhat isolated. Those units which have acted in this way should adopt proper methods to make corrections.

In the course of rectifying party style and correcting unhealthy trends, the cadres at various levels, the leading cadres in particular, must take exemplary action to carry out the relevant instructions of the CPC Central Committee. We must show with facts the communists' determination to wipe out all incidence of corruption. At the same time, we must pay close attention to the party's policies. All localities and units must act according to the relevant stipulations laid down by the CPC Central Committee. They should neither formulate their own rules nor act willfully.

CREATIVE FREEDOM, SOCIAL OBLIGATIONS EXAMINED

HK25134C Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 7 Mar 86 p 3

[WENYI BAO commentator's article: "Freedom of Creation and Sense of Social Responsibility of Literature and Art Workers" -- originally published in WENYI BAO, February 1986]

[Text] Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the party has completed bringing order out of chaos where ideas guiding literature and art work are concerned. It has restored and developed the Marxist-Leninist guideline for the party's literature and art and exercised steady and correct leadership over literature and art. An unprecedentedly favorable situation has appeared in our socialist literature and art. Comrade Deng Xiaoping's congratulatory speech at the fourth congress of Chinese writers and artists and Comrade Hu Yaobang's speech at a forum on the writing of scripts are landmark documents on the party's literature and art in this period.

In a congratulatory speech given on behalf of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee at the fourth congress of the Chinese Writers Association held more than a year ago, Comrade Hu Qili once again emphasized the party's literature and art policy. This elicited a keen response from the comrades present at the meeting and from literature and art workers throughout the country.

After fully affirming the tremendous achievements scored on the literature and art front since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the "congratulatory speech" pointed out that we must build socialism with Chinese characteristics and must judge all work on the basis of whether it contributes toward the state's prosperity and power and the people's wealth and happiness. Literature and art are manifestations of the spirit of the era and a driving force behind the advance of the era. Fundamental socialist tasks and the fundamental tasks of the party and the people are naturally also the fundamental tasks on the literature and art front. Striving to reflect our great era and use great communist ideals in educating the people is the most glorious mission of socialist literature. The "congratulatory speech" expressed the hope that our writers and artists would strive to become familiar with the interests of the state and the people and with the laws governing social development and changes, and to understand and fulfill their own social obligations; fight decadent capitalist thought and the remnant poison of feudalism, and use creations with high standards to serve the people and serve socialism. Mistakes and problems in creation can generally only be solved through literature and art criticism or comments, discussions, and debates. The "congratulatory speech" pointed out that creation must be free and comment should also be free. Without such freedom of expression of feelings and ideas, we cannot possibly produce works which have an aesthetic influence and the effect of acquainting people with ideas, thus educating them.

Therefore, the party and the state must provide the necessary conditions and create the necessary environment and atmosphere. Writers' individual thoughts and feelings and the whole process of creation must be compatible with such an environment of freedom provided by the party and the state.

The "congratulatory speech" reflects our party's firm principled stand and is full of understanding, love, and expectations when it comes to socialist literature and art. It is a continuation of a series of literature and art policies made since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Committee. It also carries great realistic significance. Its fundamental spirit is entirely at one with the speech given on behalf of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council by Comrade Deng Xiaoping at the fourth congress of Chinese writers and artists in October 1979. This is to say that writers' freedom in writing is closely related to an inseparable from their sense of social responsibility. On 8 February 1985, Comrade Hu Yaobang, in an important speech entitled "On the Party's Journalism Work," reaffirmed the CPC Central Committee's guideline on freedom of writing and provided a penetrating explanation. After this, Comrade Hu Yaobang on many occasions gave repeated explanations of the party's literature and art guidelines. This has helped comrades within and outside the party, primarily writers and artists, to further deepen their understanding of the party's literature and art guidelines and the matter of creative freedom. It is precisely under the inspiration of the party's literature and art guidelines and under the stimulation of the modernization campaign and the overall reform begin launched throughout the country that an unprecedentedly lively and colorful situation has appeared in literature and art work. The positive, persevering spirit and revolutionary fervor displayed by the masses of literacy and art workers should also be fully affirmed.

In the past year, a noteworthy phenomenon in creation is that there has been gratifying development in writers' individual character and the features of art. Comprehensiveness in the choice of subject matter, novelty in approach to writing, and the variety of styles have exceeded levels in any previous given period. Some works oriented to reality have provided our era with rousing songs to forge ahead. Some emphasize revealing urgent social problems to arouse people's proper attention. Some are devoted to portraying matters of ethics and moral principles and subtle changes in social mentality. Some draw on modern Western concepts of literature and art and the means of depicting certain states of mind on the part of a number of young people today. Some have explored things in a search for the cultural mentality of our nation. The success or failure of these works as exercises in practice and as literature and art phenomena, and whether they help to fulfill our needs in building socialist spiritual civilization, depends on penetrating study and the judgment of history. But the many features shown by the large number of works (such as the trend toward ever increasing variety, multiple levels, and multiple angles (in creation) have very seldom been seen in previous works.

There has also been prominent progress in criticism in the theoretical field. The criticism of literature and art is no longer confined to the explanation and assessment of works. Instead we have begun to make an overall analysis of representative writers and artists and a comprehensive survey of literature and art phenomena. An exploratory spirit has appeared marked by the expression of individual views or the citing of what one has seen. The introduction, promotion, and application of certain viewpoints and methods related to modern Western literature and art theory or cultural theory (which obviously contains modern Western degenerate theory) and the inevitable controversy arising therefrom have aroused the widespead interest and concern of people in literature and art circles. This has initially shown the importance of the problem of exploring the laws governing literature and art and the necessity of a correct approach toward the influences of foreign thought.

The appearance and development of new people in literature and art are similarly marked with the features of this era.

Such people are not only numerous and widely distributed over different areas, but often reflect their individual traits of creation and unique styles formed on the basis of their own experiences in life once they emerge on the literary scene. Some writers' performance in practice may not be satisfactory and some commentators' suggestions may not be convincing, but thteir pursuit of art has really produced a certain stimulatory effect on the development of our literature and art. The past year has witnessed active participation in writing and criticism and the emergence of talent. This shows that the guideline for literature and art defined by the "congratulatory speech" is compatible with the laws and characteristics of the development of literature and art and is full of vitality. It has aroused enthusiasm and creativity in writers and artists and carved a broad path for the further emancipation of forces in the production of literature and art. Meanwhile, it also shows that most of the writers and artists support the "congratulatory speech" and are capable of consciously applying the spirit of the "congratulatory speech" as a guideline for their practice in life and creation.

Reviewing and making an overall assessment of the situation in literature and art, we must also note that there are still deficiencies in our literature and art efforts. We must admit that when it comes to statisfying the people's ever increasing demand for socialist literature and art, the activity of writers and artists has hardly reached the highest level of development. Of the large number of works which have appeared, there are still not many of those fine works that actively reflect many aspects of real life in the contemporary era, portray images of new socialist figures, help the healthy mental growth of the younger generation, and properly combine ideology and art. Some comrades show a certain degree of indifference and disdain the sizzling reality of modernization and reform. In a departure from socialist reality, some comrades favor preaching abstract human nature, favor social pessimism ridiculing everything and doubting all social progress, or even play up human sexuality in an isolated manner with social content omitted. Some comrades have tolerated a flood of vulgar reading material surging forth in a given period with disastrous consequences and with an impact on the healthy development of serious literature and art. In the matter of theoretical criticism, there have not been many effective comments which uphold the use of fundamental Marxist principles in penetratingly analyzing contemporary literature and art phenomena and foreign schools of literature and art or cultural philosophy (especially contemporary schools of thought which were for a time all the rage in the West and which have had an impact on a number of young people in our country, as chiefly represented by the writers Eliot, Joyce, Kafka, Faulkner, Sartre, Camus, Beckett, and others, and philosophers like Nietzsche, Bergson, Husserl, Freud, Spengler, Heidegger, and others). Some writers, commentators, and editors have consciously or unconsciously separated the freedom of creation and the freedom of criticism for literary and art workers' social responsibilities. They have onesidedly stressed the former to the neglect of the latter. They have even come out with the idea that the freedom of creation can be enjoyed without considering the interests of society and the public and their own social responsibilities. Of course, this falls into the category of nonessentials. A realistic solution to all the above problems is aimed at protecting the healthier development of essential matters.

The year 1986 has come. The Seventh 5-Year Plan has begun to be effected. Our socialist reform is being launched in an overall manner. The building of socialist material civilization is proceeding in a more active manner. The role of literature and art in building socialist spiritual civilization and the role of the latter in the cause of socialism as a whole have become increasingly more important. On the basis of the tremendous achievements we have scored, our literature and art should go a step further, making further contributions toward the building of socialist spiritual civilization in line with the demands of the era.

We must uphold the freedom of creation and further strengthen the sense of social responsibility on the part of writers and artists. The "congratulatory speech" concisely pointed out that there must be freedom of creation for writers and artists.

Only given the fullest development of an individual's creativity and imagination and of his unique life experiences, unique views, and unique skills of artistic expression can his mental efforts in creative literature and art produce fine works with style of their own and set people thinking. Any attempt to artificially tamper with the creative freedom of writers and artists can only be manifestation of bureaucratic ignorance of literary and art activity. Meanwhile, any writer or artist exercising creative freedom cannot depart from given social historical conditions and social criteria. Absolute, unconditional, and abstract freedom of creation does not actually exist. At present we are working on reform and modernization. The success or failure of the effort in reform and modernization has a bearing on the future of the state and the destiny of the people. Our literature and art workers can never assume an indifferent attitude.

We are building socialist spiritual civilization. The raising of spiritual civilization to a higher level bears on the spiritual outlook of our nation. Literature and art workers can never treat things with detachment. Our attitude is that we must fervently affirm all that is conducive to modernization and the building of spiritual civilization and fully negate all that is harmful to modernization and the building of spiritual civilization. Lu Xun said: Literature is militant. Today we must continue giving full play to the militant role of literature and art. Of course, the social functions of literature and art are multifaceted. All works that directly or indirectly help to raise people's ideological level, moral standards, and sense of values, and all works that contribute toward improving what are usually called the manners and morals of the times are what society needs. Writers enjoy full freedom in what they write and how to write. But the interests of the people are, in the final analysis, the starting point and the aim of all activities of creation in our socialist literature and art.

Any work of real value in history is a result of a writer's or an artist's creative freedom in a given historical environment. Such freedom of creation is also inseparable from a writer's solemn attitude toward creation, his deep understanding of the laws of social development, and his sense of responsibility toward society. In creating a work, some writers or artists may subjectively think that this is the way to satisfy themselves. Actually, except in extreme cases where there is basically no desire for publication or presentation (creation even in such cases is also unlikely to be free from the restraints of given social historical conditions), they cannot avoid considering what kind of readers, spectators, or listeners they will have and what kind of reaction is likely to result. The whole process of artistic creation is a process of freedom of creation and the sense of social responsibility acting upon each other, even though different writers in different societies will have different senses of social responsibility. Actually, given no recognition of or an escape from the sense of social responsibility, we can hardly be creative. For writers and artists with ideals and with passion, this is entirely inconceivable. Therefore, the argument on the social effects of works put forth by Comrade Deng Xiaoping at the fourth congress of Chinese writers and artists, the point raised in Comrade Hu Qili's "congratulatory speech" about writers and artists' sense of social responsibility, or the point raised at the National Conference of Party Delegates last September that we must base all ideological and cultural activities on social benefits as the only criterion and oppose bourgeois liberalization -- all these are compatible with th laws governing the development of socialist literature and art and reflect a correct understanding of inherent features in literature and art on the part of our party and the people of our country.

For writers and artists, entering a real state of creative freedom is not necessarily something that can be easily done. Apart from serving the people and complying with socialist rules, they must have the people's life at their fingertips and a real grasp of artistic means. Both life and art have their own objective laws. The realization of freedom is a process of understanding objective laws and successfully applying such knowledge to practice.

Only with the characteristics of the era, the interests of the people, the traits and mentalities of various types of figures, various social phenomena, and scenes of life brought before the eyes of a writer and inculcated upon his mind, and with his grasp of a certain means of artistic expression, is he able to rid himself of blindness and overcome the plight of having too many problems with which to cope. In regard to this, Comrade Zhang Guangnian provided a very good illustration in a report given at the fourth congress of the Chinese Writers Association on behalf of its presidium: "Only when he has thoroughly understood himself and thoroughly understood the people's life, wishes, and demands; only when the passion for creation that burns in him subjectively is derived from the tides of a wide-ranging era and is in step with the pace of the march of history; and only when his works can really reflect a given era and are understood and liked by the masses, can a writer's freedom of creation be developed most fully and effectively." This means that only when a writer or artist plunges into the masses vibrant life of actual struggle and uses Marxist viewpoints and artistic sensibilities to observe, become acquainted with, participate in, understand, and explain social life and to have social life at his fingertips can he achieve real freedom in creation, let his sense of social responsibility merge with and permeate his own writing with complete freedom, do away with anything superfluous, and be in his element in artistic creation.

Life is a source of creation. Deep involvement with life and with the masses provides the basis for realizing the combination of freedom of creation and the sense of social responsiblity. Life envisioned in the minds of writers and artists or what they see and hear around them in everyday life is also life and provides social significance and artistic value. This is a truth that cannot and should not be negated. But equally true is that no matter how beautiful, dewdrops that reflect sunshine cannot equal the brilliance of the sun itself, nor can they encompass everything in the world which is bathed in sunshine. We have heard writers and artists say more than once: We are in a great era of inheriting the past and ushering in the future, carrying forward the revolutionary cause and paving the way for the future. Unprecedentedly swift changes are occurring in the people's life and national spirit. In this great historical period of great change and great development, if we divorce ourselves from the masses and shut ourselves off from the world, missing the chance to personally live and observe contemporary life, we would live to regret it. Losses cannot be remedied where our artistic history and that of society is concerned. Such a state of mind is sincere and well justified.

Some writers and artists have headed for the forefront of urban reform and modernization. More writers and artists are readying themselves and are poised to enter the swift currents of life to participate in creating this great historical process. We believe that an upsurge in efforts to live among the masses will appear. Literary and artistic creation is complicated and exacting mental work. Recognizing and penetratingly reflecting new conditions and new problems in the process of urban and rural reform and modernization is not something any writer or artist or any artistic form can quickly achieve. We cannot be impatient for immediate success and impose requirements others can hardly accomplish. We cannot confine ourselves to collecting some caricature-like works as presentable. But a new situation has begun. A period of revitalization has started. The road to the building of socialism with Chinese characteristics has been found. A bright future is unfolding. There should be many new people devoted to reform and modernization that emerge from among the masses! There should be an upsurge of stirring new things appearing over our vast land! In distinguishing between true and false, between good and evil, and between the beautiful and the ugly, and distinguishing manifested features in the complicated phenomena of life, certain tough problems do exist. For that matter, even certain obstacles and undeserved accusations will be encountered. But what we need is loyalty to the people's cause, a true understanding of the facts of life, and the kind of courage that allows no turning back where honor is concerned.

This is in line with the actual situation on the literary and art front. We must continue increasing possibilities for literature and encourage all attempts at creating the new things that help the development of socialist literature and art. We must resolutely oppose anyone using the need to stress the social effects of works and the writers and artists' sense of social responsibility as an excuse to artificially restrain the freedom of creation and intervene in the activity of creation. Hard work that costs writers and artists in exploration is an important part of the people's activity to make history in socialist construction and naturally will win the respect of the people and the protection of the laws of the state. Under such an excellent situation and in an environment where the party and the people place full confidence and high expectations in our literature and art workers, we must actively plunge into the currents of reform and modernization, become acquainted with and cherish rich and complicated social life, raise the ideological level of discerning the phenomena of life, and uphold the Marxist stand, viewpoints, and methods in making criticisms in the theoretical field. This is something that should be done in continuously upholding the spirit of the "congratulatory speech."

In an important speech at a conference of cadres of central organs on 9 January this year, Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out: "In a situation where we have a correct line, a clear-cut blueprint, and a set of favorable conditions, an extremely important problem is to further arouse the revolutionary spirit of the masses of party members and cadres and millions upon millions of people. Is not the title of the new year editorial of RENMIN RIBAO called 'Let the Spirit of the Foolish Old Man Who Removed the Mountains Fill the whole of China?' To promote the spirit of the foolish old man, in my opinion, is to turn the coming 5 years of the 1980's into 5 years of unity in struggle, 5 years of down-to-earth struggle, and 5 years of firm struggle." How can our literature and art workers not be moved by this and not do their utmost to make still more solid and more outstanding contributions?

LITERATURE, ART SERVING TWO CIVILIZATIONS URGED

HK261328 Beijing HONGQI in Chinese No 6, 16 Mar 86 p 2

["Forum" column: "Literature and Art Should Better Serve the Two Civilizations" -- article reprinted in the 15 March edition of GUANGMING RIBAO]

[Text] The general situation of China's literature and art circles is fine, with a number of good works and talented people emerging in recent years. The ideology and sentiments of the literature and art workers are sound on the whole. However, we must see that weakness and slackness in leadership and unclear guiding ideas still exist in this field, and that the influences of decadent schools of literature and art from capitalist countries and other erroneous things are not given due resistance or solutions. As a result, we have for some time witnessed such abnormal phenomena as blind worship of Western bourgeois literature and art and imitation of some vulgar styles in Hong Kong and Taiwan literature and art. The appearance of some literature and art works unhealthy in ideological essence and of low taste have affected some of our literature and art workers and produced some negative social effects. This is out of line with the building of socialist spiritual civilization and deserves the intense attention of the whole party.

In order to make literature and art better serve the building of socialist material and spiritual civilizations, the most important thing at present is the need to further clarify the guidelines of literature and art. The literature and art field has in recent years neglected propaganda and education about Marxist thought in literature and art. It has failed to analyze and criticize the bourgeois views belonging to various Western schools of literature and art which find their way into China.

Moreover, such bourgeois views have been adopted by some of our literature and art critics in their observation and discussion of Chinese literature and art. Such a practice has resulted in the corruption of some young people (including some promising young writers) by Western bourgeois decadent ideas, ideas of modern decadent schools in particular. Ours is a socialist country; we must adhere to Marxist ideological principles. Of course, Marxism should develp continuously with the march of the times, but the basic tenets and the many theses on literature and art and aesthetics in the Marxist ideological system are still of important guiding significance to our literature and art undertakings today. Therefore, in the building of socialist material and spiritual civilizations, Marxist theory in literature and art and aesthetics must be promoted and popularized in a big way; otherwise, literature and art work will go astray.

Strengthening propaganda and education about Marxist thought in literature and art must be linked with summing up and studying historical experiences. For decades, our revolutionary literature and art has played a tremendous role in invigorating a national militant spirit, resisting foreign invasion, dealing blows to aggressors, promoting the great unity of all nationalities, and building socialist New China vigorously in high spirits. It is entirely wrong to adopt a nihilist attitude towards the revolutionary traditions of literature and art. We should sum up our experiences in earnest, bring forward the fine traditions, and create more excellent works worthy of the expectations of our times and our people in the new historical stage of reform and construction.

Literature and art is an important component of the building of socialist spiritual civilization. Party committees and departments responsible for culture at all levels must strengthen leadership over literature and art work. Cadres, writers, and people in the performing arts who are engaged in literature and art work must take social benefits as the highest criterion and render service in the greatest interest of our nation and people at present -- realizing socialist modernization and upgrading the mental attitude of the people. We must be bold in criticizing some phenomena of partaking in spiritual pollution, and at exercising discipline. Of course, problems within the realms of politics and ideology should be solved with ideological education as the key and the correct unfolding of criticism and self-criticism. We must refrain from labelling others arbitrarily. It is necessary to further clarify that criticism, education, exercising discipline, solving existing problems in the contingent of literature and art, and overcoming some negative phenomena are precisely to make our contingent of literature and art workers still more purified and strong, and to make them still more reliable, cherishable, and respectable to the party and the people, and play a still greater role in socialist modernization.

SUPPLY IMPROVEMENT, DEMAND CONTROL DISCUSSED

HK230810 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 10 Mar 86 p 5

[Article by Wu Jinglian, Hu Ji, and Li Jiang: "On Control of Demands and Improvement of Supplies"]

[Text] On 13 January, at the national planning conference and the national economic work meeting, Premier Zhao Ziyang expounded the present economic situation and this year's tasks. He pointed out: Over the past year, the CPC Central Committee and the State Council adopted a series of measures for strengthening macroeconomic control and eliminating the unstable factors of economic life. They scored great successes in these areas and greatly improved the situation in which the general demands of society were greater than supply. At present there are still unstable factors in economic life. There was also the practice of acting "indiscriminately" last year when we withdrew money from circulation and controlled the amount of money introduced into circulation. In light of these conditions, he stressed that this year we should continue to strengthen macrocontrol and pay special attention to improving it.

We should control demand and improve supply, and should reduce the excessively rapid growth rate and maintain an appropriate growth rate on the basis of striving for economic results. The main purpose of economic reform is to "consolidate, assimilate, augment, and improve" those policies which were introduced last year, while making preparations for making further great achievements next year. It is of great importance for us to firmly grasp this point, for it plays an important part in this year's economic work.

The General Economic Situation Decides the Principles Which Should Be Followed

It is obvious that the series of measures taken in the latter half of 1985 for strengthening macrocontrol have been effective. They have relaxed the "over-employed" economy and the tension which had developed since the fourth quarter of 1984. On the other hand, however, the present national economy is just undergoing a change from a tense to a relaxed situation, rather than becoming totally relaxed. We have not completely eliminated the fundamental causes of the development of tension. The task of controlling the investment and consumption demands and stabilizing the economy is still very arduous. Since July 1985, the trend of increasing the investment in fixed assets has been weakened. Generally speaking, however, the scale of investment is still greater than what the national economy can bear. Furthermore, there is a danger of developing another increase of fixed assets investment. At present there are many large and new projects requiring a large amount of additional investment at a later stage. In particular, after October 1985, the scale of investment was increased again and the number of new projects was sharply increased, thereby exerting very great pressure for further expanding the investment scale in the future. The control over consumption funds should be more complex. In administrative unit and institution wage reform, many of the units and institutions returned to previous malpractices. Due to many unexpected factors, the consumption funds of enterprises face the possibility of loss of control, bringing the phenomena of irrationality and not getting happiness or bitterness as one deserves, as well as bringing strong repercussions in society regarding the differences in wages. These have made the control of consumption funds more difficult. Therefore, we must by no means treat lightly the issue concerning the increase of demands in economic life and that concerning the practice of putting too much money into circulation. For a considerable length of time in the future, we must continue to exert macrocontrol over total demands.

At the same time, we must realize such a situation: Under the circumstances last year when the economic structural reform had just started and the economic relationship was not yet in order, we could not but focus our macrocontrol on direct administrative control. Such a step was necessary at that time. However, it had an inevitable shortcoming of "acting indiscriminately." Moreover, it emphasized passively reducing the increased demands but had difficulties in positively improving supply by improving economic results and was unable to produce more with reduced investment. It also could not basically eliminate the profound cause of having the increase in demand greater than supply. In light of these problems, we must pay attention to improving macrocontrol and supply while continuing to strengthen macrocontrol.

To "Improve Supply," To "Expand Demand"

Some comrades hold that in the second half of last year, China excessively withdrew money from circulation. It should readjust the macroeconomic policy, which was rather tight, should take a relaxed attitude toward the control of total demands; and should improve the structure of the national economy under the prerequisite of increasing supply. This opinion is worth studying.

Over the years, China has been facing the problem of a dislocation of its national economic structure.

In other words, there have been many problems concerning the industrial structure, departmental structure, product structure, regional structure, the structure of scales, the structure of technology, and so on in the national economy; concerning the irrational allocation of natural resources; and concerning the damage caused in terms of social effects and economic results. Therefore, in the final analysis, our major task is to improve the economic structure. At the same time, since there are shortcomings in macrocontrol, which causes difficulties for some enterprises when circulating their liquid capital, we should also take measures to deal with this.

The point is: What should we do now in order to improve China's economic structure? There are two different methods of readjusting our current economic structure: One of them is to readjust the structures, to reduce the "surplus" amount, to solve "shortage" problems, and to improve the allocation of natural resources and the economic scale through various policies and measures, while continuing to strictly control total demand. The other is to readjust the structures under the prerequisite of taking a relaxed attitude toward the control of total demand; that is, we should on the one hand increase the purchasing power so as to absorb the surplus stock that has developed through control, and on the other, increase the supply of investment and goods for links which cannot cope with the demand of the production chain, thereby promoting the economic growth rate to a new plane. We hold that in order to make the right choice, we must first analyze our national economy and see if there is or will be a "recession," which has been predicted by some comrades. In terms of industrial production, the growth rate was gradually reduced after July 1985 until November 1985 when it reached the level of 8.8 percent. The rate bounced back to 10.2 percent in December, but fell again to the level of 5.6 percent in January 1986. What must be borne in mind is that the growth rate in the fourth quarter of 1984 was very high. Based on this level, the monthly average growth rate in the fourth quarter of 1985 was above 10 percent. Therefore, the daily output level was still high. Moreover, the word "reduction" here refers to the growth rate rather than the absolute level of production. Therefore, we must by no means confuse this situation with the zero or negative production growth phenomenon which occurs in the economic cycle of capitalist countries, or with China's absolute reduction of production value in 1958-1959 and 1967-1968. Otherwise we shall reach a conclusion that the principal direction of the macroeconomic policy should be changed and replaced with the adoption of "anti-recession measures."

Of course, since September 1985, the average industrial growth rate in China has dropped by more than 2.5 percent per month. We must treat this seriously when judging the speed of reduction. Even though we confirm that the speed of reduction has been too rapid, we must still specifically analyze the causes for this abnormal situation, rather than simply placing the blame on insufficient demand. We should realize that the economy of China is still restrained by resources. The effective restraining factor is the "shortage" of resources such as electricity, power, and raw materials. This differs from the situation of market economy in the West, which faces the "shortage" of demand, that is, insufficient purchasing power. Everywhere we can see that some comrades try to promote development speed. Therefore, the general situation of "overcooling" is by no means the principal danger. Under these circumstances, no matter whether we implement annual plans or mid-term plans, it will be easy for us to maintain the speed at an appropriate level by appropriately increasing the supply of money or other methods, in case there is the tendency toward insufficient demand.

It is more difficult to solve the issue of a reduction of the growth rate caused by the shortage of resources. The tightness of the "shortage" has made part of the productive forces lie idle. We cannot solve this by issuing more banknotes and increasing demand; neither can we use the method of importing the resources on large scale because of our limited foreign exchange resources. Instead we can only compensate for the situation by improving the use of the resources while increasing the production of resources which are in short supply. This requires us to improve the economic structure and the economic results.

The experience of China in socialist construction over the past 30-odd years has shown that under the situation of "overemployment," the contradictions of the structure are fully reflected. But since various sectors of the national economy are tightly restrained, it is very difficult to solve the structural contradictions at this stage. This is because we must implement correct economic development strategy and industrial policies in order to improve the economic structure. Specifically, we must switch the strategy from one of "catching up with and surpassing others," which only emphasizes speed but neglects economic results, to the strategy that, under the prerequisite of emphasizing the economic results, the speed is maintained at an appropriate level, and the people will get more practical benefits. We must switch the unbalanced strategy of putting undue emphasis on heavy industry and direct production capacity to that of coordinated development with focal points.

We must switch from the strategy that mainly depends on the increase of investment and extensively expanded reproduction to the one that mainly depends on the improvement of investment-output ratio and on intensively expanded reproduction. We must switch from the former foreign trade strategy which helps supply each other's needs, makes redistributions for goods in abundant and short supply, and meets demands by import, to the strategy of improving the foreign exchange earning capacity of products and promoting the growth of economic results of the national economy by using the international division of labor and the participation in international competition. All these can only be achieved with control of the growth rate and in relatively easy economic circumstances. For a long period in the past, the excessively large scale of capital construction greatly reduced the investment returns and the excessively high growth rate adversely affected the allocation of resources and the operation results, thereby affecting enterprise operations and management and the progress of technology. To put undue emphasis on the recent speed of construction also distracts us from attaching importance to the causes of science, technology, and education, thereby bringing about a series of problems. Therefore, we agree on this suggestion: We must change the tense situation into a resource for promoting economic results. Judging from this viewpoint, it is necessary for us to seriously handle the situation of early this year in which there has been the tendency for regional structures to deteriorate, which is reflected by the negative growth of industrial production in some large cities.

Some comrades liken the present situation in which the increase of demand is not yet completely under control and the increase of supply is just minimal, to the situation of "stagflation" which has appeared in Western countries. They hold that we should prevent this by increasing purchasing power. In fact, even though there is really "stagflation" in the national economy, to support the economic growth by manually expanding the effective demands is by no means a proven recipe for helping the good and driving out the evil. Rather, it is a remedy which is worse than the disease. The economic development history of some Western countries since World War II has clearly shown that the major reason for "stagflation" is because they adopted for a time some erroneous "antirecession" policies. The characteristic of these policies is to use inflation to make up for the insufficiency of effective demand. Though the policies maintain a temporary prosperity, they hinder the improvement of economic results. This made the countries resort to heavier and heavier doses of "stimulants" for inflation. Therefore, the economies sunk deeply and were unable to extricate themselves from "stagflation." Our economic development must focus on the improvement of economic results rather than on speed. Similarly, we must not simply "increase demand" or increase the growth rate at the expense of economic results. Instead, we must "improve supply" that is, make supply improve by basing it on the improvement of economic results.

To "Take a Relaxed Attitude Toward the Control of Total Amount" or To "Improve Macrocontrol"

Some comrades hold that at present, some enterprises do not have sufficient liquid capital, showing that the supply of money is insufficient.

They urge making the money supply easy in an all-round way. This proposal does not conform to the actual condition. Judging from the overall situation of society at present, the money supply is already easy instead of tight. Though the amount of last year's net cash investment fell short of the assigned target, the amount included such factors as the reduction of foreign exchange amount and the surplus stock of agricultural products. On the other hand, to a great extent, the amount shows that the total credit scale of gross money supply exceeded the growth rate ceiling by a big margin. If we make the money supply easy in a comprehensive way under these circumstances, we shall worsen the situation between the total supply and total demand of society, which is already not in tune. Some enterprises face the problem of having insufficient liquid capital because of the following reasons, which are not to be ignored: First, there are "definite gaps" of necessary liquid capital because the scale of fixed capital investment is too large; and second, there are loopholes in credit management so that some "suitcase companies," which bring negative social effects and which have no proper business, took with them the portion of credit that should be used to replenish the liquid capital. Therefore, under the prerequisite of strictly controlling the total amount of investment and credit, we should particularly increase the credit of liquid capital of some enterprises which bring about good social effects and really need the capital.

We should realize that under China's present economic system, there is an absence of an internal mechanism which can automatically reduce the flow of capital. Since the founding of the PRC, there have been several times when the national economy was "overemployed." These were eventually solved by the method of sharp braking. Consequently, the economy rose and fell sharply, and the losses were very great. As we followed the principle of "soft braking" this time, the intensity of the effect was not as great as before. Instead of rising and falling sharply, the economy rose sharply but fell only slightly. Instead of solving problems at one stroke, we solved them gradually. Therefore, time was needed. In other words, we resorted to the external force of administrative methods when dealing with the "overemployed" economy; whereas the administrative decisions were made under the condition of the resources being restrained. Our experience over the past 30-odd years has shown that because of the inherent tendency of the old system in which we pursued the growth rate of output, the scale of investment, and the increase in amount, we can manage to accomplish, without mass mobilization, the task of maintaing the economic growth rate at a considerably high level, even under the condition of excessively importing the resources and anticipating our revenue in order to meet the demands in those departments. On the other hand, to cut back the growth rate and cool down the "overemployed" economy to an appropriate level is not an easy job because this will affect the interests of various departments. In particular, under the present situation in which the decision-making power of departments is separated from the local administration, a situation formed in recent years, the interests of various departments and regions are closely linked to the economic growth rate. It is therefore very easy to promote a nationwide "overemployment" in the economy, under which the departments and regions vie with each other to increase the growth rate. It is not easy to cool down the situation in a comprehensive way, thereby shrinking production.

In other words, in light of these circumstances, our solution to the problem should be the improvement of macroeconomic management rather than taking a relaxed attitude toward it. We all know that the tendencies of expansion and investment are inherent weak points of the old system. In the 30 years since the founding of the PRC, we have suffered quite an ordeal brought about by the "inflation -- reduction" circulation of this system. Therefore, there is no way out if we return to this old system. In the first half of last year, we restored the practice of exercising direct administrative control over the situation of out of control supply and demand. It indeed brought remarkable short-term achievements. However, this method dampened, to a certain extent the vitality of the economy. Therefore, it is not favorable to fundamentally improve supply and completely eliminate unstable factors of the economy.

It seems that an important point of improving supply is to improve the method of exercising control under the prerequisite of strengthening macrocontrol, and to gradually switch the focal point from direct administrative control to indirect parameter control. All these can be achieved through the promotion of economic structural reform.

Under this year's conditions in which the economy is still tight, it is of course impossible to have reforms made headway. However, we should not entirely stay where we are in this year's reforms. Our reforms over the past years have no paid enough attention to the coordinated tasks, so that there is opening up and invigoration of the microeconomy and the management of the macroeconomy. We must promptly make up for this weak point so that the new economic mechanism will be complete and will bring about results at an earlier time. For this reason, we have carried out the work of consolidating and assimilating the price and wage reforms which were introduced last year. Moreover, in the area of imroving the control of fixed assets investment, we must check the projects under construction and readjust the structure of investment. We must also quicken the circulation of liquid capital. In regard to the financial system, we must conduct reforms in the areas of encouraging savings, improving services, and rationally using credit funds. In regard to invigorating enterprises, we should reduce the readjustment tax levied on large and medium enterprises and increase their rate of depreciation, so that these core enterprises possess the vitality for self-development. At the same time, we should promote the extensive economic links among regions and deparmtents and promote the rationalization of enterprise structure.

Strive To Make an Important Step Forward Next Year

The profoundly significant work of this year in reform is to make preparations for further reform in terms of theoretical study, formulation of plans, training of cadres, and the building of organizations, so as to ensure that measures that will affect a wider scope will be introduced next year.

In regard to measures that will be introduced next year to assist reforms, we should plan carefully in connection with our analysis of the present system, the need for further reform, and the provision of objective conditions. For example, we may propose reforms for assisting the work in three areas of the economic system:

First, further perfecting the system of a competitive market is the basic condition for ensuring that the spontaneous business activities of enterprises are constantly under macroeconomic restrictions and for ensuring measures for macroeconomically readjusting the enterprises through the market. We should try our best to arrange well the economic parameters (including commodity prices, tax, rates, interests rates, foreign exchange rates, and so on). We should put an end to the situation in which these parameters are seriously distorted. At the same time, we should eliminate the major causes of irrational distribution and not getting the happiness or bitterness that one deserves. At present the distortion of the prices of the means of production is the most serious problem in the national economy.

When the time is right, we shoudl reform this by adopting the method of linking the movement of prices to the amount they are taxed, so as to differentiate one product from another. However, just by readjusting and opening up the prices, we are unable to make the price signals become an effective lever for leading the enterprises to improve their operations. In order to achieve this point, we must also concentrate our efforts on perfecting the market mechanism and on establishing a normal order of marketing.

Second, adding vitality to enterprises and improving the rigidity of restrictions on their budgets play a decisive role in creating the microeconomic foundation for macroeconomic readjustment and improving the operation of the national economy as a whole.

In addition to strengthening the roles of large and medium state-run enterprises under independent operation and independent accounting, we can do more in the areas of creating patterns for small enterprises running their businesses independently.

Third, judging from the system of macroeconomic readjustment: 1) On the basis of introducing new taxes such as those on the use of land and the use of capital, and readjusting the regulations and rates of old taxes, we may follow the transitional financial system of "distinguishing revenue from expenditure and making contracts at all levels," in which the financial revenue is classified into central and local ones from some tax categories, and the scope of expenditure will be reassessed at various levels, so as to put an end to the situation of decentralizing decision-making power to various administraive levels; and 2) on the financial system, we may, on the basis of strenghtening the status of grass-roots banks under independent operation and independent accounting, gradually strengthen the role of interest rates in readjusting the demand and supply of capital while strengthening the management and readjustment functions of the central bank.

If we can base ourselves on the consolidation of reform achievements which were made last year and make an important step forward next year, our new economic system will be greatly improved and the inherent vitality of the socialist economy will be shown. This will enable us to win new victory in our socialist modernizations. While we wait for this moment, however, we must bear in mind: The greater the pace of reforms, the greater the demand for economic environemnt. Whether or not we can smoothly make an important step forward next year depends on whether or not the macrocontrol will be strengthened and improved this year and whether the economic environment will continue to become more relaxed, so as to reserve enough strength for taking such steps. We should work hard and strive to realize this arduous task.

JINGJI RIBAO DISCUSSES PRICE PROBLEM ISSUES

HK241228 Beijing JINGJI RIBAO in Chinese 15 Mar 86 p 3

[Article by Li Kemu: "The Price Problem in Real Life"]

[Text] The price problem is an important and sensitive issue involving the overall situation of the national economy and is closely linked to the people's daily life. For some time, the general level of commodity prices in our country has risen considerably. The state of affairs has drawn people's attention to the price problem. In our view, in the period of overall reform of the economic structure, the vast numbers of consumers should have some understanding about the mechanism of price changes while paying attention to the price problem.

Changes in the General Level of Commodity Prices

In China, the general level of commodity prices is primarily indicated by the general index of retail prices in the country as a whole. As an indication of the stability or instability of market prices, the general level of commodity prices is an important means by which the state exercises macroeconomic control. The general index of retail prices in our country rose by 17.7 percent in 1984 over 1978 (an average rise of about 2.7 percent annually) and the cost of living and price indexes of workers and staff members rose by 20 percent. In 1985, the general index of retail prices rose drastically, reaching a double-digit number in cities with a population of more than 1 million. Of the commodities for which prices have risen, it is nonstaple food that has conspicuously affected the people's life. What is the cause of the current price fluctuations? We should clarify this point when discussing the price problem.

There are many factors affecting the general level of commodity prices. Generally speaking, there are two important factors: One is commodity value and the other is currency value. Prices are the monetary form of value. The draw the prices of various commodities closer to their value and to maintain rational price ratios, it is necessary to conscientiously apply the law of value and, in light of production, demand, and other conditions, to frequently adjust the prices of various commodities. As a rule, this structural adjustment will not bring about a fluctuation in the general price level. However, if we rigidly retard rational price rises, resulting in a long and serious deviation between prices and value, the structural price adjustment made under such circumstances will probably lead to a rise in the general level of commodity prices. A change in currency value has a fairly great impact on the general price level. When the currency put into circulation exceeds the market demand, that is, when there is more money than commodities, the currency will depreciate and the prices of commodities will rise accordingly. The practical situation in our country is that the two phenomena affecting the general level of commodity prices exist to varying degrees.

Stablizing and Adjusting Commodity Prices

Stabilizing commodity prices is a fundamental principle of our party to which we must adhere. However, stabilizing commodity prices does not mean that prices cannot be changed; still less does it mean that prices should only be slashed and not increased. Prices are flexible and not rigid. Rigid prices can only lead to a loss in economic vitality and make it impossible for the market mechanism to give scope to its regulatory role. We should relatively stabilize commodity prices by increasing or reducing them. If price rises are caused by an excessive amount of currency in circulation, it is necessary to keep down prices by strengthening macroeconomic control. Our country has broad experience in successfully stabilizing prices. The price fluctuations in our country have been caused by an excessively large scale of capital construction and an excessively rapid growth in credit funds and consumption funds. This is extremely harmful to the normal development of the national economy and the improvement of the people's living standard. If the price fluctuations are caused by a structural price adjustment, it should be regarded as the cost of our fault. Curbing rational price rises will only lead to false stability in the general price level, which is generally called "concealed inflation" and which should accurately be called "concealed price rises." During the 10 years of turmoil, in an attempt to avoid great fluctuations in commodity prices, the state was forced to freeze prices, making the deviation of prices from value increasingly serious.

Due to their excessively low prices, neither the factories nor the peasants wanted to produce many commodities urgently needed in economic construction and the people's daily life. As a result, supply fell short of dmand. To maintain a stable situation whereby the prices were "kept down," the state spent a huge sum of money as subsidies for losses caused by the state purchasing farm and sideline products at higher prices than their selling prices and by the inability of the factories to increase the prices of their products despite the rising prices of raw and semi-finished materials. Given the very sharp contradictions caused by long-standing irrational prices, it is fairly difficult to rationalize prices through structural price adjsutment or to offset price rises with price reductions in some commodities. For tis reason, it will lead to a rise in the general price level. The practice of using state financial subisides to keep down prices, or "concealed inflation," is a potential factor in the rise of the general price level. The practice of our economic development tells us that it is necessary to adjust as soon as possible the irrational prices in order to reduce the state burden in giving financial subsidies and to put more of our limited capital into the development of the national economy; to arouse the initiative of producers and to meet the needs of the people; and to remove the hidden danger of "concealed inflation" causing price hikes.

Therefore, even though structural adjustment may lead to a certain rise in the general price level, it is still necessary to make the adjustment because this is in keeping with the fundamental interests of the consumers. This is completely different from the outcome of excessive currency in circulation. While making structural adjustment to planned prices, we should let most means of subsistence and a sizable number of production means be gradually regulated by the market mechanism so that the prices which have been "kept down" can become more rational through the function of the law of value.

Price Adjustment and Consumption Level

Price adjustment will help raise the people's consumption level. But how should we deal with the present condition affecting the consumption level in the course of price adjustment? We can cite the following points: First, by eliminating "concealed inflation" we do not mean simultaneously raising the prices of all commodities whose prices have been "kept down" but carrying them out gradually in light of changes in market supply and demand and other social factors, particularly the consumers' capacity to withstand strain. Second, the state should appropriately give or increase subsidies for commodities whose prices have been raised. Third, price adjustment should be made step by step and in coordination with wage system reform. The important thing is that the actual wage level of the people should not be reduced. Fourth, when making structural adjustments, we should also pay attention to the question of whether or not the structure of the commodities whose prices have been adjusted is rational. The current economic and financial situation has provided a good opportunity for the reform of the pricing system. We should take advantage of this opportunity to solve the price problem. Given a relatively small social impact, this will enable us to achieve without a hitch the objective of stimulating production and gradually improving the people's living standard.

LIAOWANG ON PLA CONTRIBUTIONS TO WORLD PEACE

HK261235 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 11, 17 Mar 86 pp 8-9

[Article by He Qizong, deputy chief of the PLA General Staff: "China's Army Makes Contributions To Safeguarding World Peace" -- Author is from Yingshan County, Sichuan. He was born in March 1943 and joined the Army in 1961. He studied in the PLA Military Academy in 1980 and was promoted to deputy chief of general staff of the PLA in 1985]

[Text] The 40th UN General Assembly designated 1986 as International Year of Peace and urged the people of various countries "to join UN efforts to safeguard peace and to guarantee a good future for mankind." This appeal is in keeping with the trends of our times. It has won the support of more than 100 countries and organizations, including China. It reflects the common desire for peace, disarmament, and opposing war of the people of all countries in the world. The Chinese Army sincerely hopes that world peace can be maintained.

On 4 June last year, Deng Xiaoping, chairman of the CPC Central Military Commission, announced at an enlarged meeting of the commission that the Chinese Government had decided to cut the number of soldiers by 1 million. This important strategic decision is a concrete contribution by China to opposing the arms race and safeguarding world peace. It has won the resolute and unanimous support of the whole Army and the people of the whole country. It is also welcomed and praised by all peace-loving countries and people of the world. Public opinion in the international coummunity has universally pointed out: China's disarmament is "not for the sake of propaganda." China is "safeguarding world peace by her concrete action."

In the past few years, the two superpowers have engaged in an increasingly intense arms race. Last year, the military spending of both of them reached an all-time high. While competing with one another in expanding conventional arms and updating their strategic offensive weapons in an overall manner, they have also begun military contention in outer space. The contention for military superiority and for world hegemony is the major cause of the turbulent international situation.

Together with the peace-loving countries and people of the world, China resolutely opposes the arms race between the superpowers and has unilaterally taken the concrete action of cutting its Army by 1 million soldiers to show its sincerity concerning peace. The purpose of cutting its Army is also to concentrate more financial and material resources on accelerating its economic construction so that China's economy will become prosperous, its political situation will become more stable, and China will be able to expand its role in safeguarding world peace.

As a matter of fact, China has been taking the initiative in cutting its Armed Forces in the past few years. On one occasion after another, the number of soldiers was reduced and the percentage of the state's financial expenditure represented by military spending was lowered. Much of defense production has been turned into civil production and some military ports and airports have been opened for civil use. At the same time, the Army has energetically given support to the Army and the people jointly building socialist spiritual and material civilization. In order to meet the needs of the country's economic construction, the Army is making great efforts to train qualified personnel who can do both military and civilian work so that large numbers of ex-servicemen can play an increasingly greater role in socialist modernization. At present, the first stage of the reduction-in-strength reorganization has been completed smoothly. Various Army units have been reorganized according to the newly stipulated sizes for Army units. The PLA General Staff Headquarters, General Political Department, and General Logistics Department, the National Defense Science, Technology, and Industry Commission, various arms and services, various military regional organs, and the major combat units are now carrying out their work according to the newly promulgated sizes for Army units. Large numbers of excess personnel have voluntarily subordinated themselves to the needs of the overall situation and are ready to be transferred to work to build the socialist economy with the help of local governments. According to the plan of the CPC Central Military Commission, this year's reduction-in-strength reorganization will mainly be conducted in all military schools and colleges, the logistics and convoy system, and the provincial military district system. It is certain that after 2 years of intense and orderly work, the arduous task of reducing Army troops by 1 million and of reorganization will be fulfilled in 1986 as scheduled. The Chinese Army will then be even smaller in number but better trained and the state's military expenditure will be further reduced. The capacity to resist aggression and safeguard the peace of China, a large, strong, and prosperous country with 1 billion people who are united as one, will also increase.

The PLA is a combat contingent for opposing aggression and defending the motherland. China has always pursued a policy of peace and strictly adhered to the five principles of peaceful coexistence. China has no military base in any foreign country. Nor is there any Chinese soldier stationed abroad. The sacred duty of the Chinese Army is to defend the motherland's inviolable sovereignty. At the same time, it is also an important force for defending world peace and has made unremitting efforts to safeguard world peace. It goes without saying that China is sincere and determined in disarmament. On the other hand, although they have expressed in words their desire to "accelerate the disarmament talks," the two superpowers have taken concrete actions which can only be interpreted as regarding talks as a means to restrict the opposite party and to strengthen oneself.

They have been arguing back and forth for a long time in talks on limiting offensive weapons as well as on limiting conventional weapons and their arms expansion in the meantime continued. People have an absolute right to demand that the two superpowers, which possess the world's biggest nuclear arsenals and the most powerful conventional arms, be sincere and take action to earnestly stop the arms race and take the lead in large-scale disarmament.

Nearly 41 years have passed since World War II. During this period, although imperialists and hegemonic powers have never stopped their aggression and expansion, and local conflicts and partial wars have occurred one after another, a new world war, about which the people of the world worry most, has not broken out after all. This can only be regarded as a great victory, as compared with a period of peace of only 21 years after World War I. This victory has not been bestowed by anyone on the international community, but is the outcome of the struggle to defend world peace of the people of the world, the people of the Third World countries in particular, who are more awakened and united than ever before. Historical experiences and lessons have told us that the people of all countries throughout the world must be united and that all peace-loving countries must be united. They must take action to prevent wars before they break out and must take effective measures to stop any war once the aggressors have started it. We should never tolerate or condone aggressors in the hope of seeking momentary peace. We should not try to avoid danger to ourselves at the expense of the security of other countries. So long as the people of the whole world make concerted efforts to control the constant growth of factors for war, a new world war can be prevented and there is much hope for lasting world peace.

TIAN JIYUN INSPECTS HUBEI, STRESSES AGRICULTURE

HK260147 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Tian Jiyun, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee, member of the CPC Central Committee Secretariat, and vice premier of the State Council, inspected Hubei and provided guidance for work in the province on 23 and 24 March. He stressed that it is essential to strengthen the agricultural foundation, develop grain production, stabilize cotton output, further develop the excellent situation, and thus create conditions for in-depth reforms.

Vice Premier Tian focused on getting to know the state of agriculture in the province. Reporting to him, responsible comrades of the provincial CPC Committee and government said that this year it is necessary to implement the spirit of CPC Central Committee Document No 1 in an all-round way, strengthen leadership over agriculture, take still more advantage of the province's strong points in grain, and stabilize cotton production. It is necessary to continue to vigorously develop township enterprises and give free rein to promoting diversification, so as to stimulate healthy development of the rural economy.

The provincial authorities have therefore taken the following measures: allocating 200 million yuan in discount revolving funds to support grain and cotton production; the price of prepurchased grain to be increased by 2 Fen per jin on the basis of an proportional price; chemical fertilizer to be awarded as a bonus for grain and cotton purchased by contract; the price of ammonium carbonate to be reduced, and the prices of other agricultural production materials to be stabilized; maintenance and management of water conservation facilities to be grasped to improve their capacity to resist natural disasters; and new technologies and strains to be popularized and applied.

Vice Premier Tian agreed with all this. He said: These policy measures are correct and effective. The whole year's effort depends on the spring. I hope that these measures will be implemented in the grass roots and rapidly become common knowledge among the peasants, so as to enhance their enthusiasm for growing grain.

He stressed: We must seriously implement the series of policies of the CPC Central Committee and State Council on agricultural production, and especially on stimulating grain production, and continue to develop grain production. We must also stabilize cotton output. We must certainly not have big fluctuations in cotton output. Agriculture is the foundation, and grain is the foundation of the foundation. A guaranteed grain output creates conditions for us to further develop the excellent situation and carry out reforms in depth.

He affirmed the methods applied by the provincial CPC Committee and government for actively developing township enterprises, pointing out: Developing township enterprises is an essential path for invigorating the rural economy. It is a path of great vitality. In developing township enterprises, we must persevere in the correct orientation and pay attention to reducing blindness in operation. China's population of 1 billion includes 800 million peasants. We cannot gradually narrow the gap between urban and rural areas, modernize agriculture, and extricate the peasants from poverty without developing township enterprises.

When listening to reports delivered by the Wuhan City CPC Committee and government, Vice Premier Tian praised the gratifying progress made by the city in comprehensive urban reforms. He expressed the hope that this year the city would further implement the economic responsibility systems in the enterprises, conduct appropriate ideological and political work for staff and workers in light of the actual conditions of each enterprise, pay attention to solving certain specific problems in production, operations, and daily life in the enterprises, and strive to go a good job in industrial production. Attention must also be paid to developing lateral economic ties. Efforts should be made to achieve relatively great progress in this respect in carrying out economic structural reform this year.

Vice Premier Tian also inspected the Dadongmen trading market in Wuchang and the small commodity market in Hanzheng Street in Hankou. He obtained direct information on the market and price situations. He demanded that market supply work be done well. He was extremely concerned about the situation in nonstaple food supplies, especially vegetables, for urban residents. He told the responsible comrades of the province and city that the size of the crop produced in the vegetable fields determines the prices of vegetables in the baskets. It is essential to guarantee the planting area for vegetables. Everything possible must be done to make proper arrangements for the masses' daily life.

Vice Premier Tian Jiyun pointed out after listening to reports from the province and city: The situation in Hubei Province is very good. This is the case all the way from agriculture and industry to the markets. The situation in agriculture is particularly good. He expressed the hope that the province would continue to develop its excellent situation. Hubei should strive for a relatively good harvest in agriculture and a suitable growth rate in industry. The province should vigorously improve economic results and create conditions for taking bigger strides in reform in the future.

Vice Premier Tian Jiyun was accompanied on his inspection by Yan Ying, deputy secretary general of the State Council; and Jiang Xi, vice minister of commerce. Guan Guangfu, Guo Zhenqian, Wang Qun, and other responsible comrades of the provincial and city CPC committees and governments reported on work to Vice Premier Tian.

COMMENTARY URGES HORIZONTAL ECONOMIC COOPERATION

HK251123 Beijing Domestic Television Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Text] A great upsurge in cooperation between enterprises is emerging in China's economic life. Many and varied forms of horizontal cooperation are currently breaking down various barriers established under the traditional system, such as barriers between industries, barriers between regions, barriers between departments, and barriers between systems of ownership. These forms of cooperation are also promoting a rapid development of productive forces. This is an important achievement scored in the course of our country's urban and rural economic reforms for expanding the enterprises' decision-making authority and for giving full play to the regulative role of the law of value in our socialist economy. A basic characteristic of modern socialized mass production is the existence of stable and extensive horizontal economic ties between industries and enterprises, between industry, commerce and enterprises, and between industry, commerce, enterprises, and scientific research institutions. Specialized division of labor and coordination between enterprises are promoted through such ties, and the coordinated development of economic activities in different regions and departments is also promoted through such ties.

However, our old system severed horizontal ties between enterprises. As a result, the organizational structures of our enterprises have been very irrational and it has been difficult for us to carry out specialized division of labor. The severance of ties has also strengthened the dependence of enterprises on the government. Over the past few years, through the development of horizontal economic cooperation, enterprises have learned from others' strong points to offset their weaknesses and have increased economic returns. At the same time, this development has changed the situation in which enterprises are administrative organs' subsidiary bodies and are not separated from administrative organs, and in which there are barriers between higher and lower levels and between departments and regions. This shows that the development of horizontal ties not only can yield better economic returns but can also promote reforms. It is of great importance to achieving the healthy and stable development of our national economy.

STATE COUNCIL ISSUES ECONOMIC ASSOCIATION RULES

OW231040 Beijing XINHUA in English 1030 GMT 23 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 23 (XINHUA) -- The State Council, in a regulation published today, calls for the promotion of horizontal economic association to break down barriers between departments and regions and spur economic development. The regulations between raw material bases and processing plants, between production enterprises and research institutes, among agricultural, industrial and trade departments, as well as among transportation units to link railway, highway, shipping and air transport. The ultimate aim is to tap all potential, rationalize the structure and distribution of enterprises, develop marketing and separate enterprise management from administration.

According to the regulation, the associations can be tightly or loosely knitted and it can be cooperation in either manpower, resources, capital, technology or marketing. The association must be formed voluntarily and no administrative coercion is allowed, the regulation said. It will not be restricted by the barriers between regions, administrative departments, economic sectors and ownerships.

Banks should support such horizontal economic association in loans; while these associations, with approval granted, can also issue debentures through banks or other financial organizations. Double taxations must be avoided on the horizontal economic associations, the regulation said. Tax might be reduced for five years on profits earned from investment in energy, transportation, old revolutionary bases, frontier and poor regions and areas lived by minority nationalities.

CYL CIRCULAR STRESSES IDEOLOGICAL EDUCATION

OW251447 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] The CYL Central Committee issued a circular today calling on CYL organs at all levels to further promote education on the current situation, policy, andmission and on the revolutionary tradition. The circular says since this year is the 67th anniversary of the May 4th Movement, the Pure Brightness Festival is at hand, and the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC will open soon, CYL organs at all levels must make the best use of the situation to deepen the education on the current situation, policy, and mission and in the revolutionary tradition among the vast number of CYL members and other young people. In promoting these educational activities, the various localities should avoid large gatherings of people from a big area and should do away with formalism and superficiality. Instead, they should strive to imbue various activities with ideological education so that CYL members and other young people will really benefit from such education.

[Excerpts] According to a report by this station's reporter, the Fourth Session of the Sixth CPPCC National Committee continued its group discussions on this morning. The participants generally maintained that there have been marked achievements and great improvements in the CPPCC work in the past year and that practice has proven that the CPPCC has played, and will certainly play, a greater role in the country's two civilizations. Liu Yandong, member of the Standing Committee of the CPPCC National Committee and president of the All-China Youth Federation, said that various groups of the CPPCC National Committee have carried out various forms of activities and brought their strength into full play. Wang Zhaoguo, member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, came to the CPPCC National Committee's All-China Youth Federation group to take part in its discussion this morning.

FORMER VICE PREMIER CHEN YONGGUI DIES AT 72

[Text] Beijing, March 26 (XINHUA) -- Chen Yonggui, once a national labor hero and leader of China's no. 1 model farming unit, died of lung cancer at 20:35 hours today. He was 72. He was advisor to the Dongjiao (east suburbs) farm of Beijing before he died. He was appointed to the post by the party Central COmmittee in 1983. From 1975 to 1980, he was one of China's vice-premiers.

When his condition deteriorated, party and state leaders Xi Zhongxun, Hu Qili, Hao Jianxiu and Wang Zhaoguo saw him in the hospital. Other visitors included Yang Dezhong, first deputy director of the General Office of the party Central Committee, Mayor Chen Xitong of Beijing, as well as friends from his native province, Shanxi, his native village, Dazhai, and the Dongjiao farm.

Chen was born in 1914 in a poor peasant family in Dazhai Village, Xiyang County, Shanxi Province, and joined the Communist Party in 1948. In the 1950's he pioneered the collectivization movement by helping set up an agricultural producers' co-operative in his village, Dazhai, which nestles deep in the arid, gully-strewn Taihang mountains. As party secretary of the village Communist Party branch committee, he got the villagers mobilized to change the farming conditions by filling gullies with earth to create land and build irrigation facilties and terraces on the Loess mountain-slopes. As the village was becoming better off, it won the praise of the party Central Committee and the top party leaders, Mao Zedong and Zhou Enlai.

The many years' strenuous efforts made Dazhai villagers under Chen's leadership to fight nature and the subsequent successes were publicized nationwide to encourage the rest of the Chinese population to work hard and make China strong and prosperous.

Meanwhile, Chen Yonggui, too, came into national limelight as a labor hero. He was deputy to the Third, Fourth and Fifth National People's Congress, member of the Ninth, Tenth and 11th party Central Committee, and member of the Political Bureau of the Tenth and 11th party Central Committee. He supported the basic line, principles and policies formulated at the Third Plenum of the 11th party Central Committee and worked in real earnest to sum up the experience and lessons in his past work. In 1983, he willingly accepted the party Central Committee's offer of an advisory post in the Dongjiao farm. For his care to others and his devotion to work, he became everybody's friend on that farm.

JIANGXI: WAN SHAOFEN ON BUILDING OLD BASE AREAS

OW241130 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 17 Mar 86

["Excerpts" of report by Wan Shaofen, secretary of the provincial party committee and chairman of the provincial commission in charge of construction in old revolutionary base areas, at a provincial meeting held in Nanchang on 17 March on such construction: "Enthusiastically and Steadfastly Quicken the Pace of Construction in Old Revolutionary Base Areas"]

[Excerpts] Last August, a provincial conference on construction in old revolutionary base areas solved the questions of unifying our thinking and enhancing our understanding of the importance of such construction. This is most important. Keeping in mind the main subject of how to bring about noticeable changes in old revolutionary base areas this year, this meeting should sum up and discuss our work, further enhance our understanding, and effectively solve problems that need immediate solution in our work in this regard.

Since last year, especially since the eighth provincial party congress and a provincial conference on construction in old revolutionary base areas, people in various parts of the province have paid attention to the construction of old revolutionary base areas and have done a lot of work in this regard. As a result, the situation in those areas has developed rather rapidly.

In implementing the central authorities' and the provincial party committee's preferential policies toward particularly poor townships in old revolutionary base areas, relevant provincial-level departments, as well as prefectures, cities, and counties have paid special attention to implementing the policy of reducing or remitting agricultural taxes and several other policies in recent months. Meanwhile, the provincial, prefectural, city, and county authorities supported old revolutionary base areas with 101.67 million yuan last year. The supply of materials for construction projects in old revolutionary base areas is also better than before.

We are glad to note that new steps have been taken in the construction of the province's old revolutionary base areas since the eighth provincial party congress and a provincial conference on such construction last year. Now the construction of those areas has entered a new stage. Of course, there are still problems and difficulties in this regard. We must overcome such problems and difficulties through our unremitting efforts and to further bring about a new situation in the work of old revolutionary base areas.

At the conference on the work of old revolutionary base areas last year, the provincial party committee and the provincial government set the requirements for helping the people in those areas have enough to eat and wear in 3 years and shake off poverty in 5 years.

To achieve this goal, a big step should be taken in the construction of the old revolutionary base areas on the basis of last year's initial achievements; a noticeable change should be brought about in this regard. I think a noticeable change should mainly manifest itself in the following aspects:

1. Average per-capita net income in the particularly poor townships of the old revolutionary base areas this year should increase 20 percent over that of last year and the average per-capita net income of one-third of the households with particular material difficulties should reach or top 200 yuan.

2. As for a small number of households with particular material difficulties in old revolutionary base areas where people still do not have enough to eat and wear or adequate housing to shelter them from the wind and rain, it is necessary to basically solve such problems for them within this year. By basically solving such problems for them, it means that every possible effort should be made to enable them not to suffer from hunger or cold any more. This must be done for each such household.

3. It is necessary to select and start projects in counties, townships, and villages in old revolutionary base areas this year that can make full use of local resources to promote commodity production and that can help people shake off poverty and become better off.

4. Lateral economic ties between enterprises in old revolutionary base areas and those outside should be noticeably strengthened.

5. It is necessary to start or continue the building of basic and urgently needed facilties in transportation, circulation, energy, water conservation, education, and public health. Marked progress should be made in the prevention and cure of endemic diseases.

6. Administrative offices in charge of construction in old revolutionary base areas should be strengthened as soon as possible.

In our province, a vigorous situation has been brought about in which people concern themselves with, play an active part in, and contribute to the construction of our province's old revolutionary base areas. Under the correct leadership of the party Central Committee, we can certainly take a big step and bring about a noticeable change in the construction of such areas this year and contribute to the fulfillment of the tasks for the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan provided we rely on the cadres and masses, firmly pool our wisdom and efforts, work in unity, and advance in a pioneering spirit.

ZHEJIANG NPC DEPUTIES LEAVE FOR BEIJING

OW221317 Hangzhou Zhejiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] Zhejiang Province's NPC deputies and members of the CPPCC National Committee left Hangzhou by plane for Beijing this afternoon to respectively attend the forthcoming Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC and the Fourth Session of the Sixth CPPCC National Committee.

They had gone deep into factories, rural areas, and schools to conduct extensive investigation and study and to listen to the opinions and needs of the masses of grassroots units. During their stay in Hangzhou, they seriously listened to a briefing by Governor Xue Jue on the Zhejiang provincial Seventh 5-Year Plan; they thus gained a better idea of the reform and development situation in the province. They were seen off at the airport by leading comrades of the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee, the provincial CPPCC Committee, and other departments concerned.

GUANGDONG RECLAMATION FARMS ENJOY PREFERENTIAL TREATMENT

HK241042 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0247 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] Guangzhou, 21 Mar (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- The 88 farms and more than 10 factories and enterprises set up by Guangdong's agricultural reclamation departments in Hainan are given preferential treatment similar to that of the special economic zones in opening to the outside world and importing foreign capital. The 15 mu of land in the Shantou Special economic economic zone and 30 mu of land in the Zhanjiang economic exploitation zone owned by the agricultural reclamation departments also enjoy the preferential treatment.

According to the people involved, Guangdong's agricultural reclamation departments welcome foreign businessmen's cooperation in farming, animal raising, the processing industry, and tourism in the above areas. The items of cooperation in the near future include prawn breeding, the planting and processing of coffee and tea, the growing and preservation of Hongjiang oranges, the processing of rubber products, the construction of tourist buildings in the Shantou Special Economic Zone, the construction of Nanhai International Hotel and Haixiu Restaurant in Haikou, the construction of Nanya Hotel and Nanxin Tourist Center in Sanya, the building of Taiyang Lake Resort in Wanning County, and the building of Nanyang hotsprings tourist area and sanatorium in Danxian County.

After 35 years in operation, China's largest base of tropical crops has been established on the barren hills and mountains in Hainan, Zhanjiang, and Shantou. Over the past 3 years, 25 contracts concerning economic and technological cooperation have been concluded with foreign, Hong Kong, and Macao businessmen by means of compensation trade, joint ventures, and other forms. Of these, 18 contracts are being implemented. The amount of foreign investment totals over US$12 million. Total investment in the nutriment factory of the Xianglian corporation, a joint venture run by Guangdong's agricultural reclamation departments, the Guangdong Food Center, and the U.S. XIANG [0078] Food Industrial Group, reached US$7 million. Construction of the project started last year and is expected to be completed and put into operation in the first half of this year. The Sanjiang farm, which is located in an Overseas Chinese hometown, imported improved varieties of coconut. Now it has become China's largest production base of coconuts.

Guangdong's agricultural reclamation departments used the US$100 million loan granted by the international exploitation association of the World Bank to plant and reforest 600,000 mu of rubber trees and afforest an area of 180,000 mu in Hainan and the Leizhou peninsula. By the end of 1985, the agricultural reclamation departments had planted and reforested 460,000 mu of rubber trees and afforested an area of 140,000 mu. According to the inspection made by the officials of the World Bank, both the quality of the trees planted and management level reached the required standard.

Guangdong's agricultural reclamation began in 1985. There are now 140 reclamation farms and 571 reclamation factories, with a total of 660,000 workers. These farms and factories have 5.05 million mu of rubber trees and tropical crops and an afforested area of 2.36 million mu. There are more than 1,400 kinds of industrial products manufactured by these farms and factories. The Wuzhishan black tea produced by the farms has fragrance and a good taste. More than 50,000 dan of black tea is supplied to the international market every year. It sells well in more than 40 countries and regions including the United States, Japan, and Australia. The total industrial and agricultural output of Guangdong's agricultural reclamation departments in 1985 was 1.53 billion yuan. Foreign exchange earned through the export of commodities in recent years was around US$31.35 million.

HUBEI TO SWITCH PEOPLE'S ARMED FORCES DEPARTMENTS

HK201211 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 17 Mar 86

[Text] The work of switching county and city level people's armed forces departments to the jurisdiction of local authorities will start in April and end in June in the province.

To strengthen leadership over the work, a provincial leading group has been set up. It began a pilot project in March to explore experience in this respect in (Ouanjiang) and (Yingshan) Counties, Suizhou City, and Wuhan's Hanyang District.

After being switched to the jurisdiction of local authorities, county and city level people's armed forces departments will mainly be responsible for people's militia and military service work in the areas under their administration. They will be under the leadership of county, city, and district CPC committees and governments and the military authorities at the higher level.

HUNAN: MAO ZHIYONG, OTHER LEADERS VISIT NPC DEPUTIES

HK270511 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] NPC deputies and CPPCC National Committee members from our province left for Beijing by plane today to attend the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC and the fourth meeting of the Sixth CPPCC National Committee to discuss state affairs. On the evening of 19 March, Mao Zhiyong, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, and some responsible persons of the provincial CPC committee, provincial Advisory Commission, provincial Discipline Inspection Commission, provincial People's Congress Standing Committee, provincial people's government, provincial CPPCC Committee, and Hunan Military District went to the Hunan Guesthouse to visit the deputies and committee members.

SICHUAN LEADER ON MACHINE-BUILDING INDUSTRY

[Excerpts] Vice Governor Gu Jinchi pointed out at the provincial machine-building industry work conference which concluded on 23 March: The machine-building industry must take the lead in development among the various sectors of the national economy, and a certain growth rate must be maintained.

He said: Investment in fixed assets in the machine-building industry in Sichuan ranks third in the whole country. The industry's production capacity and potentionals are great. Its growth rate should therefore be a bit higher, as appropriate. This is both necessary and feasible.

The meeting also decided on the goals of endeavor for the machine-building industry during the Seventh 5-Year Plan. It demanded that the machine-building industry system do a good job in pilot projects for reform, step up key construction work and technological transformation, develop new products, and improve management standards and economic results. It is necessary to bring into full play the role of the fruits of third-line construction and make contributions to the sustained, steady, and co-ordinated development of the province's economy.

SICHUAN MEETING URGES SUPPORT FOR SPRING FARMING

[Excerpts] The provincial government held a telephone conference with responsible persons of departments concerned and of cities and prefectures on 24 March to make arrangements for supplying agricultural production materials and issuing loans so as to ensure the smooth progress of preparations for spring farming. Xie Shijie, member of the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee, and (Jiang Heting), secretary general of the provincial government, spoke at the meeting.

The provincial government pointed out at the meeting: This year the province's spring-harvested grain and rapeseed are growing very well. Preparations for the spring-sown crops are also fully underway. The tasks are very arduous. There are shortages of chemical fertilizer, oil, and medium and small iron farm implements. It is necessary to concentrate forces to solve these problems. The provincial government called on the province to solve the problem of price reductions for the products of small chemical fertilizer plants and to map out price reduction measures as soon as possible.

At present there is a great shortage of oil. The limited supplies must therefore be used where they are most needed in the preparations for spring farming. Priority in diesel oil supplies must be given to spring farming. Oil used for drainage and irrigation must be used efficiently.

The provincial government reiterated that all levels must make proper arrangements regarding the plans for steel for iron farm implements, and ensure its supply.

XIZANG: WU JINGHUA ATTENDS RALLY ON PARTY STYLE

HK241215 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 17 Mar 86

[Excerpts] On the afternoon of 17 March, the regional CPC Committee held a rally on correcting the party style of the leading organs of the region. The rally mobilized and arranged the work of correcting the party style of the whole region, particularly correcting the party style of the organs of the region and Lhasa City. Some 1,200 party-member cadres of the organs of the region and all places in Lhasa City attended the rally.

Comrade Wu Jinghua, secretary of the regional CPC Committee, presided over the rally. Seated on the rostrum were comrades including Raidi, Doje Cering, Basang, Mao Rubai, Dangzin, and Zhang Shaosong. Comrade Pagbalha Geleg Mangya also was invited to sit on the rostrum. Nonparty leading comrades of the regional People's Congress, regional people's government, and regional CPPCC Committee, and CPPCC Committee members who were in Lhasa also attended the rally by invitation. Comrade Raidi, deputy secretary of the regional CPC Committee, delivered an important speech at the rally. Comrade Dangzin, deputy secretary of the regional CPC Committee, read the 10-article regulations of the Xizang Regional CPC Committee on strengthening party spirit, correcting party style, and strictly observing party discipline. Comrades including Wu Jinghua, Doje Cering, and Zhang Shaosong also spoke at the rally.

Comrade Raidi's speech dealt with three questions: 1) correctly appraising the situation in party style of our region and firmly grasping the main existing problems; 2) correcting party style being an important task confronting the party organizations in our region; 3) the arrangements for and methods of the work of correcting party style.

Comrade Raidi said: Over recent years, through the implementation of the series of important central authorities instructions on Xizang work, party rectification, and the implementation of the spirit of the enlarged meeting of the regional CPC Committee Standing Committee, party style in our region has improved markedly. However, we must clearly see that many problems still exist among some party member cadres in the aspects of ideology and work style. Some individual problems are fairly serious. Some have even committed crimes. Proceeding from the realities of our region, in correcting party style, we must especially stress the following problems:

1. Some party organizations and leading cadres have lacked revolutionary devotion to their work and sense of responsibility. Bureaucratism is serious. They are extremely irresponsible and have neglected their duties. This has caused serious losses to, and waste of, state property, and even endangered people's lives.

2. Individualistic ideology has become aggravated. People have taken advantage of their power to seek personal gain. Some have taken advantage of the functions and powers of their occupations to make things difficult for the masses. Some have indulged in unhealthy trends in the course of permanent residence registration, recruiting workers, enrolling students, and promoting cadres. Some have enjoyed privileges in life contrary to regulations. Some have given dinners and gifts and indulged in extravagance and waste.

3. There are malpractices of extorting and receiving bribes and embezzlement of public funds. Other serious violations of financial and economic discipline have frequently occurred.

4. Some party and government organs and party member cadres have engaged in commerce.

5. Politically, there is liberalism, organization and discipline are slack, individual interests come first, and democratic work style is bad.

Comrade Raidi pointed out: The above-mentioned five problems can be summarized into three main aspects, although the types, means, degrees, and forms of the violations of party discipline, political discipline, and legal discipline are many and varied: Individualistic ideological work style, serious bureaucratic ideological work style, and liberalistic ideological work style.

Bureaucratism and seeking good relations with all and sundry at the expense of principle are the points wherein the crux of the problems of the spreading of unhealthy trends lies and are the main reason for it.

Comrade Raidi said: The above-mentioned five unhealthy trends fully show that when the regional CPC Committee grasps the correction of party style, it does not shoot an arrow without a target and copy indiscriminately the experience of others, but must grasp it. In fact, the unhealthy trends have corrupted some cadres. Some cadres have been involved in evildoing and some cadres are in danger of being enticed into evildoing. The unhealthy trends have impaired the images of the party and government adversely affected the flesh-and-blood ties between the party and the masses, sabotaged national unity, and given certain people with ulterior motives opportunities that can be exploited to their advantage. The unhealthy trends have caused serious losses to economic construction in our region. If they are not corrected as soon as possible, still bigger losses will be caused.

Comrade Raidi said: The correction of the unhealthy trends is the continuation and penetrating development of going further in negating the Cultural Revolution, in eliminating leftist ideological influence, and in straightening out the ideological line. It is the continuation and profound development of the implementation of the spirit of the enlarged meeting of the regional CPC Committee Standing Committee; and is the important condition and guarantee for basing everything on Xizang's realities, doing everything to develop the productive forces, and doing everything for the well-being of the people of Xizang. In such a region of minority nationalities in the border area as Xizang, the correction of party style is of particularly important significance for keeping close ties between the party and the masses, strengthening nationality unity, upholding the unification of our motherland, and enhancing the prestige of our party. Our region is an economically underdeveloped region and its economy and culture have lagged behind our fraternal provinces and regions. Therefore, we must have still better party style and advocate the spirit of struggling hard and wholeheartedly serving the people. We can then use our limited manpower and material and financial resources to cause the masses to be lifted out of poverty and to get rich.

The rally concluded amid the solemn Internationale.

XIZANG LEADERS ADDRESS 'PARTY STYLE' RALLY

HK250222 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 18 Mar 86

[Excerpts] Wu Jinghua, secretary of the regional CPC Committee, delivered an important speech yesterday afternoon at a regional rally on correcting party style.

He said: In correcting party style and realizing a fundamental turn for the better in party style, we must combat left deviations and prevent right deviations. Comrade Wu Jinghua added: Combating left deviations and preventing right deviations has always been our party's guiding ideology and is the summation of our party's experiences in its long struggle. Last year, we held the enlarged meeting of the regional CPC Committee Standing Committee and carried out ideological education on doing more to negate the Cultural Revolution, to eliminate leftist ideological influence, and to straighten out the ideological line. We stressed combating left deviations. At the same time, we called attention to preventing right deviations. Judging from the five big problems which we have discovered still exist in our region's party style, combating left deviations and preventing right deviations is still very important.

Can we call the practices of violating party principles, being extremely irresponsible, causing serious losses to and waste of state property, and even endangering the safety of people's lives, left deviations? Can we call the practices of committing graft and theft, extorting and receiving bribes, earning money by hook or by crook, and doing harm to the state, left deviations? Therefore, in correcting party style we must pay attention to preventing right deviations. Looking at the situation objectively, we must determine our principles. We must continue to eliminate left deviations throughout the region. At the same time, we must pay attention to preventing and combating rightist things.

Comrade Wu Jinghua went on: In correcting party style and realizing a fundamental turn for the better in party style, we must build up a certain momentum, without which we cannot expose or deal with some evil things. We will not launch any movement, because we have suffered a great deal from movements. We must rely on the vitality of our party to attain the specific aim of putting our party on a sound basis. Every Communist Party member must have a strong party spirit and make good use of the sharp ideological weapons of criticism and self-criticism in order to wage a struggle of correcting unhealthy trends. We must resolutely investigate and deal with violations of the law and discipline, particularly big and important cases. Disciplinary action must be taken as appropriate. Those who should be punished in accordance with the law, must be punished according to the law. We warmly encourage nonparty comrades to present their views to the Communist Party and to help us correct the unhealthy trends.

In conclusion, Comrade Wu Jinghua stressed: All faithful and honest Communist Party members must go into action. In particular, party member cadres at and above the county level must consider well what they are prepared to do to restore and correct party style and what they should do. Each comrade must make his own necessary contribution toward restoring and correcting party style and toward accomplishing the tasks put forward by the 12th party congress.

Doje Cering and Dangzin, deputy secretaries of the regional CPC Committee, and Zhang Shaosong, political commissar of Xizang Military District, also spoke at the rally. In his speech, Doje Cering said: Correcting party style and unhealthy trends and eliminating corrupt phenomenon in our party is an important policy decision of the CPC Central Committee. Therefore, each Communist Party member and leading cadres of the party must fully understand and take vigorous action. This is a matter of attitude toward the CPC Central Committee and regional CPC Committee, and also has to do with one's sense of organization.

Doje Cering added: Our region's situation now is very good. However, there are many problems, which are mainly the problems of party style. Unhealthy trends and corrupt phenomenon have now corrupted our economic departments. Judging from the five big problems of party style in our region, as enumerated by Comrade Raidi, unhealthy trends, violations of the law, and even economic crimes in the economic sphere are especially conspicuous. This has drawn our attention.

Comrade Doje Cering said: The problems are serious, but that is not the only issue. It is not ordinary people that are indulging in unhealthy trends; it is the economic management department, economic law enforcement departments, and managing and law enforcement personnel that are indulging in unhealthy trends. We cannot disregard these known violations of discipline and the law, earning money by hook or by crook, and taking advantage of power to seek private ends. Therefore, CPC committees and governments at all levels must pay much attention to and maintain vigilance against the unhealthy trends, violations of law, and crimes in economic spheres. We must by no means pursue bureaucratism and adopt irresponsible attitudes.

In conclusion, Comrade Doje Cering emphasized: All party members and leading party cadres must carry out the spirit of the foolish old man who removed mountains and resolutely and persistently fight this battle well.

In his speech, Comrade Dangzin said: This is a year of down-to-earth implementation. Today, we are holding a rally to mobilize and organize the work of correcting party style throughout the whole region, particularly correcting party style in the region's organs and in Lhasa City. Comrade Dangzin said: Xizang's economic foundation is relatively weak. We have basically relied on state subsidies. If we do not use our money well, we will let the central authorities and the people down and be unworthy of the support given to us by the people of all nationalities throughout the country.

In conclusion, Comrade Dangzin said: Some 60,000 party members and some 2,000 leading cadres at and above the county level throughout our region must always remember the two phrases of "working for" and "serving" the people of Xizang.

Zhang Shaosong, political commissar of Xizang Military District, also spoke at the rally. He declared: The Army must learn from localities. The Army and localities must help, supervise, and promote each other. They must work unceasingly hard to achieve a fundamental turn for the better in the party style of the whole region.

XIZANG RADIO COMMENTARY ON CORRECTING PARTY STYLE

HK241217 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 17 Mar 86

[Station commentary: "Correcting Party Style Has a Bearing on the Overall Situation"]

[Excerpts] The regional CPC Committee held a rally on correcting party style to mobilize and arrange the work of correcting the party style of our region, particularly correcting the party style of the organs of the region and Lhasa City. The regional CPC Committee has proposed that this be a year of down-to-earth implementation and that it is necessary to be subordinate to and to serve economic construction -- the center -- and to do well in grasping three important matters:

1. It is necessary to conduct education in going further in negating the Cultural Revolution, in eliminating leftist ideological influence, and in straightening out the ideological line; and to unify ideological understanding.

2. It is essential to carry out structural reform and to do well in organizational building.

3. It is imperative to correct party style and to realize a fundamental turn for better in party style.

The target of these three important matters is one -- basing everything on Xizang's realities, doing everything to develop the productive forces of Xizang, and doing everything for the well-being of the people of Xizang. Of these three important matters, unifying ideological understanding is the foundation, structural reform is the guarantee for organizational building, and correcting party style is the guarantee for correcting work style.

In the previous period, we conducted education in going further in three respects and unified thinking relatively well. This created a good foundation for structural reform and correcting party style. At present, we are stepping up structural reform. At the same time, we are grasping the correction of party style. The target of structural reform is in line with the target of correcting party style. A turn for the better in party style will speed up structural reform and structural reform will impel a further turn for better in party style. After we have done well in structural reform and correcting party style, a fundamental turn for the better in the general mood of society and high efficiency in social production will surely be brought about and the development of productive forces will be promoted, thus guaranteeing that the people of Xizang will get rich.

However, we must clearly see that many problems at present still exist among some party member cadres in ideology and work style. Some individual problems are fairly serious. These problems mainly show that some party organizations and leading cadres have lacked revolutionary devotion to their work and a sense of responsibility, that bureaucratism is serious, and that they are extremely irresponsible and have neglected their duties. This has caused serious losses to, and waste of, state property, and even endangered people's lives. Although these unhealthy trends have occurred among a small number of people, the influence is very bad. They have corrupted a number of cadres, impaired the party's prestige among the masses, and adversely affected our party's excellent tradition in the work concerning nationalities. They have hindered organs from giving play to their functions and roles and sabotaged the relationship between the party and the masses. At the same time, they have given some people with ulterior motives opportunities that can be exploited to their advantage. They have caused serious losses to our region's economic work.

Leadership organs and leading cadres must take the lead and set an example in correcting party style. We must begin grasping specific cases and resolutely investigate and deal with cases of violation of discipline. We must strengthen ideological education within our party, strenghten party spirit, straighten out discipline, put inner-party life on a sound basis, and, at the same time, strenghten leadership and strictly implement the policies. So long as we penetratingly and persistently grasp this work to the end, we can surely realize a fundamental turn for better in party style on schedule.

BEIJING RALLY ON TRANSFER OF ARMED FORCES DEPARTMENTS

[Text] On 10 March the municipal CPC Committee and government and the Beijing Garrison cosponsored a mobilization rally to study and work out plans for the work of transferring district and county people's armed forces departments to the local organizational system.

After the transfer of district and county armed forces departments, their work personnel will be included in the local establishment, and their status and tasks will remain unchanged. They will be subject to the dual leadership of district or county CPC committees and governments and military organs at higher levels. In order to make the transfer smooth, the municipal CPC Committee and government and the Beijing Garrison recently established a municipal ad hoc leading group for the work, with Jin Jian, deputy secretary of the municipal CPC Committee, as its leader, and Fend Mingwei, vice mayor, and He Shangchun, deputy commander, and Wang Yancheng, deputy political commissar, of the Beijing Garrison as deputy leaders.

At the mobilization rally, Mayor Chen Xitong extended welcome to the cadres of the armed forces departments who will work in the locality on behalf of the municipal CPC Committee and government. He said: The transfer of district and county armed forces departments to the local organizational system is very significant to the strengthening of army and militia building. The municipality, as well as all districts and counties, should put this work high on their agenda, and carry it out conscientiously. All district and county CPC committees and governments should exert their utmost efforts to help solve the practical problems arising in the transfer, and make good arrangements for the cadres of the armed forces departments. He also praised these cadres for their contributions to the building of the two civilizations in the capital, and urged them to carry forward the fine traditions of the people's army continuously after being transferred to work in the locality, and make new contributions to the economic construction and the defense reserve strength of the capital.

Yan Tongmao, deputy commander of the Beijing Military Region and concurrently commander of the garrison, and Li Jinmin, political commissar of the garrison, also spoke. They set forth specific requirements for the transfer and for militia work after the transfer, and pledged to complete the transfer tasks efficiently, with high standards and with the best mental attitude, realizing first-rate achievements; to transfer to the locality good leading bodies which are of one mind and have sound trends and vitality, and with which both the military and the locality are satisfied; and to open up a new situation in the militia and reserve service work of the capital.

Jin Jian, deputy secretary of the municipal CPC Committee, presided over the rally. Attending were Feng Mingwei, vice mayor, and He Shangchun, deputy commander, and Wang Yancheng, deputy political commissar, of the garrison.

HEBEI STARTS TRANSFERRING ARMED FORCES DEPARTMENTS

SK201204 Shijiazhuang Hebei Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 6 Mar 86

[Text] The work of transferring county, city, and district people's armed forces departments to the local organizational system has been started in our province. Recently the leading group in charge of the work of transferring county, city, and district people's armed forces departments to the local organizational system under the provincial people's armed forces department held the first meeting to conscientiously study the relevant documents of the central authorities; to determine the time, methods, and steps for carrying out the work; to study the plans for the work made by the county, city and district people's armed forces departments, to decide on carrying out the work on a trial basis in Pingquan and Huanghua Counties and Shijiazhuang City's (Tangan) District; and then to sum up and study the experience. The work will be comprehensively carried out in April and finished by the end of May.

The meeting called on all prefectural and city military subdistricts and people's armed forces departments to conscientiously study the guidelines of the instructions of the central authorities and the Central Military Commission, to deeply understand the great significance of this structural reform, and to educate the broad masses of cadres, fighters, and workers of the people's armed forces departments to take the whole situation into consideration, to abide by discipline, and to conscientiously implement the decisions of the CPC Central Committee, the State Council and the Central Military Commission. Simultaneously, the meeting called on the people's armed forces departments at all levels to strengthen the leadership over the transfer work so as to ensure a successful accomplishment of the work.

SHANXI 'GOOD SONS AND DAUGHTERS' DELIVER REPORTS

HK250211 Taiyuan Shanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Excerpts] The Shanxi provincial "good sons and daughters are everywhere" report group held its first report meeting in Taiyuan on 24 March. The report group is composed of outstanding representatives of educated young people from Beijing and Tianjin who have been working in Shanxi for more than 10 years. Leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee and government Li Ligong, Wang Jiangong, Bai Qingcai, Zhang Weiqing, and Guo Yuhuai attended the meeting.

Provincial CPC Committee Deputy Secretary Wang Jiangong presided. (Wu Zhengguo), deputy secretary general of the provincial CPC Committee and leader of the report group, spoke on the reports delivered in Beijing by some members of the group.

Comrade Li Ligong spoke after five members of the group had delivered reports. He said: The more than 15,000 educated young people from Beijing and Tianjin who have been working in Shanxi for many years have devoted great efforts in the spirit of pride as good sons and daughters. They have sweated with the people of the province to build up Shanxi and made major contributions in this endeavor. The provincial CPC Committee and government call on the people of the province, especially the young people, to learn from the comrades of this report group.

CNA VIEWS REASONS FOR CONVENING SIXTH NPC

OW270407 Taipei CNA in English 0245 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] Taipei, March 26 (CNA) -- The Chinese Communist Party has recently decided to convene the fourth meeting of the Sixth "People's Congress" after it encountered a series of setbacks in carrying on with its reform programs, improving its party discipline and easing conflicts between factions, an expert in mainland Chinese affairs said in Taipei Tuesday. The expert, who asked not to be identified, said the participants in this meeting, which opened in Peiping Tuesday afternoon, are expected to pass the so-called "Seventh Five-Year Plan", a very conservative program worked out by the Peiping regime after it discovered many defects and loopholes in its previous economic reform programs. Although Peiping has recently launched another propaganda campaign aimed at covering its mistakes and boasting of its economic achievements over the past few years, most political observers here believe that Peiping will never succeed in easing dissatification among the Chinese people who have been suffering from many side-effects of the economic reforms, such as rising commodity prices, he said. The expert also said that the Chinese Communist Party's discipline has worsened to a level that it has never experienced over the past 30 years. These problems derive from a wrong system not being capable of correction simply by eliminating a group of corrupt officials, he said in referring to a new wave of party rectification campaigns launched by Peiping. He predicted that disputes between pragmatists and conservatives in mainland China will continue or even become worse in the future, judging from the recent fight between leaders of the two groups -- Teng Hsiao-ping and Chen Yun -- over the leadership in the party.

EDITORIAL STUDIES ADB MEMBERSHIP NAME ISSUE

OW250643 Taipei CHINA POST in English 20 Mar 86 p 4

[Editorial: "No Name Change in Asian Development Bank"]

[Text] Foreign Minister Chu Fu-sung's statement Saturday that the Republic of China "should not and cannot" return to governmental world organizations by changing its name should be carefully noted by all concerned. Minister Chu made the above statement to the Legislative Yuan last weekend in answer to a question whether the ROC could accept the arrangement of the Asian Development Bank (ADB) and return to the other world organizations under the ADB formula. He also told the legislators that "We should not sacrifice our years of struggling for a short-sighted flexible policy." Minister Chu's opinion is quite right and there should not be any argument to the contrary. Otherwise, we would fall into the Chinese Communist trap of treating the Republic of China as a local government, thus seriously violating our sovereignty and integrity.

In this connection, we should warn the United States not to accept the secret agreement reached by the ADB authorities with the Peking regime. The U.S. Congress approved an amendment to the Appropriation Bill last year stating that if the Republic of China should be discriminated against by the ADB in its membership, the United States is required to withdraw from the ADB and cease to contribute to its funds. So far, the United States has not stated its position on the recent development in the ADB concerning the latter's five-point secret agreement with the Peking regime. It should lose no time in making its position known to the ADB authorities concerning the sacred status of the Republic of China in the ADB, which does not permit any tampering or change without its full agreement. The United States is also obliged by the Taiwan Relations Act (TRA) to protect the ROC's position in international financial institutions. Since the Reagan administration has paid so much lip service to its determination to observe the TRA, it is high time to do so through actual deeds. Meanwhile, we should not repeat the same mistake of accepting the Olympic formula in taking part in international sports events. The compromise was a great mistake and should not be done again.

HSIN WAN PAO COMMENTS ON GULF OF SIDRA INCIDENT

HK261304 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 26 Mar 86 p 1

["New Talk" column: "U.S. Motives in Its Second Armed Action Against Libya"]

[Text] The battle between the United States and Libya in the Gulf of Sidra has been going on for 2 days now. The action should be halted.

Let us look at these two countries: The United States has a population exceeding 200 million, while Libya has only 2 million. On one side is a Western superpower with great economic strength; on the other is an African nation covered by desert and with economy depending solely on oil. However, the two have opened fire dspite the sharp impalance in power. Moreover, this is the second conflict in recent years. Naturally there is something wrong in this.

The direct dispute is whether the Gulf of Sidra can be considered high sea. The Libyan strongman Al-Qadhdhafi says that the south of the 32 degrees north latitude in the Gulf of Sidra belong to Libya, and marks this point as Libya's "line of death." Whosoever croses it will be severely dealt with.

The United States asserts that all the waters of the Gulf of Sidra are high sea, and should U.S. warships be attacked on the high seas, they will counterattack.

The Gulf of Sidra is not the only disputed body of water in the world, so why should war have broken out in this place alone? The causes should be looked for elsewhere.

Plane and ship hijackings took place along the Mediterranean coast one after other at the end of 1985, and were said to be related to Libya. The United States was ready to take military action. However, taking various reactions into consideration, the action was temporarily put off and a blockade was imposed instead, with few nations following suit.

The United States refrained from armed action 3 months ago, but it has now sent three of its aircraft carriers along with several dozen warships to Libya's gate, provoking a fight. How did this change come about?

As is universally known, Libya is closely tied to the Soviet Union. The Geneva summit between U.S. Presdient Reagan and the Soviet leader Gorbachev just concluded in November 1985, and it was arranged that reciprocal visits of the two parties would take place in 1986. The atmosphere then was rather harmonious. Therefore, even if there was friction betwen the United States and Libya, the former would not take rash action.

Now the gap between the United States and the Soviet Union on nuclear disarmament has widened, and the U.S.-Soviet summit might hit the rocks. The United States has fewer misgivings in affecting U.S.-Soviet relations, and the armed action in Libya might serve as an antagonistic posture toward the Soviet Union.

Another reason may be the internal change in Israel. Since Labor's Shimon Peres took office, the voice for peace of the Israelis has grown stronger. The socialists are in power in those countries on the north Mediterranean coast such as Greece, Italy, and Spain. The United States knows very well that the governments of these south wing NATO countries do not wish to see danger on the Mediterranean coast; however, it has purposely made waves in the Mediterranean by means of the Sidra incident.

The United States is clearly assuming a posture such that one has to take into consideration the U.S. attitude toward the situation on the Mediterranean coast. Now that the United States has already made its showdown, the one who refuses to acknowledge the "line of death" has crossed it, and the one who proclaims resolutely safeguarding the "line of death" has counterattacked, it does not make any sense for the conflict to go on. This armed action of a big power like the United States will inevitably draw direct or indirect opposition and attacks from all sides.

PRC'S QIAN QICHEN ON PEACE, DISARMAMENT

HK260912 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 11, 17 Mar 86 pp 6, 7

[Article by Yang Chaoling and Feng Lidong: "Peace, Disarmament, and Opposition to Hegemonism -- Qian Qichen, Vice Foreign Minister, Talks to LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION Reporters"]

[Text] The Chinese people's gathering to uphold world peace will be held in Beijing on 21 March. Chinese party and government leaders will be present and deliver important speeches on the occasion. The event will bring about a climax in China's peace year activities. On the eve of the gathering, we had an interview with Qian Qichen, vice foreign minister and vice chairman of China's organizing committee for the International Year of Peace who spoke on peace, disarmament, and opposition to hegemonism. The following is what he said during the interview.

Peace Must Be Striven for by Making Joint Efforts

Last year, on 24 October, at the meeting marking the 40th UN founding anniversary, the Declaration on the International Year of Peace was solemnly passed and 1986 was designated International Peace Year. This is very meaningful. This is the first time since its founding in 1945 that the United Nations has organized such an activity. Although there has never been an end to unrest over the past 40 years, there has been no world war either. People have enjoyed 40 years of peace. In the face of changes on the international scene, people ask: Will peace continue to be upheld at the end of this century, in the next 40 years, and in the next century? The UN proposal for organizing an international peace year at this point indeed reflects the common aspiration of the world's peoples.

The International Peace Year is not an exclusively non-governmental activity. The United Nations also encourages active participation on the part of its member governments. The scale and influence of this activity will be greater than those of the activities organized by the United Nations in past years, such as the international Youth Year, the International Disabled People's Year, the World Forest year, and so on.

The Chinese Government attaches great importance to this activity. It has formed an organizing committee for the International Peace Year. The committee has more than 40 members. They are either responsible persons of government departments and mass organizations or celebrities from various circles. They will organize various forms of large-scale activities. It is our belief that through these activities, we will be able to mobilize the world's peoples into vigorous action and enable them to strengthen unity, to make joint efforts, and, by all means, to call on the superpowers to stop escalating the arms race and their expansion and interference in other countries' internal affairs. Only by doing this can world peace be upheld.

The United Nations Should Play an Even More Important Role

The founding of the United Nations was a reflection of the world peoples' common desire for prolonged peace in the postwar years. The purpose of the "UN Charter" is to uphold international peace and security, to stop aggression, to develop friendly relations, and to promote international cooperation. Thus, it contains the principles of equal sovereignty rights, noninterference in other countries' internal affairs, abstention from the use of force to threaten or invade other countries' territories or to violate their independence, and the settlement of international disputes by peaceful means. In spite of its past mistakes and its present weaknesses and shortcomings, it is today's most representative, most influential, and largest international organization.

It is also an international arena where the Third World wages its diplomatic struggle and expresses its views. Thus, it plays a irreplaceable role in reflecting public opinion, the will of the world's peoples, and social development trends. Some resolutions adopted by the United Nations in recent years, such as those on the Cambodian issue, the Afghan issue, the Middle East issue, the South African issue, and the Central American issue, can rather adequately reflect the will of the peoples of various countries and they are fair and reasonable. Thus, the superpowers have raised objections to them. In upholding world peace, China hopes that the United Nations, which has 159 members, will play an increasingly important role.

Prevent Nuclear Wars and Bring About Nuclear Disarmament

Today, everybody discusses peace. How can peace be upheld? Looking around, one finds that at present, only the two superpowers, which have vast quantities of nuclear arms at their disposal, have the ability to start and fight nuclear wars. This is neither subjective conjecture nor deliberate exaggeration. This is an objective, universally acknowledged fact. With their nuclear arms, they can destroy the world more than once. Even if they reduce their stocks of nuclear arms by half, they still have the ability to destroy the world and mankind. Even the Soviet Union and the United States admit this. It is written in the joint communique issued at the U.S.-Soviet Geneva summit that: "Both sides realize that any conflicts between the Soviet Union and the United States can produce disastrous consequences."

Thus, in October of 1964, when we tested our first A-bomb, we told the world that we advocated the total destruction of all nuclear arms and that we undertook not to use nuclear arms first whatever the time or circumstance. We have always suggested that the United States and the Soviet Union should first stop testing, producing, and updating their nuclear arms and then significantly reduce their stocks of nuclear arms in order to to create conditions for a broadly represented international conference attended by all nuclear powers.

This year, on 15 January, the Soviet leader Gorbachev proposed the destruction of all nuclear arms in 15 years in three stages. In his reply letter dated 24 February, President Reagan proposed the removal of all medium-range guided missiles in 3 years. It seems that both sides agree on reducing nuclear arms and claims the destruction of all nuclear arms as their ultimate goal. Of course, this is something positive. However, by analyzing their claims and proposals carefully, one will discover great differences between them. For example, the conditions they proposed differ and their views also differ on how nuclear arms should be counted and on the areas and regions involved. We welcome serious talks between the United States and the Soviet Union and hope that they can reach an agreement on major reductions in their nuclear arms because, by doing this, they can uphold world peace without infringing on the interests of other countries.

Support the Struggle by Third World Countries and Their People

Very often, Third World countries are directly invaded by foreign countries. Sometimes, they are victims of power politics and the superpowers contend for supremacy on their soil and at their expense. We oppose imperialism, colonialism, and racism and support the Third World countries' just fight for national liberation and independence. We should be able to see that superpower intervention and interference in others' internal affairs has made many countries suffering from conflicts, unrest, and economic difficulties. The "hot spots" in some parts of the world constitute a serious threat to peace and stability. Thus, in order to uphold world peace, it is necessary to oppose hegemonism and power politics. No one in this world supports hegemonism and power politics, whoever their pursuers may be.

In upholding peace, the peace movements initiated by the world's peoples constitute a force which must be given serious attention. Although these movements indicate different positions and tendencies, they generally reflect people's fundamental desires for peace. "Small streams converge to form mighty torrents." The peace organizations formed by the world's peoples can contribute to upholding world peace. We hope that these peace organizations will contribute to upholding world peace by making joint efforts.

China Is a Peace-Upholding Force

The Chinese people love peace and China needs it most urgently. At present, the whole country is completely preoccupied with the magnificient cause of socialist modernization. Prolonged international peace is an indispensable condition for its success.

In order to defend itself, China has conducted a limited number of nuclear tests. However, it announced before all others that it would not be the first to use nuclear arms and it has promised not to use nuclear arms against non-nuclear countries and regions. We advocate the total destruction of all nuclear arms. Our proposals are winning support from more and more countries and peoples.

China advocates disarmament and has taken a concrete step toward this goal. We have reduced the size of our Army by 1 million officers and men. Many enterprises in China's ordnanceindustry have switched to the production of civilian products and it has opened many of its military airfields and ports to civilian aircraft and civilian vessels. In addition, its Army is vigorously training people to do both army and civilian work. All this is China's concrete contribution to world peace.

All things China has done to uphold world peace are not intended to be interim measures. They are based on the fundamental interests of the Chinese people and other peoples in the world and are aimed at China's socialist modernization and world peace and stability. China, whose population is about one-quarter of the world's total population, is a factor for peace and a peace-upholding force. Growth in China's strength implies the growth of a factor for peace. This can only be favorable for peace. The more vigorous China's development is, the stronger the peace-upholding forces will be. In 1974, on behalf of China, Comrade Deng Xiaoping announced at the United Nations that China would never seek hegemony nor become a superpower. This still remains China 's national policy.

PRC TV COMMENTARY ON U.S.-LIBYAN CONFLICT

HK271523 Beijing Domestic Television Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Announcer-read "station commentary" from the "News Hookup" program]

[Text] Over the past few months, the United States has assembled in the waters near Libya a massive naval force which is comprised of 3 aircraft carriers, more than 40 other vessels, and more than 200 planes. This year this naval force has conducted five military maneuvers in succession. This kind of unusual assembling of military forces and this kind of maneuvers for putting on a show of force caused a serious escalation of the tense situation in this region and finally brought about a U.S.-Libyan armed clash. It is common knowledge that in the field of international relations, it is very dangerous to make a show of force for a specific purpose. The traumas left over by a series of local wars since the close of the Second World War are still fresh in the memory of the people. Any kind of new military clash will bring unstable factors to this turbulent world. We hope that the two parties in the clash will break away from military contacts as quickly as possible so as to eliminate the shadow caused by this incident on the year of world peace.

PRC JOURNAL ON SOVIET MILITARY AID TO VIETNAM

HK270940 Beijing SHIJIE ZHISHI in Chinese No 5, 1 Mar 86 p 13

["International Jottings" by Yang Xuechun "A Look at Le Duan's Visit to Moscow"]

[Text] In January, Le Duan went to Moscow again, when it was extremely cold.

Since Vietnam invaded Cambodia in 1978, it has been a common occurrence for Le Duan and other influential Vietnamese figures to appear in Moscow. They visit Moscow under all sorts of pretexts, such as "going on vacation" attending a "big family meeting," or paying condolences. It was reported that Le Duan's last visit was for "medical treatment." Although their pretexts are different, they have one point in common: They go there empty-handed and return fully loaded. Just consider, which of the weapons they use to slaughter the Cambodian people, including tanks, artillery, and toxic chemicals, is not Soviet made?

With regard to its invasion of Cambodia, the Le Duan clique has found not everything has turned out as it wished. Seven years ago, it thought that it could gobble up Cambodia in one gulp. However, it has found it increasingly difficult to cope with the situation in the war and to realize its aim. Now it is launching the eighth dry-season offensive. The Le Duan clique has claimed that it will concentrate its forces for large-scale devastating attacks from the Cambodian-Thai border and in the Cambodian interior. To launch such large-scale attacks, there must be a constant supply of weapons, equipment, and fuel, and military expenditure must be increased. At this critical moment, as Le Duan has been to Moscow for medical treatment, he will surely take this opportunity to bring something back.

In fact, the Le Duan clique has not been in economic difficulties for just a day or two. Acting as the "world's third military power" in an attempt to dominate Southeast Asia, it now maintains an overloaded military apparatus and has dispatched 200,000 troops to invade its neighbors. As a result, its military expenditure accounts for over one-half of the country's financial expenditure. As construction is impossible and it wants to make itself look imposing in its "offensives," it cannot help but ask others for money. Vietnam is notorious for its unwillingness to repay its debts. Since 1983, some Western countries and international monetary organizations have stopped their aid and loans to Vietnam. Its economic difficulties have aggravated its political contradictions. As a result, the sixth Vietnamese party congress, which was originally scheduled for the end of 1985, has now been postponed until the end of 1986; and its parliamentary elections, which were originally arrange for 1986, have now been put off until 1987.

The most urgent problem for Vietnam is that of what Vietnam will rely on in its current dry-season offensive. The simplest thing to do is to ask big brother for help: Do you not support our invasion of Cambodia? Have we not let you use Cam Ranh Bay? You will have no objection to providing us with some weapons, money, and materials!

At the time, it was Soviet support that gave the Le Duan clique the courage to invade Cambodia. The hegemony over Southeast Asia Vietnam is seeking is part of the global hegemony the Soviet Union is attempting to establish. Therefore, the Soviet Union deems it inappropriate to turn down Vietnam's requests.

Indeed, what the Soviet Union has provided is by no means a small amount. Since Vietnam's invasion of Cambodia in 1978 alone, the Soviet Union has provided military aid ranging from $1 billion to $2 billion a year and economic aid totaling $500 million. However, dispatched without just cause, the Vietnamese troops have fallen deep into the mire and drained both human and financial resources. Still, Vietnam refuses to turn back, making for itself a bottomless pit that can never be filled. It requests the Soviet Union to continue providing supplies, but the Soviet Union is in difficulty, rather than being stingy. As everyone is aware, the main targets of the Soviet 11th 5-Year Plan, and in particular the targets for increases in agricultural production, have not been fulfilled. In addition, as it has to contend for hegemony with the other superpower, it has no choice but to continue increasing its military expenditure. Hanoi wants more, but will the Soviet Union be able to provide as much as Hanoi wishes? Hence the contradictions.

It was reported that the Soviet Union has imposed harsher terms regarding the aid it provides for Vietnam. In particular, it has provided less noncompensatory economic aid. Soviet economic aid for Vietnam is now provided in the form of technology and equipment; Vietnam will repay it with the products it produces by means of the technology and equipment the Soviet Union has provided. With regard to military aid, the Soviet Union has sent more and more advisers to exercise supervision over the use of the weapons.

But the Le Duan clique is quite experienced in dealing with Soviet demands for the repayment of loans. For example, its total debt to the Soviet Union accounts for 70 percent of its foreign debts. It has refused to pay, and the Soviet Union has no way of making it pay. Vietnam is well aware of "how matters stand." So long as the Soviet Union persists in seeking global hegemony and refuses to remove "one of the three obstacles" to Sino-Soviet talks, Vietnam always has "reasons" to ask Moscow for money and goods!

Moscow may bring Le Duan back to health, but can it cure him of his "mental disease"?

U.S. ANNOUNCES END TO GULF OF SIDRA OPERATION

OW271948 Beijing XINHUA in English 1941 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] Washington, March 27 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. Defense Department announced today that U.S. naval operations in the Gulf of Sidra ended this morning, but the three aircraft carriers operating there will remain nearby in the central Mediterranean Sea for several days. The Pentagon said the three U.S. carriers were steaming north out of the Gulf of Sidra at 10 a.m. and all the ships there were ordered out of the Tripoli flight information region by 11:30 a.m. However, the Pentagon said the 30-ship task force with three carriers among them will remain in the Mediterranean north of Libya at least through the middle of next week.

The U.S. announced last Saturday that its navy forces would start exercises on Sunday in the Gulf of Sidra, an area Libya claims as its territory but the U.S. considers international waters. Early this week U.S. planes sank three Libyan patrol boats, damaged another and twice hit a Libyan missile site after Libya launched Soviet-made missiles at the U.S. planes but failed to hit the targets.

The military confrontation has drawn world concern. Libya has threatened to retaliate against the U.S. with "death squads." The Soviet Union has also condemned the U.S. for the action.

Meanwhile, U.S. President Ronald Reagan sent a message to the commander-in-chief of the U.S. 6th Fleet in the Mediterranean this morning to praise the servicemen for their "bravery and tireless response to Libyan threats."

PRC, U.S. COOPERATE IN AIRCRAFT PRODUCTION

OW271851 Beijing XINHUA in English 1844 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] Shanghai, March 27 (XINHUA) -- Everything is now ready for China and the United States to begin jointly building a MD-82 plane here on April 1, according to Shanghai aviation industry company today. The plane, the first covered by a Sino-U.S. agreement on joint production of such planes, should have been built in the autumn of 1987 at the Shanghai aircraft factory. [as received]

The agreement, which came into effect last April, permits the Shanghai company to produce MD-82 planes by 1991, with parts purchased from the McDonnell Douglas Company. All the planes will be sold to the Civil Aviation Administration of China.

China has sent 140 technicians in the past year to the United States for training. Another 800 have been trained in China with help of American experts.

CHINESE ART EXHIBITION OPENS IN NEW YORK

OW271130 Beijing XINHUA in English 1100 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Excerpts] New York, March 26 (XINHUA) -- An art exhibition from Shanghai University opened today at the City University of New York to a highly curious and enthusiastic audience.

Li Tianxiang, president of the College of Fine Arts at Shanghai University, told XINHUA that "the Chinese traditional art is not so familiar in the United States and some Americans underestimate the paintings by Chinese painters. This exhibition will contribute to a better U.S. understanding of Chinese artworks, artistry and artistical viewpoint."

PRC-JAPAN CULTURAL ASSOCIATION ANNIVERSARY MARKED

OW271603 Beijing XINHUA in English 1554 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] Tokyo, March 27 (XINHUA) -- The 30th anniversary of the founding of the Japan-China Cultural Exchange Association was commemorated here today with more than 400 representatives from all walks of life in Japan hoping for more frequent exchanges between the two countries. During a dinner held on the occasion, Yasush Inofe, president of the association, said that his organization would continue to make efforts for the cultural exchange to further strengthen the friendship between the two countries. Present at the dinner were Zhang Wenjin, president of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries, and Wu Zuoren, vice chairman of the China Federation of Literary and Art Circles. Chinese Ambassador Zhang Shu was also present.

PRC-JAPAN JOINT VENTURES INCREASE IN 1985

OW261843 Beijing XINHUA in English 1838 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Tokyo, March 26 (XINHUA) -- Japan and China signed 81 new contracts for joint ventures in 1985. The new contracts bring to 138 the number of joint ventures between the two countries during the past six years, according to the 1985 survey of Japan-China trade released today by the Japan Association for the Promotion of International Trade. The Japan-China cooperatively-run enterprises are established under the 1979 PRC law on joint ventures using Chinese and foreign investment. Most of the signed contracts are long-term ones dealing mainly with manufacturing industries.

JAPIT TO PROMOTE CHINESE EXPORTS IN JAPAN

OW271854 Beijing XINHUA in English 1846 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] Tokyo, March 27 (XINHUA) -- The Japan Association for the Production of International Trade (JAPIT) decided yesterday to place special emphasis on promoting imports from and technology transfer to China. The decision is incorporated in JAPIT's policies and plans passed at the organization's thirty-third conference which began on March 25. JAPIT said that according to the principles established by Japanese and Chinese Governments, it will make efforts to strengthen friendly relations and economic cooperation between the two countries by balancing Sino-Japanese trade. JAPIT, with 800 Sino-Japanese trade members, also pledged financial cooperation with China and promised help in solving the key problems of transportation in Sino-Japanese trade.

NEW ZEALAND'S PRIME MINISTER CONTINUES VISIT

Zhao at Lange's Return Banquet

OW271442 Beijing XINHUA in English 1430 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 27 (XINHUA) -- New Zealand Prime Minister David Lange today described his talks with Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang as "most useful", adding that they served to confirm that we share many common views. He said, "In particular we are both conscious of the continuing threats to world security posed by events in Kampuchea, in Afghanistan and the Middle East."

Lange made these remarks at a return banquet he gave here tonight. Among the guests at the banquet were Premier Zhao Ziyang and State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian.

Lange said, "We are both aware of the pivotal relationship between economic growth and global political stability, and we share a commitment to play a role within the global community to work for the joint objectives of peace and development."

"I hope we have been able to contribute something to further understanding between us," he said. He noted that New Zealand is ready to develop its trade and economic cooperation with some of China's provinces, cities and autonomous regions.

Zhao Ziyang said that Prime Minister Lange's current visit to China was a complete success. He said that both China and New Zealand are factors making for peace in the Asia-Pacific region and the world as a whole.

"Though with different systems," he said, "we both adhere to the five principles of peaceful coexistence and take economic development and higher living standards for our respective peoples as our primary task." The Chinese Government attaches importance to further developing Sino-New Zealand relations, he said. He also expressed the belief that through joint efforts bilateral relations will surely reach a new height.

This morning, Lange, accompanied by Minister of Textile Industry Wu Wenying, laid a wreath before the Monument to the People's Heroes at Tiananmen Square.

Lange: Deng 'Well and Forceful'

HK280338 Hong Kong AFP in English 0326 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 28 (AFP) -- Top Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping and New Zealand Prime Minister David Lange chatted about smoking and health here Friday, with Mr. Deng saying there were good as well as bad points to the habit. "There is a Chinese scholar who recently published a special article on smoking," said Mr. Deng, 81, as he lit up one of his "Panda" brand cigarettes. "He said there are some bad points to smoking but there are ten good points," Mr. Deng continued.

Mr. Lange said there were some in the West who said that Mrs. Deng's health was not very good but he was pleased to see that this was not true, that the Chinese leader was in fact well and forceful. He also joked that it was easier to quit smoking if one smoked "Panda."

Mr. Deng said he had not had a cold in more than ten years and attributed his good health to swimming in the summer and cold baths in the winter.

Mr. Lange was to meet with Chinese Communist Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang later Friday and hold a press conference in the afternoon. He is to end his week-long official visit to China tomorrow, leaving for the Philippines via Hong Kong.

Chinese Communist Party Secretary General Hu Yaobang later presented New Zealand Prime Minister David Lange with a large framed embroidery of a Maori House Friday as the two leaders chatted about Mr Hu's visit to New Zealand last year.

Mr Lange said Mr Hu's New Zealand visit had been of "great significance," adding that the year following the visit had been especially important for the Communist Party chief's younger colleague, Hu Qili, who also took part in the trip.

The younger Mr Hu was among a handful of leaders promoted to the powerful Politburo at a watershed Communist Party conference last October.

Hy Yaobang replied that Hu Qili was only one of many young leaders to be promoted during the conference, which saw many older leaders relinquish their seats on the larger Central Committee to younger cadres.

Deng Xiaoping Receives Lange

OW280908 Beijing XINHUA in English 0858 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 28 (XINHUA) -- The Seventh Five-Year Plan which began this year will be crucial to China's stability and progress for several decades, senior Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping said here today. He told visiting New Zealand Premier David Lange that China's success depended on two important conditions -- the continued pursuit of the country's present policies and the maintenance of world peace. China had achieved remarkable results over the past five years, he said. But this was only the beginning of a long march.

Deng, chairman of the Chinese Communist Party Central Advisory Commission, met Lange at the Great Hall of the People.

The Chinese leader said that during the next five years, comprehensive economic reforms would involve politics, education, science, technology and other areas. The success of these reforms would lay a foundation for continued stability for several decades to come. National construction defended on a peaceful environment, so China adhered to the pursuit of an independent foreign policy, aimed at maintaining world peace. China's progress would benefit peace, and the country would become an important force for preventing world conflict.

Lange congratulated China's achievements over the past few years, and said that relations between New Zealand and China had made great progress. He hoped their countries would expand their co-operation in the fields of trade and livestock farming.

Deng said that relations between the two countries were good, and he invited Lange to visit China often.

Present at the meeting were State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian, and Textile Minister Wu Wenying.

Lange said scientists in his country is interested in involving cooperation with China, hoping that scientific and technical departments at the two countries could enhance contacts. [paragraph as received]

Guizhou Governor Fetes Lange

HK280710 Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Excerpt] Yesterday [24 March] evening, provincial Governor Wang Chaowen gave a banquet at the (Huaxi) guesthouse in honor of New Zealand Prime Minister David Lange, his wife and entourage.

Wang Chaowen proposed a toast at the banquet. On behalf of the Guizhou Provincial Government and the 30 million people of various nationalities in Guizhou, Wang Chaowen first extended the warmest welcome to His Excellency the Prime Minister, his wife, and all the distinguished New Zealand guests. He said: The province's Dushan pasture grass cultivation farm, which was built with the assistance of New Zealand specialists, is now in good shape. This joint venture has not only promoted technological cooperation, but has also deepened understanding, promoted technological cooperation, and contributed to the continuous development of the friendship between the people of the two countries. Prime Minister Lange's visit to our province will push the friendly relations and cooperation between the New Zealand and our province to a new level.

Prime Minister Lange replied to the toast. He said: I am very glad to be the first prime minister of a foreign country to visit Guizhou. We are very grateful to you for this. Your provincial government has attached great importance to and supported economic development in the province. A New Zealand company signed a contract with your province in 1984 on building a pasture grass cultivation farm in Dushan, southeastern Guizhou. This farm has been doing well. We hope that Guizhou will benefit from the farm for a long time.

In conclusion Prime Minister Lange proposed a toast to continuous economic prosperity in Guizhou, and to the lasting friendship and cooperation between the peoples of the PRC and New Zealand.

Attending the banquet were Wu Wenying, head of the Chinese escort group and textile industry minister; Zhang Longhai, Chinese ambassador to New Zealand; Zhang Yuqin and Xu Caidong, Guizhou provincial vice governors; (Wang Shouting), mayor of Guiyang City: (Liu Huide), secretary general of the provincial government; (An Ruitong), director of the provincial foreign affairs office; and responsible persons of relevant departments of the province and Guiyang City.

Rolleston, a New Zealand specialist working at the Dushan pasture grass cultivation farm, and (Heng Guangxia), the farm manager, were invited to attend the banquet.

AUSTRALIA HAILS PRC DECISION ON NUCLEAR TESTS

[Text] Canberra, March 27 (XINHUA) -- Australian Foreign Minister Bill Hayden today expressed his appreciation of Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang's announcement that China would no longer conduct nuclear tests in the atmosphere. Zhao made the pledge on March 21 at a rally in Beijing to mark the international year of peace.

Hayden said in a statement here that China had not conducted nuclear test in the atmosphere since 1980, but the country had not officially stated its intention to refrain from atmospheric tests before.

HUANG HUA REAFFIRMS SUPPORT FOR DK GOVERNMENT

OW271606 Beijing XINHUA in English 1600 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 27 (XINHUA) -- A high-ranking Chinese official said here today that China will support Democratic Kampuchea in its struggle against Vietnamese aggression. Huang Hua, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the Chinese National People's Congress, made this statement when he met the visiting Thai sports delegation in the Great Hall of the People here this afternoon.

The five-member Thai delegation is led by Chaisiri Rungkanchnaset, [name as received] minister attached to the prime minister's office.

Referring to the Kampuchean situation, Huang Hua said that Vietnamese aggression against Kampuchea was backed by a superpower but the resistance forces led by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea are growing steadily in strength and operating ever deeper in Kampuchea's heartland.

Facts showed that the Vietnamese authorities had not the slightest sincerity for the solution of the Kampuchean issue politically, Huang Hua pointed out, adding that under these circumstances, "There is need for us, together with all the justice-upholding countries the world over, to continue our firm support for the Kampuchean people's fight against Vietnamese aggression and support Thailand's struggle for safeguarding its territorial integrity and sovereignty."

Present at the meething were Li Menghau, minister of the Chinese State Physical Culture and Sports Commission, and the Thai ambassador to China Orachun Tanaphong. The Thai guests will leave here Friday for a tour of south China.

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS SRV'S ATTACK ON CGDK PROPOSAL

HK280900 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese 28 Mar 86 p 6

[Commentator's article: "An Outrageous Attitude"]

[Text] After the 8-point proposal of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea [CGDK] on a political solution of the Cambodia issue was announced, it was universally hailed and praised by the allies of Cambodia and the international community. It was pointed out that this proposal was unusually reasonable and was a good one that contributed to the solution of the Cambodia issue.

But the Vietnamese regime could not wait to issue an announcement. It flatly turned down Democratic Kampuchea's proposal and set the propaganda machine to work attacking this proposal as "a farce" aimed at "vilifying Vietnam" and "checking the trend toward dialogue quickly developing in Southeast Asia." It claimed that Vietnam could only recognize the Heng Samrin regime as "the only legitimate, real representative" and would not talk to CGDK. It again harped on unreasonable prerequisites for the withdrawal of troops from Cambodia and called for an end to so-called "foreign intervention in the internal affairs of Cambodia," and so forth. Obviously, the Hanoi authorities are still obstinately sticking to their stand, assuming an outrageous attitude, and acting very arrogantly.

The Vietnamese regime's haste in closing the door on negotiations and its willful attack on Democratic Kampuchea's proposal can only point to its apprehension and disturbed state of mind, because reason is not on its side. It also shows its complete lack of sincerity in seeking a political solution of the Cambodia issue. Greeting the reasonable and solemn proposal advanced by the CGDK with taunts and jeers is in itself a "farce."

A political solution of the Cambodia issue means ending Vietnam's invasion of Cambodia through negotiations and allowing the restoration of peace in Cambodia and its independence. Of course, the CGDK and the Vietnamese regime are the two parties directly involved. Talks or dialogue should first begin between the two sides. Moreover, the main problem of Vietnam's withdrawal of troops from Cambodia must be discussed first. Now Democratic Kampuchea has put forth a clear-cut proposal for the CGDK to hold talks with the Vietnamese Government. This is both reasonable and understandable. How can this be "checking the trend toward dialogue in Southeast Asia?" If such a reasonable proposal is considered as something checking the trend toward dialogue, then what kind of "a trend toward dialogue" do the Vietnamese authorities want? To be blunt, what the Vietnamese authorities want is not "dialogue" aimed at a fair and reasonable solution of a problem. Instead, they want dialogue to deceive public opinion, split up the CGDK, and wreck the unity of the international forces that are helping Cambodia and its resistance against Vietnam, thus standing to gain and putting their permanent occupation of Cambodia on a legitimate basis.

The Vietnamese regime claimed that it could only recognize the Heng Samrin regime as the "only legitimate real representative." Moreover, obsessed with this, it has again and again tried to exclude the patriotic forces of Democratic Kampuchea and break up the coalition government of the three Democratic Kampuchean parties -- in an attempt to bring things under the control of the Heng Samrin government. This is both absurd and ridiculous. It is common knowledge that the Heng Samrin government was set up under the bayonets of the Vietnamese aggressor troops. It has never been accepted by the people of Cambodia. Nor has it been recognized by the international community. It has basically no legal status. The CGDK suggested treating it as a political force in solving the Cambodia issue. This is a concession prompted by a lofty national spirit. This shows the generosity and sincerity of the CGDK.

Now, the Vietnamese regime still wants to impose the Heng Samrin group on the people of Cambodia. How can this work? It clearly indicates that the Vietnamese regime's aim in trotting out this group is to make it a stumbling block to bringing about a political solution of the Cambodia issue. As to the claim about "foreign intervention in the internal affairs of Cambodia," what is foreign is none other than the Vietnamese regime itself.

What is worth pointing out is that the Vietnamese regime displays such arrogance -- ignoring the proposal of Democratic Kampuchea, obstinately sticking to its stand in occupying Cambodia and refusing to withdraw its troops from Cambodia -- because it has the encouragement and support of a superpower. At the same time the Hanoi regime outrageously turned down Democratic Kampuchea's proposal the Soviet Union's PRAVDA came out attacking Democratic Kampuchea's proposal as what was called an attempt to "impose upon the People's Republic of Kampuchea." It said threateningly that the Cambodia issue, being "irreversible," had "thoroughly and unalterably been solved." What was actually meant was that with Soviet support, Vietnam could occupy Cambodia for good.

The proposal by the coalition government of three Democratic Kampuchean parties is undoubtedly a drastic test for the Vietnamese regime. The Hanoi government's outrageous attitude has again exposed its true face. From the CGDK's proposal and the Vietnamese regime's attitude, people can see who really wants to seek a peaceful solution of the Cambodia issue and who is actually thwarting the solution of the Cambodia issue under the pretext of a political solution. The Vietnamese regime's adhering to its stand can only result in its being increasingly isolated in the international community and ultimately defeated.

PRC ARMY OFFICER DESCRIBES FIGHTING VIETNAM

HK271532 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1328 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Report by Li Wei': "A Senior Chinese Army Officer Describes Defensive Fighting Against Vietnam"]

[Text] Beijing 27 Mar (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Zhang Taiheng, deputy commander of PLA Chengdu Military Region, cited the following example: "Regarding our effective interference, the Vietnamese soldiers exclaimed at the 'toughness' of the Chinese Army in one of their radio conversations, and begged for a few minutes more to explain, so that they would not be executed by their commanders," to illustrate that the structural reform, streamlining, and reorganization of the Chinese Army have not weakened, but greatly strengthened its combat effectiveness. Zhang told reporters this in an interview this afternoon.

According to him, the Chinese Army conducted three battles of varying scale against the Vietnamese Army in the Laoshan area on the Sino-Vietnamese border between September and December 1985. The first battle was our counterattack aimed at recovering one of our sentry posts taken by the Vietnamese Army. The second battle was our offensive aimed at destroying one of their strongholds, and to deal blows at their arrogance. For the Vietnamese had frequently attacked and harasssed the normal production and life of our people inhabiting the border areas. And the third battle was the attack on several sentry posts (points) of the Vietnamese Army, causing the enemy great casualties. It was a counter-attack against the harassing by the Vietnamese Army of the normal patrols of our border defense guards and the normal life of our inhabitants in the border areas.

In these battles, our commanders at all levels were capable of making good judgments on the situation at the time, and of promptly drawing up lines of action based on the guiding ideas and concepts of operations in the war against Vietnam. Eventually great victories were won with the smallest price in all these battles.

The fighting qualities and the capacity for several arms of the service to fight in coordination were well displayed. And those were the good results of the structural reform, steamlining, and reorganization of the army.

This 54-year-old senior military officer believed that the structural reform of the Chinese Army, particularly the newly established combined group armies, further suited the needs of modern warfare. In the counterattacks against Vietnamese raids, he said, as well as the coordination between the infantry and the artillery, other service arms, including the special units, have also cooperated very well in the battles. For example, when the infantry needed aid form the artillery, they could obtain effective support within a minute after dispatching signals. When the communications of the Vietnamese Army headquarters were discovered, they were jammed as required. By doing this, the enemy would be confused and could only take action blindly.

Frank and straighforward, Deputy Commander Zhang Taiheng joined the Army 40 years ago. He has been promoted grade by grade from soldier to senior commander. During the early sixties, he spent more than 2 years receiving advanced training at the Nanjing Military Academy, and later became army commander of the Beijing Military Region. When the 11 military regions were merged into 7 last summer, he was transferred to the Chengdu Military Region. As one of the 268 PLA delegates to the NPC, he is now attending the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC.

THAI ARMY CHIEF COMMENTS ON HIS DISMISSAL

[Text] Bangkok, March 27 (XINHUA) -- General Athit Kamlang-ek said here yesterday that he would abide by the prime minister's decision not to extend his military term and could cooperate with the military, government and people in helping develop the country even after he leaves the present posts. Speaking to about 300 representatives of various organizations and communities yesterday rallied at the Capital Security Command, the Supreme Commander of the Thai Armed Forces and Commander-in-Chief of the Thai Army General Athit said "I wholeheartedly accept my superior's decision as he made it in accordance with the correct principle."

Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanon announced at a press conference at the Government House on March 24 that he had decided in the capacity as defense minister not to extend General Athit's tenure for the second year. As is know, Athit had been granted last year one-year extension to his tenure. Prem's decision was lauded by leaders of some political parties and the parliament, as well as the local mass media.

In his speech, General Athit who is due to retire at the beginning of September this year, also said that rumors about political tension resulted from Prem's refusal to the extension of his tenure would "gradually fade away and that things will return to normal soon".

The representatives present at the meeting voiced full backing for Geneal Athit to enter politics after his retirement. The president of the National Congress of Thai Labor pledged that his 200,000 union members would support Athit should he contest in next year's general elections.

Local newspapers also reported that Prime Minister Prem and General Athit yesterday met and talked to each other during the royal cremation of the fallen soldiers presided over by the king.

It was their first meeting in public after Prime Minister Prem declared his decision not to extend Athit's tenure.

EX AFGHAN POLICE OFFICER ON USSR ATROCITIES

OW271653 Beijing XINHUA in English 1635 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] Islamabad, March 27 (XINHUA) -- The Afghan police is working under the direct control and supervision of Soviets, who have committed a lot of atrocities in Afghanistan, stated a former police officer of the Karmal regime. "After the Soviet military invasion of Afghanistan, all administrative and military affairs in the country have been under the control of the Russians," Ammanullah said in an interview in Peshawar which was published in the latest issue of the monthly "AFGHAN INFORMATION CENTER."

Ammanullah, who joined the Afghan mojahedin (holy war fighters) this year, said the police in Afghanistan were often sent by the Soviets to fight the mojahedin. "Despite the fact that the duty of our battalion was to guard the farms of Jalalabad (capital of Nangarhar Province in eastern Afghanistan), we were often sent to the fighting," said Ammanullah. "Where the Russians could not go, they would force the Afghan soldiers to go and those refused orders were executed," he added. He said when one rifle and one machine gun disappeared in his battalion on November 16, 1985, two soldiers of the battalion were arrested. "We saw the Russians giving electric shocks on their tongues to force them into confession of stealing the guns," he said.

In another case last September, he said, a soldier belonging to the second battalion of the guard regiment of Jilalabad was dragged by a running military vehicle for losing a wireless set and pieces of his skin were left on stones.

He also disclosed that "in 1985 when a group of Russians cut the breasts of a young Afghan girl in a village near Jalalabad because her brother was a mojahed, a number of Afghan women protested to the zonal head but the latter told the women that even Babrak Karmal cannot stop the Russians because he has no authority."

CHINESE ROCKET TO LAUNCH SWEDISH SATELLITE

[Text] Beijing, March 28 (XINHUA) -- The Sweden Space Company (SSC) has requested China to launch a Mailstar satellite, according to an announcement by the Chinese Ministry of Astronautics Industry today. An agreement to launch the satellite was signed in Stockholm earlier this year. But the specific launch date was not disclosed.

This will be the first time China has launched a satellite for a foreign customer since it announced last October that its launching vehicles would be put into international commercial service.

The satellite will be put into orbit by a China-made "long March-2" rocket, a large two-stage launching vehicle, using liquid fuel. It was developed in the middle of the 1970s. The most recent launching was the seventh.

[Text] Antananarivo, 26 Mar (XINHUA) -- PRC President Li Xiannian and his wife Lin Jiamei today thank the Malagasy Government and people for their warm hospitality.

President Ratsiraka and his wife Celine attended the banquet by invitation.

President Li Xiannian and President Ratsiraka delivered warm and friendly speeches at the banquet. Both of them expressed satisfaction over the fruitful cooperation in all fields between the two countries, and hoped to consolidate and develop the existing friendly relations of cooperation between the two countries.

In his speech, Li Xiannian said: "Although my visit is short, it has been fruitful." "Our meetings and talks were extremely useful. Both sides share identical or similar views on various important issues and my visit's aim of strengthening mutual understanding and friendship has been attained," he added. He reiterated: "China treasures its friendship with Madagascar, and to develop Sino-Malagasy friendship and cooperation remains our firm and unshakable policy." President Li also expressed his sincere appreciation for the warm hospitality of the Malagasy Government, the people of all walks of life, and the masses.

In his speech, President Ratsiraka said: "The amicable encounter and exchange of views in the past few days have further strengthened the very solid ties between Madagascar and China." He added: "Leaders of the two countries at various levels have all along cooperated satisfactorily and are ready to develop a relationship of mutual respect, commitment, and effectiveness, treating each other amicably." He reaffirmed his "complete satisfaction" with Sino-Malagasy relations. He said: "We have planted a robust seedling which will bear plentiful and sweet fruits. It is called friendship, unity, and harmony. Our offspring will protect and cultivate it. We will do our best to safeguard it."

Attending the banquet were Andrianarahinjaka, speaker of the National People's Assembly, Rokotoarijaona, prime minister; (Rakotoarison), chairman of the Military Development Committee; and (Hunuray), president of the Constitutional High Court.

Present at the banquet on the Chinese side were members of President Li Xiannian's entourage Chen Muhua, Qi Huaiyuan, Lu Xuejian, Tang Longbin, and others. Also present at the banquet was Yang Guirong, Chinese ambassador to Madagascar.

The banquet was held in a warm and friendly atmosphere.

President Li arrived in Madagascar on 24 March for a state visit. After successfully completing their tour of five Asian and African nations, President Li and his entourage are scheduled to return home via Karachi tomorrow.

Li on Sino-Somali Relations

HK271525 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 24 Mar 86 p 6

[XINHUA report: "Text of Li Xiannian's Speech at a Banquet Hosted by President Siad"]

[Text] Mogadishu, 22 March (XINHUA) -- Chinese President Li Xiannian spoke at a banquet in his honor hosted by Somali President Mohamed Siad Barre. The full text of his speech is as follows:

Your Excellency Honorable President Mohamed Siad Barre and Madame Siad;

Ladies and gentlemen:

I am very happy to have the opportunity to come to Somalia on a state visit at the warm invitation of President Mohamed Siad Barre. It has been my long-cherished wish to visit our old friend President Siad and the Somali people in your country. The warm welcome of your government and people and the banquet hosted by Your Excellency President Siad on this occasion has made us feel quite at home. I should like to take this opportunity to express my heartfelt thanks and admiration for Your Excellency the President and Madame Siad on behalf of my colleagues in the name of my wife and myself.

The Chinese and Somali peoples have a long history of ties and profound traditional friendship. Back in the mid-15th century, the famous Chinese navigator Zheng He came to Somalia on several occasions across the ocean. After the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries, the then Premier Zhou Enlai paid a visit to Somalia, and Your Excellency President Mohamed Siad Barre has twice visited China. It has laid a solid foundation for the smooth development of Sino-Somali friendly relations and cooperation. I sincerely hope that my present visit will make contributions to the further promotion and development of Sino-Somali friendship.

The Chinese Government and people have always followed with interest Somalia's develop- and progress. We are happy to see that the Somali Government and people are continuously exploring a road of development suited to their national situation. They have made unremitting efforts in overcoming natural disasters, promoting economic development, and improving the living standard of the people, and have achieved gratifying results. Somalia has pursued a policy of nonalignment, opposed imperialism, colonialism, and racism, supported the just struggles of the South African and Arab peoples, stood for the establishment of a new international economic order, and done much useful work to safeguard the Third World's rights and interests and interests and world peace.

China is a developing socialist country. China has scored considerable accomplishments in economic construction in the 3 decades and more since the founding of the PRC. However, it has taken quite a tortuous road.

Both positive and negative experiences have told us that in order to make China's affairs successful, it is necessary to start from China's actual conditions in everything, to adopt practical and feasible measures, and to develop the national economy in proportion in a planned way. Since the late 1970's, we have focused our efforts on developing the social productive forces, implementing the policy of invigorating the domestic economy and opening up to the outside world, conducting economic reform step by step in a planned way, and doing our best to build socialism with Chinese characteristics. With the efforts over the past few years, China's economic reform has scored marked results and China's economy is now in the orbit of healthy development. In international affairs, China has firmly pursued an independent foreign policy of peace, opposed hegemonism of all descriptions, and worked to establish or develop normal relations with various countries on the basis of the five principles of peaceful coexistence. We will, as always, strengthen unity and cooperation with other Third World countries, support African people in their struggle against the racism practiced by the South African authorities, and support the just struggle of the people of other countries. We are resolute about making unremitting efforts to safeguard world peace and to promote common economic prosperity with the people of all countries in the world.

The basic interest of the people of all countries in our contemporary world is peace and development. To seek development in peace and to promote peace with development has become an irresistible historical trend. We are very happy to note that the 21st OAU summit meeting has listed a resolution of Africa's economic difficulties as a major item on the agenda, and has adopted appropriate resolutions to this end. The meeting has appealed to the OAU member nations to strengthen their collective efforts facing the "dual challenge of development and subsistence." We highly value the African countries' stand of unity and self-improvement. I believe that the African countries, with the support of the international community, will surely make steady progress in their efforts to restore and develop their economy, making still greater contributions to world peace and development.

Your Excellency the President, Sino-Somali friendship has stood the test of history and it has great vitality. It has been a quarter of a century since the two countries established diplomatic relations. With our joint efforts, the two countries have carried out sincere and efficient cooperation in the political, economic, trade, and cultural fields. China has always prized its friendship from Somalia. It is our wish to help supply each other's needs, to make up each other's deficiencies, and to continuously explore and open new realms for cooperation on the basis of equality and mutual benefit. We believe that through our joint efforts, the friendly cooperative relations between our two countries will be all the more fruitful.

Now allow me to propose a toast:

To the continuous development of the friendship between the Chinese and Somali peoples and friendly cooperation between the two countries;

To the prosperity of the Somalia Democratic Republic and the happiness of its peoples;

To the health of Your Excellency the President and Madame Siad;

To the health of other Somali leaders and their wives; and

To the health of the ladies and gentlemen present.

Cheers!

ZHAO ZIYANG DELIVERS WORK REPORT AT NPC OPENING

OW251320 Beijing Television Service in Mandarin 0704 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Report by Zhao Ziyang, premier of the State Council, on the Seventh 5-Year Plan for National Economic and Social Development at the opening of the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC at the Great Hall of the People in Beijing on 25 March -- live]

[Text] Deputies: Now, on behalf of the State Council, I submit to the congress for your deliberation a report on China's Seventh 5-Year Plan for National Economic and Social Development.

As early as 1983, the State Council had begun work on the 1986-90 Seventh 5-Year Plan. It had organized the various departments concerned and experts to conduct discussions and forecast the major issues of economic and social development. In September 1985, the National Conference of Party Delegates adopted the proposal of the CPC Central Committee for the Seventh 5-Year Plan for National Economic and Social Development, and clearly pointed out the guiding ideology, major tasks, and a series of principles compatable with the new situation. On the basis of the proposal made by the CPC Central Committee, the State Council conducted an even more extensive study of the arrangements, held repeated discussions and calculations, and solicited views from various departments and localities. After more than 3 years of work, a draft Seventh 5-Year Plan has been completed and is hereby submitted for your examination.

Now I will report on the situation of implementation of the Sixth 5-Year Plan, because it is an important basis for formulating the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Then I will give the necessary explanations on the basic tasks and major construction principles for the Seventh 5-Year Plan, as well as economic structural reform and foreign policies during that period.

I. A Review of the Implementation of the Sixth 5-Year Plan. The Sixth 5-Year Plan, approved at the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC, required that the principle of readjustment, restructure, consolidation, and improvement be promptly implemented in the 5 years from 1981 to 1985; that the various problems left over from the past which hindered our economic development be resolved one by one; that an overwhelming victory be won in bringing fundamental changes for the better to the financial and economic situation; and that a firm foundation be laid and good conditions created for the national economic and social development during the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Under the leadership of the CPC over the past 5 years, all the above requirements have been met, thanks to the concerted efforts of all people of various nationalities. An overwhelming part of the tasks and targets on industrial and agricultural production, communications and transportation, capital construction, technical innovation, domestic and foreign trade, education, science, culture, and the people's livelihood as set by the Sixth 5-Year Plan have been prefulfilled or overfulfilled.

China has made tremendous achievements in socialist modernization. Profound changes have taken place in the entire nation's economic and social outlook. These achievements and changes are all very remarkable whether they are compared with those in the several previous 5-year plans since the founding of the new republic or with those in other nations during that same period.

Over the past 5 years, China's total industrial and agricultural output has increased at an annual rate of 11 percent. During that period, the average annual industrial and agricultural growth rates were respectively 12 and 8.1 percent, while the gross national product increased at an average annual rate of 10 percent. Such high economic growth was only approached by that of the First 5-Year Plan and was higher than all previous 5-year plans. It is also higher than that in most nations in the world during that same period.

Particularly noteworthy was the fact that China's agricultural development was very fast in that 5 year period, with a growth rate higher than that of many other nations. In fact, the past 5 years saw the fastest agricultural growth rate since the founding of the new republic. In the 28 years from 1953 to 1986, [as heard] China's total agricultural output increased 3.5 percent annually. During the First 5-Year Plan, a period marked with relatively fast agricultural growth, or agricultural output had an average annual increase of 4.5 percent. During the Fifth 5-Year Plan, it increased at an annual average rate of 5.1 percent. Thus, during the Sixth 5-Year Plan, the agricultural growth rate was higher than both of the previously mentioned 5-year plans.

China's rapid agricultural development has created very favorable conditions for steady growth of the entire national economy. Over the past 5 years, the output of many important products vital to the entire national economy and the people's livelihood has increased by large margins. Compared with the Fifth 5-Year Plan, China's average annual plan grain output under the Sixth 5-Year Plan increased from 305.3 million metric tons to 370.62 metric tons; cotton from 2.24 to 4.32 million metric tons; and pork, beef, and mutton from 9.37 and 14.62 million metric tons. From 1980 to 1985, China's coal production increased from 620 million to 850 million metric tons; crude oil from 106 million to 125 million metric tons, electric power from 300 billion to 407 billion kilowatt-hours; and steel from 37 million to 46.66 million metric tons.

China has a population of over 1 billion. Its present per capita output of principal industrial and agricultural products is still quite low. However, because of the big increase in the output of the above-mentioned products over the past 5 years, total output was quite high by world standards. In fact, most of them ranked among the highest in the world. This shows that China's aggregate economic strength has become noticeably stronger. [applause]

Over the past 5 years, China has achieved significant successes in capital construction and technical innovation. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan, state-owned units invested a total of 530 billion yuan in fixed assets, acquired 383 billion yuan worth of new fixed assets, and completed 496 large and medium-sized projects, of which 103 were energy and communications projects. During those 5 years, the nation's power generating capacity increased by 19.5 million kwh, coal production capacity by 80 million metric tons, and crude oil production capacity by 50 million metric tons. Moreover, 1,500 kilometers of railways were opened for service, 1,500 kilometers were multiple tracked, 2,400 kilometers electrified, and deep-water berths' handling capacity was increased by 100 million metric tons. Over 200,000 projects were completed and put into production by our enterprises, which have quickened the pace of equipment replacement and technological transformation. The technical level of some trades and enterprises has noticeably improved. Over the past 5 years, the nation's mechanical and electronics industries have doubled their output of products of advanced international standard. Not only did this ensure steady economic growth during the Sixth 5-Year Plan, it also provided a relatively sound material base for economic development during the Seventh 5-Year Plan and into the 1990's.

Over the past 5 years, the nation has seen an upturn in its once decreasing revenue. During the last 3 years, in particular, a gratifying situation, where there was a significant, steady growth in receipts appeared. Near the end of the Fifth 5-Year Plan, the nation had a considerable deficit. The deficit in 1979 and 1980 totalled nearly 30 billion yuan. Thanks to readjustments and reforms during the last 5 years, the nation's production developed, distribution of goods expanded, and economic returns, as well as financial receipts, increased. In 1983, the nation's revenue increased by 12.7 billion yuan. In 1984, it increased by 25.5 billion yuan. The increase in 1985 was 36.2 billion yuan. In that year, total receipts reached 182.9 billion yuan, and revenue and expenditure were balanced. Of all the previous 5-year plans, the fifth registered the highest increase in revenue. Receipts for 1980 was 22.6 billion yuan higher than 1975, and the increase registered during the Sixth 5-Year Plan was significantly higher than that of the Fifth 5-Year Plan.

Revenue in 1985 was 78.6 billion yuan higher than in 1980. While the nation's revenue increased, there was also a drastic increase in nonbudgetary funds. The amount reached 143 billion yuan in 1985. In that year, the amount of budgetary and nonbudgetary funds doubled that of 1980.

During the past 5 years, a thriving and prosperous situation has appeared in our nation's scientific, technological, educational, and cultural spheres. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan, the state spent a total of 117.2 billion yuan on development in those areas. That doubled the 57.7 billion yuan spent in those areas during the Fifth 5-Year Plan. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan, a total of 33,000 major scientific research projects were completed, 937 of them receiving state awards for scientific and technological achievements, and some of the completed projects were among the world's forerunners or the most advanced in the world. Noticeable results were achieved through the popularization and application of scientific and technological achievements, as well as from the technical innovations carried out among the masses.

Higher education developed rapidly. The total number of students enrolled in regular schools of higher education increased to 1.7 million in 1985 from 1.14 million in 1980. Restructuring of secondary education began to achieve initial results. Development of vocational and technical education was fast. Progress was made in popularizing primary education. Adult education of all descriptions developed throughout the country on an unprecedentedly wide scale. All types of cultural services, including literature and art, education, newspapers, publishing, films, and radio and television broadcasts, grew.

Over the past 5 years, a new situation has appeared in the nation's economic relations, trade, and technical exchanges with foreign countries. Both in terms of depth and breadth, the nation has opened its door to the world wider than it has during any period in its history. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, the nation's import and export trade totalled $230 billion, twice that of the Fifth 5-Year Plan period. In terms of foreign trade, the nation's position is now ranked noticeably higher in the world. In 1985, the nation registered an increase in foreign exchange reserves compared with that of 1980. In one way or another, the nation spent 10.3 billion yuan of foreign loans, attracted 5.3 billion yuan of direct investment from foreign businessmen, and established a number of Sino-foreign joint ventures, cooperative undertakings, and foreign-owned enterprises in various parts of the country. During the 5-year period, the nation imported more than 10,000 items of foreign technology into the country. Some of them were advanced technologies and key equipment produced in the late 1970's or early 1980's. Through importing foreign technology and establishing Sino-foreign joint ventures and cooperative undertakings, many enterprises have noticeably upgraded their technology and management. Furthermore, we have made significant headway in winning foreign contracts, in providing labor services, and in developing tourism.

Over the past 5 years, the Chinese people's living standards have improved noticeably. The scope of improvement has been unprecedented since the founding of the republic. This can be observed from the following four aspects: First, the income of urban and rural inhabitants has increased considerably. After allowing for rising commodity prices, their per capita net income increased by an average of 13.7 percent annually, and the per capita income of working personnel in cities and towns increased by an average of 6.9 percent annually during the past 5 years. During the 5-year period, more than 35 million people have been settled and given jobs in cities and towns. Second, the level of consumption of urban and rural residents has increased rapidly and their pattern of consumption has also changed noticeably. People now eat better than ever before. Their clothing has become increasingly diverse. The sale of durable consumer goods, especially television sets, washing machines, radio tape recorders, refrigerators, and other household electrical appliances has increased dramatically. Third, people's living conditions have improved. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, living quarters with a total floor space of over 360 million square meters were built in cities and towns, and living quarters with a total floor space of 32 million square meters were built in the countryside.

Fourth, savings of people in urban and rural areas have increased considerably. By the end of 1985, the total savings had reached 162.3 billion yuan, tripling the amount recorded at the end of 1980. The aforesaid achievements and changes show that, during the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, we have quite successfully solved some longstanding economic problems that we had wanted but were unable to solve in the past.

China's agricultural development was slow in the past. Its grain output during the 1953-1978 period increased by an average of some 5 million metric tons annually, and its cotton output remained basically constant during the 1965-1978 period. Thus, solving the people's food and clothing problems has always been a formidable task for the nation. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we have gradually found a path of developing the nation's socialist agriculture with distinctive Chinese characteristics, and have ultimately attained the goal of producing enough grain and more than enough cotton to meet the nation's needs. This is something of great historic and far-reaching significance. [applause] With the exception of the early 1950's when supply was quite sufficient, commodity supply on the nation's urban and rural market has, on the whole, been inadequate in the past. As such, many commodities had to be rationed according to coupons. In some localities and in certain areas, there were dozens of different types of coupons, and it was very common for people to stand in line in order to buy what they needed. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, the production of many industrial and agricultural goods significantly increased, and the supply of consumer goods became relatively abundant. With the exception of a (?few items), commodity supply has become basically unlimited throughout the country. Over a long period in the past, the nation's agriculture and light and heavy industries as well as its savings and consumption were seriously dispropportionate, greatly affecting the sustained and steady national economic growth and the improvement of the people's living standards. Thanks to readjustments and reforms during the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, agriculture and light industry were given greater emphasis in industrial and agricultural production, and the course of heavy industry was clearly charted. Consequently their relationship has became more proportionate. While the savings rate was as high as 36.5 in 1978, it was lowered to an average of approximately 30 percent during the Sixth 5-Year Plan period.

The improvement of proportions between major economic sectors has had, and will continue to have, a very significant effect on promoting and guaranteeing a sustained and healthy economic development in our country. The great achievements scored in various fields during the Sixth 5-Year Plan have fully testified to the correctness of our line, principles, and policies. [applause]

We have resolutely discarded the erroneous theory and practice of taking class struggle as the key link, consolidated and developed the political situation of stability and unity, unswervingly shifted the focus of all our work to socialist modernization, striven to promote the building of socialist material and spiritual civilizations, and persisted in formulating all policies by proceeding from reality. This is a fundamental guarantee and a major prerequisite for the sustained, steady, and harmonious development of the entire national economy.

Regarding economic work, the following strategic changes of far-reaching historical importance have taken place during the Sixth 5-Year Plan. This is also the radical reason for the various achievements we have made.

The strategy for our economic and social development has begun to change from one-sidely striving for an increase in the output value and production quantity of industry, especially heavy industry, to taking the improvement of economic benefits as the central task, paying attention the harmonious development of agriculture, light industry, and heavy industry, and attaching importance to the all-round development of the economy, science, technology, education, culture, and society.

In drawing up the Sixth 5-Year Plan, we proposed that earnest efforts be made to change the long-standing situation resulting from the guidance of the left ideology and characterized by a high amount of accumulation and high speed but low efficiency and slow pace in raising the people's living standards. We proposed that we really proceed from the actual situation in our country and embark on a new road, marked by a comparatively realistic speed, better economic results, and more substantial benefits to the people. Also, a (?10)-point economic construction principle, centered on raising economic benefits, was put forward. In making economic development plans, we have not only put emphasis on tapping potential and bringing the initiative of all quarters into play, but also stressed the need to base the plans on the capability of our country and to leave an appropriate leeway. Attention has also been paid to maintaining the basic balance of financial revenue and expenditure, credit funds, materials supply, and foreign exchange.

Within the national economy, we have persisted in taking as matter of great strategic importance the enhancement of agriculture, which is the foundation of our national economy, expediting the development of the consumer goods industry, and rationally adjusting the orientation of service in heavy industry. We have also made productive and nonproductive construction generally harmonious, and brought about a fairly quick development in tertiary industry.

While attaching importance to economic development, we have paid attention to integrating economic construction closely with the development of science and technology, culture, education, and all aspects of society, and made them promote each other. As a result, a fine situation of vigorous development has appeared in economic construction, science, technology, culture, education, and all areas of social work.

In economic structure, the staff system of excessive and rigid control has begun to change to a new system, full of vigor and vitality and meeting the needs of an organic development of the commodity economy on the basis of public ownership. The first major breakthrough in our economic structural reform was made in the countryside. The wide-scale popularization of the contracted responsibility system, based on households with remuneration linked to output, and the implementation of a series of other measures for reform have liberated the productive forces in rural areas to a great extent, with the result that our rural economy has begun to change in the direction of specialization, commodity production, and modernization.

In urban economic reform, we have focused closely on invigorating enterprises as the central task and have carried out reforms in varying degrees, with respect to planning work, financial work, taxation, pricing, banking, commerce, and labor wages, bringing an unprecedentedly vigorous situation in our urban economic activities. Enterprises have gradually increased their capability to transform and develop themselves. The socialist market has continued to expand. The multiform ownership systems and modes of operation have developed remarkably, and the lateral economic ties of one kind or another have been increasingly strengthened. The operational mechanism of the entire national economy has had many changes favorable to the enlivening of the economy. This has effectively stirred up the initiative and the creative spirit of the broad masses of staff members and workers.

Through the practice during the Sixth 5-Year Plan, in particular that over the past year and more since the CPC Central Committee had the decision on reform of the economic structure, the outline of building a socialist economic system with Chinese characteristics has become increasingly distinct, and the road to be taken increasingly clear.

Regarding our foreign economic relations, we have begun to change from a closed or semi-closed economy to an open type, actively using international exchange.

We have broken through the fetters of leftist ideology and the idea of a self-sufficient economy, overcome the erroneous understanding that sets self-reliance against opening to the outside world, and achieved remarkable results in utilizing domestic and foreign resources, exploring domestic and foreign markets, and grasping the methods of organizing construction work at home and developing economic relations broad. By properly persisting in the policy of opening to the outside world, we may use others' strong points to make up for our deficiencies, and speed the progress of China's modernization program. This can only enhance our ability for self-reliance instead of hampering it.

These changes of historical importance and the achievements which we have scored in making these changes and which have become the focus of world attention, are indicative that we have found the correct road for building socialism with Chinese characteristics. On the whole, the vast numbers of cadres and masses in our country are understanding more and more clearly and intensely how to continuously advance China's socialist modernization program, based on the conditions of our country and under the guidance of the basic Marxist theory. Party and state prinicples and policies are becoming increasingly coordinated and improved. Practical experience in all fields is being constantly accumulated and is attaining a higher and higher level. As we recall, when the implementation of the Sixth 5-Year Plan had just commenced, none of us expected that such achievements as we have made today would be possible. Now, people across the country are becoming more and more confident that the objective of quadrupling the gross value of industrial and agricultural production by the end of this century is absolutely attainable, and they are full of confidence and hope in the bright future of the motherland. All this is an enormous spiritual asset, which our people have already gained and which will play its due role for a long time to come. [applause]

While fully affirming our achievements, we must very soberly note that our work still has certain shortcomings and mistakes, and many difficulties and problems still exist in our course of advance, because time is required to understand the capability of our country and to accumulate experience in making profound historical changes. In the past few years, though we have paid attention to the overall balance and proportionate development of the national economy, we have sometimes failed to give enough attention to effectively controlling the excessive growth of total social demand. There have been neither strong measures for, nor effective supervision of, the improvement in economic benefits, and especially product quality, in dealing with the questions of quantity versus quality, or speed versus benefits. When emphasizing boosts to the vitality of enterprises, we have not taken timely measures to step up and improve macroeconomic management. In building the two civilizations, at certain times there have been instances where insufficient attention was given to building spiritual civlization. In particular, after the fourth quarter of 1984, a phenomenon of striving for overly high speed appeared with the improvement in the economic situation. There was a sharp increase in fixed asset investment and in consumption funds, too much currency had been issued, no strict control over imports was exercised, and certain factors causing instability came into being in economic life. In view of this situation, the State Council took a series of measures. Through the work of last year, some problems have been resolved, while others are being resolved. The economic environment is turning from a strained to a relaxed situation. We must make a serious effort to sum up our experience, achieve further success in carrying out reforms and construction work in all fields, advance unswervingly along the road we have opened, and strive to consolidate and develop the current fine situation, marked by prosperity and full of vigor and vitality. [applause]

II. The Basic Tasks and Main Construction Policies for the Period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan

The period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan is a crucial one when China's economic development strategy and economic structure will be further transformed from an old to a new mode.

We must continue to act in accordance with the general requirement of building socialism with Chinese characteristics, and the basic policy of enlivening the domestic economy and opening to the outside world, display a vigorous, enterprising spirit, and take solid and steady steps to put China's economy on the track of a self-sustained growth, full of vigor and vitality, and marked by high efficiency and great benefits. Based on the actual situation in economic and social development and the objective to be achieved by the end of this century, the basic tasks put forward in the draft Seventh 5-Year Plan are:

1) Further efforts should be made to create fine economic and social environments for economic structural reform and to strive to maintain the basic balance of total supply and demand in society, so that reform can be carried out more smoothly. We should see to it that a foundation for a new socialist economic system with Chinese characteristics is basically established in 5 years or over a longer period.

2) It is necessary to maintain a steady economic growth; make great efforts to build more key projects while controlling total investment in fixed assets; undertake technological transformation; develop intellectual resources; and prepare necessary material, technological, and personnel reserves for a steady economic and social development in the 1990's.

The aforesaid three tasks [as heard] are closely correlated. The first task is the most important of them. In consideration of the overall demands of these tasks, the draft of the Seventh 5-Year Plan calls for a 38 percent increase in the total value of China's industrial and agricultural output in the 5 years and a 44 percent increase in the gross national product while constantly improving economic efficiency. If calculated according to the 1980 prices, the total value of industrial and agricultural output by 1990 will reach 1,677 billion yuan, or increase by 130 percent as compared with 1980. The gross national product by 1990 will reach 1,117 billion yuan, up 160 percent from 1980. The total investment in the fixed assets of state-owned organizations in the next 5 years will be 896 billion yuan, nearly 70 percent increase over the Sixth 5-Year Plan. The draft plan calls for renovating, expanding, and building a number of key projects and transforming a number of key enterprises in order to substantially improve our energy and raw and processed materials production capability and our transport and communications capability and remarkably raise the level of production and technology of existing enterprises.

According to the draft plan, we should popularize a number of effective scientific and technological results, make a breakthrough in tackling certain new and crucial technological problems, and strive to make approximately 40 percent of our major industrial products attain the level of developed countries of the late 1970's and early 1980's in both characteristics and quality. We should gradually implement the 9-year compulsory education. At the same time, our regular colleges and adult colleges should train nearly 5 million highly specialized personnel in the next 5 years, twice as many as in the Sixth 5-Year Plan. The total volume of our import-export trade should increase 40 percent by 1990, as compared with 1985. We should accordingly use more foreign advanced technologies. The draft plan projects about 27 percent increase for the next 5 years in the actual level of consumption of urban and rural residents, and calls for further improvement in the quality of people's life and their environmental conditions. In the next 5 years, we will continue to maintain a basic balance in state finance, credit, supply, and foreign exchange. The fulfillment of the Seventh 5-Year Plan will enable us to make new, firm, and forceful strides on the road leading to a thriving, rich, and strong country and to prosperity and happiness for the people. [applause]

In the course of formulating the draft in accordance with the policies and principles put forward in the proposal of the CPC Central Committee for the Seventh 5-Year Plan, the State Council has emphatically considered and studied the following questions concerning economic construction.

1. We should project a moderate rate of economic growth and promote a proportionate and efficient development of national economy. Considering the constantly increasing demands of the society and summing up all possible production conditions, the draft of the Seventh 5-Year Plan calls for an average annual increase of 6.7 percent in the total value of industrial and agricultural output, with the total agricultural output value increasing by 4 percent and the total industrial output value increasing by 7.5 percent on an annual average. According to the draft plan, the gross national product should on an average rise 7.5 percent annually. The projected rates are lower than what we have actually attained during the Sixth 5-Year Plan. We project the rates this way mainly because we have considered the changes and demands of internal factors of economic life.

In order to develop agriculture in the days to come, we should continue to bring into play the effectiveness of correct rural policies. At the same time, we need to rely more and more on scientific and technological progress, rely on increasing material investment in agriculture, and improve conditions for agricultural production. The improvement of conditions for agricultural production is gradual, and it is impossible for us to make a drastic change in a short time. This fact cannot but affect the agricultural growth rate to a certain extent. As for industry, the excessively fast growth in the last 2 years of the Sixth 5-Year Plan was primarily stimulated by excessive investment and supported by a large quantity of imported raw and processed materials. It is difficult for us to hold out long in that situation.

At the same time, we lack the supply of energy resources and raw materials, and still badly need communications and transport facilities right now. The proper control of the excessively high growth rate in processing industry is conducive to bringing into line the proportion between the energy and raw materials industries on the one hand and the processing industry on the other and between production and transportation and to making the product mix more reasonable. Poor production quality and low economic efficiency are fatal weaknesses of China's economy. An appropriate growth of the total output value in industry and agriculture during the Seventh 5-Year Plan is conducive to diverting the attention of all sectors to improving production quality and raising economic efficiency. Particularly, the overall development of economic structural reform needs an environment in which all economic sectors must not be strained. Events both at home and abroad repeatedly prove that only by expanding economy appropriately will it be possible to avoid extreme tension in economic relations and ensure triumphant developments in carrying out reforms. The economic growth rate laid down by the draft Seventh 5-Year Plan is optimistic but not over ambitious. It is possible to exceed this rate of growth in the course of implementing this plan. On the question of the rate of economic growth, we must adopt the scientific attitude of seeking truth from facts. Naturally, we must strive to achieve a sustained and fairly high rate of growth while improving economic efficiency and production quality. However, we must not hold that the higher the rate of growth, the better it will be.

Still less must we blindly pursue high targets and seek even higher rates of growth at each level. However, we must not set the rate of economic growth too low, while ignoring favorable conditions in economic developments and the tremendous potential in social production, because this will adversely affect the effective utilization of the resources in production, fail to bring into full play the enthusiasm of the masses for production, hamper the health growth of economy, and prevent us from meeting social demand. We must have the necessary economic growth in order to enhance our national strength or raise the people's living standards. It is wrong to neglect this point. At the same time, we must also realize that if we unrealistically expect an excessively high rate of growth, it will be difficult to maintain this high level for a long period. Eventually this rate of growth will drop, even if it will stay high for a while. The drastic ups and downs of the growth rates are harmful to economic development. It often takes a considerably longer period to eliminate this kind of harmful effect.

Our past experiences repeatedly tell us that only by tackling problems by considering both the needs and possibilities, by looking ahead and behind, and by maintaining an appropriate rate of growth, will it be possible to develop our economy steadily and obtain the reliable guarantee of continuously raising the people's living standards.

2. To determine the appropriate scale of investment, rationally readjust the investment patterns, and improve economic results in making investments is a crucial issue in the Seventh 5-Year Plan. It directly affects the steady growth of economy and the rational readjustment of the setup of production in the Seventh 5-Year Plan. It will also affect the conditions for future economic development in the 1990's and beyond. Examining the economic growth rate from various aspects and repeatedly balancing the financial and material strengths, the draft Seventh 5-Year Plan sets the total basic investments by state-owned units in the 5-year period at 500 billion yuan, an increase of 49 percent over that in the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, and the total investments for equipment renewal and technical transformation at 276 billion yuan, an increase of 87 percent over the Sixth 5-Year Plan.

In consideration of the excessively sharp increases in fixed asset investments, especially capital construction investments, in the latter part of the Sixth 5-Year Plan, the scale of fixed asset investments forthe first 2 years of the Seventh 5-Year Plan should be largely maintained at the 1985 level, and such investments should only be slightly increased for the remaining 3 years of the plan. However, there should be no excessive increases. The scale of investment must be in conformity with the strength of the country, because such conformity is a decisive factor in ensuring economic stability and is an objective law of socialist economic construction. If such a law brings about an excessively large scale of investment, it will certainly create a major, serious disproportion and lead economic development onto a crooked road, thus delaying the progress of modernization. Regarding this question, we have learned profound lessons and should notice that, as a result of a large amount of work, the trend of excessive expansion of investments in the past 2 years has somewhat decreased. However, the work has not basically solved the problem as many localities and units are still blindly increasing the number of projects and activities, creating a potential danger of continued expansion of the scale of investments. If such a development is allowed to continue, the situation created by many years of efforts will probably be disrupted once again, and it will be difficult to continue to smoothly carry out the reform of economic structure which has already started. At the same time, the task of preparing conditions of material foundation for continuous economic development in the 1990's cannot be fulfilled. Therefore, to deal with this problem, we must keep a sober mind, unify our ideological understanding, and adopt resolute and powerful measures from the upper levels to the lower levels to make certain that the scale of investments during the Seventh 5-Year Plan is controlled and maintained at a level allowed by our national strength.

Currently, not only the scale of investment tends to be excessive, the investment structure is also irrational, as manifested mainly in the low proportion of energy, transport, communications, raw materials, and other basic facilities, as well as the investment in basic industry. Other manifestations include high proportion of investments in ordinary processing industry and construction of an intangible and nonproductive nature; as well as the fact that investments for renovation and remodeling activities are insufficient, with a considerable portion of such investments being used for capital construction. Failure to change such an irrational investment structure will result in either uncontrollable general scale of investments, or the lack of sustaining power to develop economy. Excessive expansion of ordinary processing industry and nonproductive construction will certainly increase the pressure on energy, transport, and raw materials. To demand additional investments in these areas will lead to daily-intensifying expansion of the entire scale of investments.

As the same time, while ordinary processing industry develops at a greater rate, construction of basic industry and basic facilities cannot be adequately strengthened because of shortage of funds, and the technological features of backbone enterprises cannot be changed at a relatively greater speed. As a result, there will be a lack of strong foundations and support for the development of the entire national economy and technological progress. Therefore, the crux of whether or not the general scale of investments can be properly controlled and sustaining power for continuing the economic development be increased lies in rational readjustment of investment structure.

During the Seventh 5-Year Plan, the readjustment of the investment structure should follow the following guidelines:

1) We should continue to increase investment in the basic facilities and basic industries of energy, transport, telecommunications, and raw and processed materials. We should appropriately increase investment in agriculture, science, and education. We should accordingly curtail investment in ordinary processing industry projects.

2) We should properly control the increase of investment in non-productive construction projects, so that same amount of investment will create more production capability and development capability. We should strictly control the construction of luxury buildings, except for the necessary facilities for tourism. A proper proportion of construction should be devoted to housing projects which should be built steadily. The focus of urban construction should be placed on building basic facilities serving production and the people's livelihood. Other urban construction projects may be built only when surplus resources are available. We should definitely not adhere to formalism in our construction.

3) We should spend more funds on technological transformation, renovation, and expansion of existing enterprises, and increase the proportion of investment devoted to renovation and transformation in the total investment for fixed assets.

4) Investment should be made in the eastern, central, and western regions in a proper ratio with emphasis placed on different projects according to the economic situation and resources of those regions, so that the more developed eastern region can be better linked to the development of the central and western regions.

We should control the size of investment in fixed assets and rationally readjust the investment structure when we make decisions on construction projects. A conspicuous problem at present is that too many projects are being built, they take a long time to complete, and the investment yields poor results. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we must change the situation in which people vied for more investment and started too many projects that they could not complete even after a long period of time. We must strengthen our sense of time, loan interest, and capital turnover, and resolutely undertake construction projects in accordance with a reasonable construction schedule. This is a key to shortening the building time and improving investment results. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we must ensure the availability of funds, materials, and equipment for any new large-and medium-sized projects before they are started; and materials and funds for the projects should be appropriated annually according to a reasonable building schedule. If funds, materials, and equipment are not available, the projects can only be regarded as reserve projects. We should seriously reexamine the large, medium-sized and small projects under construction, and readjust their precedence. We should work hard for several years to gradually ensure that all projects are built on a reasonable building schedule.

In order to control the size of investment and readjust the investment structure, the most important thing is that we must reform the policy-making and management system for investment in fixed assets.

We should study and formulate scientific and systematic rules and regulations for managing, regulating, and controlling investment, and implement them step by step. We should plan in a unified way the investment in fixed assets for the whole society, ensure an overall balance, and correctly delineate the limits of investment among central authorities, local authorities, and enterprises. We should pay attention to taking economic measures to guide the investment of different concerns in conformity with the macroeconomic objective.

Meanwhile, we must streamline the fundamental administration of investment, and reform the work with regard to making decisions, finding facts, designing, organizing construction, supplying equipment, and so forth, and promote and improve the bidding system in all areas. Only by doing this will we be able to bring a significant change in our country's capital construction as well as noticeably better economic returns from our investment.

3. We must consider making scientific and technological progress and developing intellectual resources as important strategic tasks and do a still better job in promoting scientific and educational work. A conspicuous characteristic of the Seventh 5-Year Plan is its attention to scientific and technological development so that China's economic growth can be charted on that basis. To promote scientific and technological development, we must concentrate our efforts on doing two things well: First, we must make efforts to develop and popularize the type of scientific and technological achievements which will produce economic results quickly, and actively assist our enterprises, including the rural enterprises, to improve their technology. This is an important way to forge closer ties between science and technology and production, and transform science and technology directly into productivity. Secondly, we must genuinely concentrate our financial and material resources and manpower on carrying out scientific and technological research in order to tackle key technical problems arising from economic construction and social development. At the same time, we must strive to achieve better results in the study and development of new, advanced technology, strive to transform our traditional industries with new technology, and continue to intensify applied and fundamental study.

Making efforts to master advanced, modern day technology is of far-reaching significance for our country's future economic and social development. In this respect, a contingent of relatively well-trained personnel has already been formed to tackle key scientific and technological problems. Henceforth, we must expand and improve this contingent by making continued efforts to train more proficient personnel, continue to work hard to catch up with the advanced technological development of the world, and strive to make new headway in electronics communication, biotechnology, astronautic technology, nuclear technology, new materials, and modern automated production technology, so as to create conditions for building our economy on a new technological foundation. We hope, and we believe, that the broad masses of workers, who have already dedicated themselves entirely to building our motherland, will continue to make still greater contributions to the people in the great cause of continuing to scale new heights in science and technology and making science and technology better serve the economy. [applause]

Whether or not the numerous problems confronting our economic construction can be effectively resolved depends on whether or not major breakthroughs can be achieved in scientific and technological areas. Similarly, whether or not our economic development can keep forging ahead also depends on the most profound source of stamina, namely scientific and technological development. We must realize, in particular, that a new technological revolution has been developing rapidly in the world today and that an increasingly large number of countries are focusing their attention on developing science and technology. Under such circumstances, if we fail to adopt correct policies for taking advantage of this opportunity to confront the challenge, the gap between us and developed countries will not be narrowed, but will be further widened instead, and the task of catching up with developed countries economically and technologically will become increasingly more difficult.

Of course, confronting us today are numerous scientific and technological problems, which cannot be resolved by one 5-year plan. As such, we must exert unremitting efforts for a long time. The most important requirement today is that we must uphold the strategic viewpoint of attaching great importance to scientific and technological development so that people in all quarters will have a sense of urgency, realizing that scientific and technological development must be accelerated.

We must set forth a clear-cut requirement, namely that the development of production, construction, distribution, and all other economic work must be firmly aligned with scientific and technological development. Scientific research departments and scientific research organs of institutes of higher education must continue to gear their work to the needs of economic construction. By means of technological transfer for recompense, as well as cooperation in developing new products and new technologies and in carrying out technical transformation, they should develop lateral ties with producers to form a new type of economic association of research and production. This will effectively correct such defects as regional barriers and departmental ownership, change the long-standing situation where research and production are not coordinated, and help promote a coordinated economic, scientific, and technological development.

We must earnestly implement the patent law and protect patent rights for inventions and creations so as to continue encouraging the enthusiasm of scientists, technicians, and workers to invent and create. We must continue to implement the policy of integrating military and civilian production so that more scientific and technological expertise in the defense departments can be more effectively applied to economic developments.

Scientific and technological development as well as the four modernizations as a whole cannot be accomplished without the training of proficient personnel and educational development. According great attention to education is our long-term strategy that must be upheld. We must make conscientious efforts to improve basic education, actively promote the 9-year compulsory education, energetically develop vocational and technical education, and continue to consolidate and improve higher education and adult education.

Over the past 5 years, the state has spent 116.6 billion yuan on education. That was an increase of 72 percent over that spent during the Sixth [as heard] 5-Year Plan period, and it exceeded the regular growth of revenue. Local governments at all levels, on the other hand, should earmark more funds for educational development. They must also widely mobilize various material resources and guide enterprises, collectives, and people in all social quarters to sponsor all types of educational services.

While continuing to restructure the educational system to keep up with the needs of the modernization drive, we must pay special attention to improving thequality of education in the course of promoting various types of education. Over the past few years, some secondary professional schools and some higher professional institutes and schools have been upgraded without justifiable cause. Some schools, regardless of their limited resources and capabilities, have enrolled more students than they can accommodate. Some adult students have been attending classes simply for the purpose of obtaining a diploma or a record of their schooling. All these problems must be dealt with earnestly.

All types of schools at all levels must earnestly implement the policy that moral, intellectual, aesthetic, and physical education must be attended to, give top priority to improving the quality of education and training competent personnel, and then appropriately increase the number of their students on this basis.

The administration of educational services must be strengthened, a system of assessing and supervising education must be established gradually, teacher training at various levels must be improved, and the retraining of teachers should be strengthened, so as to gradually build a steady contingent of teachers -- especially a contingent of teachers for secondary and primary schools -- which can basically keep up with our needs in terms of quality, quantity, and composition.

Governments and departments concerned at all levels must earnestly help teachers solve some actual problems concerning their working and living conditions, and should continue to heighten the consciousness of the entire society concerning respect for teachers and education so as to give full scope to teachers' enthusiasm, wisdom, and talents. [applause]

To bring vigorous development in scientific and educational work, we must continue to emancipate our minds and adopt effective measures to expedite the management of science and education in accordance with the CPC Central Committee's two decisions on reforming the management of science and technology and restructuring the educational system, and strive to achieve a decisive victory during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period.

4. We must develop foreign economic relations and trade and technological exchange in greater depth and breadth, with attention centered on raising our foreign exchange-earning capability through the promotion of exports. Our country has achieved great success in implementing the policy of opening to the outside world during the Sixth 5-Year Plan. It should be noted, however, that the steps we have taken in this regard have been quite insufficient as far as the needs and potentials of the economic development of our country are concerned. Also, the past few years have seen some problems with regard to our foreign economic relations and trade and technological exchange. The main problem has been that some localities and departments have violated the relevant state regulations on establishing many separate external contacts on their own [duo tou dui wai], blindly competing with each other, and duplicating their imports. Excessive quantities of some high-grade consumer goods were thus imported. These problems must be solved in a serious manner by earnestly strengthening and improving management. However, in no way should doubts arise regarding our policy of opening to the outside world. During the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we must devote more efforts to expanding the scale of foreign trade, foreign-capital utilization, and technology imports. At the same time, we must actively develop tourism and initiate projects of international air and water transport services, insurance, foreign contract work, and labor cooperation.

Striving to increase exports so as to earn more foreign exchange is the foundation and crucial task for further expanding the scale of foreign economic relations and trade and technological exchange. Ours is a developing socialist country. Shortage of foreign exchange will remain a striking problem in our economic life for a considerably long time. Export trade is a principal source of our country's foreign exchange income. The ability of our country to earn foreign exchange through exports determines the scope and (?success) of our foreign economic relations and trade as well as technological exchange and conditions the scale and progress of our domestic economic construction. It is, therefore, a major strategic issue concerning the future of our work of opening to the outside. When exports are developed, there will be more room for the development of our economy as a whole.

In order to expand the foreign trade of exports so as to earn more foreign exchange, the most fundamental task is to adopt a correct strategy that meets international market demands and is in conformity with the conditions of our country. One task is to persistently give priority to improving the quality of exported products, gradually establishing and improving the marketing system and service network abroad, and trying to see that quality is stable, service is good, and attention is paid to good credit so as to increase our competitive edge in the international market.

The second task is to strive to improve the makeup of our exported commodities and to see that our main exports change from primary products to finished products and from roughly processed products to finely processed products. We should improve the quality of our exported light and textile industrial products and increase the exports of new food products, machines, and electric equipment. The third task is to further improve the location of production areas for exported commodities. In coastal areas and other places where conditions permit, we should establish various kinds of export commodity bases and factories exclusively for making export products, each with its distinctive characteristics, so that a perfect production system for exported commodities will be established step by step. This is a strategic measure of far-reaching importance for improving the economic results of exports and increasing the competitive edge of our exported commodities. Foreign trade departments should coordinate closely with localities and departments concerned so as to make scientific planning and reasonable overall arrangements (at any time). The fourth task is to open international markets. While continuing to consolidate and develop existing markets, it is necessary to further orient our work toward various countries and regions in the world in order to diversify our export markets. At present, for many products of our country, the profits from exports are less than the profits from domestic sales. This has seriously affected the enthusiasm of export enterprises for promoting production. It is imperative to take truly effective policies and measures to encourage and support in various ways the enterprises making products for export and see to it that those enterprises earning amounts of foreign exchange through the export of their products, and their staff members and workers, receive the real benefits that they deserve.

To sum up, all departments and localities should place increasing their ability to earn foreign exchange through the promotion of exports high on their agendas. They should make all-out efforts to grasp this task firmly and successfully so as to achieve remarkable results. Similarly, all enterprises making products for export should take it as their primary duty and responsibility to expand exports so as to earn more foreign exchange. They should gear their work to the international market and strive to start production of more competitive export products. In particular, the special economic zones and coastal cities and areas open to the outside world should play an even greater role in promoting exports and earning foreign exchange. The special economic zones should advance toward the goal of establishing an externally oriented economy.

Seriously summing up the experience over the past few years and earnestly improving import work is of vital importance to the persistent implementation of the policy of opening to the outside world. We must make rational adjustments in the composition of imported commodities on the principle of bringing about technological advance in our country, raising our foreign exchange-earning ability through the promotion of exports, and using foreign exchange economically. We must persistently emphasize the import of software, advanced technology, and key equipment and strictly control the ordinary processing equipment and consumer durables.

With regard to those products that can be produced domestically under present conditions, we should make positive efforts to develop them and rely basically on domestic production. Imports of production lines for processing and assembly work using foreign-supplied bulk parts, spare parts, and accessories should be subjected to strict scrutiny with a view to restricting their imports and averting duplicate imports. We should make positive efforts to develop substitutes for imported products and strive to raise the level of domestic production. It is imperative to resolutely correct all acts that waste the foregn exchange of our country.

On the basis of increasing foreign exchange income through exports and raising our ability to make payments and to absorb foreign capital, we should, in various ways, appropriately expand the scale of utilization of foreign capital.

In using foreign capital, emphasis should be on such construction projects as energy industry, transportation, telecommunications, supply of raw and semifinished materials, and especially electric power, harbors, and petroleum industry, on technological transformation projects of machine-building, electronics, and other industries, and on developing products for export and making substitutes for imported goods so as to increase our foreign exchange income or economize in the use of foreign exchange.

We should earnestly implement the policies, laws, and regulations related to the use of foreign capital, correctly adhere to the orientation for use of foreign capital, and go all out to improve economic results in this regard.

During the past several years we have carried out a number of initial reform measures in our foreign trade structure and have made some achievements. However, we are still unable to meet the requirements for expanding foreign trade and technological exchange. In the future, we must first pay attention to strengthening and improving macroeconomic control and management and using foreign exchange rates, customs duties, taxes, and other economic measures to promote exports. At the same time, we should reasonably regulate imports and exports by strengthening control over the issuance of import and exports by strengthening control over the issuance of import and export permits, the quota system, and other administrative measures. We should gradually improve centralized management and further whip up the enthusiasm of various localities and departments for increasing exports. We should expand the decision-making powers of export-oriented and foreign trade enterprises and promote direct associations between the principle of integrating production with marketing, integrating industry with foreign trade, and integrating technology with foreign trade in order to promote the further development of our country's foreign trade.

5. We should appropriately determine the scale of raising the people's living standards in accordance with the principle of giving consideration to both production and consumption. During the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we should continue to increase the income of people in urban and rural areas and further improve the people's material and cultural life as we further develop production and increase economic results. We should strive to achieve the goal of raising our citizens' living standards to a prosperous level by the end of this century and develop production in the next 5 years.

The draft plan calls for raising the net income of peasants throughout the country by an average 7 percent each year, and the actual average wage of staff and workers by an average of about 4 percent each year. The toal number of employed people will increase, and the growth rate of the average annual income of urban residents will be higher. Along with the development of the national economy and the increase of people's income, the consumption level of people in urban and rural areas will also further increase. The quality of consumption will further improve accompanied by a greater variety. The scale of increase in consumption level as proposed by the draft plan is basically in line with the scale of increase in the people's average income during the same period.

We must adhere to correct principles and policies, and promote production and the improvement of living conditions in a coordinated manner. For a considerable time in the past we unduly emphasized production and construction work and overlooked people's living conditions. Practice has proven that this not only impedes the improvement of people's living standards but also seriously hampers production and construction work. Since the convocation of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we have firmly corrected this tendency. In the future, we must continue to pay attention to avoiding this unhealthy tendency. China is a socialist country, so we must always attach great importance to improving the people's material and cultural life. At the same time, we must make sure that the improvement of the people's living conditions is based on actual conditions in our country and must do what we can on the basis of the development of production.

Our country has a population of 1 billion people and each year millions of people in cities and towns seek employment. For quite some time to come, the production index and labor productivity will remain at a relatively low level. Our country is at present in a period of building socialist modernization and all construction projects require the accumulation of funds. At this stage of economic growth, should we increase our consumption too fast, we could not avoid reducing the accumulation of funds, raising production costs, lowering the competitiveness of our products, and slowing down the pace of economic development.

Therefore, in raising the people's living standards, we should only rely on our efforts to develop production and not divert funds needed for construction purposes. The consumption growth rate must not exceed the growth rate of production and the rate of increase of staff and workers wages must not exceed the rate of increase of labor productivity. We must continue to carry forward the fine tradition of building our country through thrift and hard work.

As far as the question of distribution in society is concerned, we must continue to implement the policy of permitting a number of people to become rich sooner than others and pay attention to overcoming egalitarianism. At the same time, we should prevent excessive and unreasonable gaps in income among various enterprises and among people in society in order to ensure stability and unity in society and give better expression to the principle of to each according to his work. We must resolutely stop the current practices of competing with each other in wages and benefits and of issuing unwarranted allowances in cash or in kind. We must also strictly control consumption funds and prevent them from rising too fast.

While setting an appropriate speed in the growth of consumption, we should also adopt a correct consumption policy. We should guide the people's consumption in a planned manner and make changes in consumption patterns in line with the character of our society, the conditions of our country's resources, and our national characteristics. Our country has a large population but a relatively weak foundation. For quite a long to come, improvement of people's living conditions cannot be very rapid. We can increase the consumption of meat, poultry, eggs, and other animal food products only gradually. On the question of clothing, we should advocate the use of cotton, chemical fiber, and blend fabrics. We should increase the consumption of pure wool and leather products only if we can do so in an appropriate manner.

Because shortage of electric power supply will continue to last for a long time, we can increase consumption of household electric appliances only in a limited manner and must pay particular attention to controlling the production and import of air conditioners, coolers, and heaters, which consume a great deal of electricity.

Of course, we should continue to constantly improve people's housing conditions. However, we must not set standards too high in terms of space and construction quality. In short, the state must use economic policies, economic levers, and necessary administrative measures to guide the people's consumption in a reasonable manner.

Deputies, in addition to the above-mentioned five points, the draft Seventh 5-Year Plan has, on the basis of serious study, also made appropriate arrangements for regional economic planning, especially for assistance in the development of regions inhabited by people of minority nationalities and economic backward regions, and for cultural and public health work, sports work, population control, social security, and environmental protection. In the next 5 years, we must continue to follow the policy of coordinated development in economic construction and various social activities and make effective plans for those areas. [applause]

III. Reform of the Economic Structure in the Seventh 5-Year Plan

We must correctly implement the various policies for construction and successfully fulfill the various construction tasks in the Seventh 5-Year Plan period. The key lies in continuing the deep-going and meticulous economic structural reform, further promoting economic cooperation among various units, and fully arousing the initiative and creativity of all enterprises and working people. The significance of reforms not limited to the present. More important, it will have a bearing on economic development and prosperity in the 1990's and the complete realization of our country's grand goals within this century. It will also play a decisive role in and have an impact on efforts in approaching and catching up with the economic and technological levels of the developed countries of the world in the first half of the next century.

The various localities, departments, and enterprises must persist in giving priority to reform, promoting reform and construction in a coordinated and complementary manner, and working hard to lay a basic foundation for a lively socialist economy with Chinese characteristics in the next 5 years or so.

The major contents of the economic structural reform during the Seventh 5-Year Plan can be summarized into the following three points:

First, enterprises, especially large and medium-sized state enterprises, should be further invigorated so that they can become relatively independent economic entities, as well as producers and dealers of socialist commodities, with self-management and responsibility for their own profits or losses. In giving enterprises greater decision-making powers in production and management with the aim of imparting on them abilities of accumulation, transformation, and development and of improving and building the capability of self-control and self-restraint, it is necessary to continue to develop various forms of ownership and management while maintaining public ownership as the main aspect, and to continue to adopt, both externally and internally, practical and effective measures, including appropriate reduction of the scale of mandatory plans, exemption from regulatory taxes, raising of depreciation rates, improvement of the plant director's responsibility system, introduction of various economic responsibility stestems, and reform of the wage and bonus system and the labor system of enterprises. Except for a handful of enterprises, the majority should be able to assume responsibility for their own profits or losses. Enterprises that have shown poor management over a protracted period should be reorganized or ordered to shut down, suspend operations, merge with others, or switch to the manufacture of other products in accordance with the principle of survival of the fittest. In order to rationalize the structure of enterprises, special efforts should be made to vigorously encourage lateral economic ties among enterprises on a voluntary and mutually beneficial basis, and to gradually set up diverse forms of association of enterprises at various levels. While continuing to promote reform in all fields, it is necessary to facilitate the rational development of resources, utilization of funds and technology, and disposition productive forces through developing lateral cooperation. It is necessary to surmount obstacles to lateral cooperation by reasonably stipulating the rights and interests of all parties in this cooperation in order to ensure the wholesome development of various associations of enterprises with the support of policies and laws.

Second, the socialist commodity economy should be further developed, and the market system should be gradually improved. It is necessary to continue to reduce the variety and amount of products under state allocation, improve the contract system in purchasing farm and subsidiary products, actively develop commodity circulation covering various regions and departments, gradually set up diverse forms of commerce combining agricultural, industrial, and commerical undertakings, agricultural and commercial undertakings, industrial and commercial undertakings, and diverse trades in commerce, and continuously expand the consumer goods and production means market.

At the same time, it is necessary to systematically develop and establish the funds and technology market and facilitate the rational flow of labor forces. The key to establishing and improving the socialist market system lies in further reforming the pricing system and price management system. The focus of pricing reform during the Seventh 5-Year Plan should be resolving, in a planned and systematic manner, the problem of excessively low prices of production means for energy and raw and semifinished materials so that the disparity between the planned price and market price can be gradually reduced. While readjusting wages, it is also necessary to study and set reasonable rents and market prices for housing in order to facilitate the commercialization of residential housing. In order to encourage service trade undertakings, prices of labor services should be reasonably readjusted. With reform, except for the prices of a very few important products and labor services, which must be set by the state, the prices of most products and labor services should be determined by state guidance or by market regulation, thus brining into better play the regulating role of prices as levers. In the course of pricing reform, it is necessary to continue to adhere to the principles of making steady progress and combining relaxed control with readjustment, to fully consider the capabilities of the state, enterprises, and people to withstand strains, and to make commodity prices generally remain stable.

Third, in establishing a new socialist macroeconomic management system, state supervision over enterprises should be gradually changed from mainly direct to indirect control. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan, it will be necessary to improve various economic and legal means, supplemented by necessary administrative methods, to control and regulate economic activity. State planning should be the primary basis for exercising macroeconomic guidance and control to ensure a healthy development of the state economy. It is necessary to further reform the planning system by appropriately reducing the ratio of mandatory planning, increasing the scope of planning under state guidance and market regulation, and gradually shifting the focus of planning work in the direction of exercising overall management and regulation of the macroeconomy, using mainly economic policies and levers, including pricing, taxation, credit, interest rates, exchange rates, and wages. It is necessary to strengthen the major functions of banks in macroeconomic management, gradually establish a powerful, effective, and flexible system for controlling and regulating banks through reforming the banking system, and bring into full play the role of banks in collecting and circulating funds, guiding the movement of those funds, raising their efficiency, and regulating social needs. It is necessary to further improve the financial and taxation system, clearly define the source of financial revenues and the scope of financial expenditures for central and local governments, according to tax categories, and gradually carry out macroeconomic control at different levels, thereby raising the enthusiasm and sense of responsibility of local governments, especially those of medium-sized cities and above, for exercising effective macroeconomic management.

While carrying out the above reforms, it is necessary to pay close attention to strengthening the system of providing economic information and consulting for making policy decisions, set up and improve various economic regulations and legislation, and replenish and strengthen economic supervisory organs at all levels, in order to ensure healthy economic activities. These three aspects of reform are interrelated organic bodies, inseparable from one another. The first aspect is aimed at granting enterprises necessary decision-making powers and enabling them to use such powers correctly; the second is aimed at making enterprises effectively use an external economic environment with both vitality and pressure; and the third is aimed at helping microeconomic activities of enterprises better meet macroeconomic needs. Reforms in these three aspects should be carried out in a coordinated manner, and should supplement one another. None should be overemphasized or neglected. By conscientiously carrying out reform and gradually establishing a complete mechanism, which organically and properly combines planning with marketing, relaxation of microeconomic activities with control of macroeconomic activities, and centralization with decentralization, we shall be able to more effectively ensure unity of the interests of the state, the collective, and the individual, as well as in the economic growth rate and economic efficiency, and further promote the advances of social forces of production.

In view of the arduous and complex tasks of the comprehensive economic structural reform and the inevitable restriction of that reform by social and economic conditions and the qualifications of cadres, it is impossible to complete the reform in all three aspects during the Seventh 5-Year Plan. What we must do is establish a rough skeleton of the new economic structure and ensure that economic operations enter the orbit of the new system during this period. This requirement is realistic. Through practice over the last few years, we have set a correct goal, principles and policies for reform, and accumulated some experience in that reform. As long as we continue to integrate the pioneering and enterprising spirit with the scientific attitude of seeking truth from facts in doing a solid job, this requirement can materialize through our conscientious efforts.

In order to fulfill the task of reforming the economic structure in the new period, we must have a clearer understanding of some questions singled out here.

1. We must fully understand that reform of the economic structure must be in accord with the needs of the modern socialist commodity economy. The full development of a commodity economy is an indispensable stage in the economic growth of society. In the historical period of socialism, particularly in a socialist country with an underdeveloped economy such as China, it is necessary to vigorously develop the commodity economy in order to realize a highly advanced socialized and commercialized production, speed development of social productive forces and constantly improve the quality of our material and cultural life. This is an objective law, independent of man's will. It makes it mandatory to reform our original, rigid economic system which laid too much stress on centralized control. It also requires that the fundamental orientation of reform must be in line with the need to develop the commodity economy.

Of course, on the whole, the commodity economy we want to develop is a socialist commodity economy. This kind of commodity economy is based on public owernship and is guided by the principle of each according to his work. It is a planned and controlled economy. The decision on reform of the economic structure, adopted at the 3d Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee, clearly stated that socialist economy is a planned commodity economy, based on public ownership. This scientific thesis is reached on the basis of the experience in the practice of socialism in China and in the world, and represents a development of the Marxist theory of socialist economy. It raises the people's comprehension of scientific socialism to a new level. This is of far-reaching historical significance to China's drive for socialist modernization.

We must, in the theoretical field, deepen study of the inherent law of the operation of the socialist commodity economy. In practice, we should actively explore various ways to develop the socialist commodity economy and resolutely change all concepts, regulations, and rules running counter to our development of the socialist commodity economy. Currently, our study of economic theories lags behind our practice of reform and construction, and we are still not good at making a new generalization of our ample practical experience. We must continue to persist in the principle of combining theory with practice, and encourage, both in theory and practice, efforts to boldly explore and display the spirit of pioneering. At the same time, we must also, by discarding the dross and selecting the essence, seriously learn and draw lessons from all advanced experiences in operations and management accumulated by other countries in the world, including developed capitalist countries, experiences reflecting the law of large-scale socialized production to promote the development of China's socialist commodity economy.

In short, as long as we are always clear about this basic understanding throughout the entire course of reform, we shall be able to adhere to the correct orientation for reform and, after arduous practice and exploration, truly establish a socialist economic system with Chinese characteristics, both distinguished from our past rigid or semi-rigid forms and essentially different from capitalism.

2. We must fully understand that the change form an old to a new sytem is a difficult and complicated process. As far as reform in China is concerned, both the death of the old system and the shaping of the new can only a gradual process. Reform is inevitably a process of systematic progress, in which two different systems coexist and mutually influence each other. The new system will play an increasingly greater role in the operations of the economy, but it cannot replace the old system immediately and completely, and a considerable portion of the old system will have to continue to exist and operate for a certain period. That is why various problems will inevitably crop up in the course of reform, and various contradictions and complications will present themselves. Because the new system needs time to mature, while at the same time old system is losing its effectiveness in many areas, macroeconomic control will become more difficult. It will also be difficult for microeconomic regulation to become completely and instantly rational.

Managerial vacuums or loopholes of one kind or another will inevitably occur. Some lawless elements will take advantage of this situation to conduct speculation, graft and embezzlement, bribery, swindling, smuggling, and other criminal activities. Because the reform being carried out will inevitably (?affect) and readjust the existing relations of economic interests, while at the same time new relations of interest cannot be expected to become rational and conform all at once, there will necessarily be conflicts and contradictions between various interests and an unbalanced share of opportunities. Some units and individuals will likely take advantage of such circumstances to seek improper profits for small groups or individuals, at the risk of arousing resentment. Because reform cannot show progress without efforts at exploration, and experience can be accumulated only one step at a time through practice, it is hard to completely avoid making mistakes. Reform is fundamental change, widespread, deep-going, and protracted. It will have an unprecedented impact on existing forms, traditional concepts, and force of habit. In practicing reform, we inevitably undergo a process of gradually adapting to it. It is a very natural, historical phenomenon for different concepts and even opinions to be expressed about the problems cropping up in the course of reform.

These circumstances make it objectively necessary for our leaders at all levels, cadres, and the masses of the people to have a full understanding of the difficulty and complexity of the change from the old to the new sytem. We must be fully ideologically prepared for the emergence of one problem or another in the course of reform. We must never panic over a slight problem, much less abandon reform on account of that problem. On the other hand, when we are actually carrying out the various reforms, we must see to it that there is careful guidance, careful planning, all-out effort, and conscientious practice. We must improve our ability to predict what is going to happen, in order to cut down losses as much as possible and make timely efforts to discover and solve problems found in the course of our work. We should practice, sum up experience, and strive for progress simultaneously.

We should fully understand one fact: Although some problems are unavoidable in the course of reform, it is completed reform and ongoing reform that invigorate our economy, liberate our productive forces, improve the people's living standards, and bring an unprecedentedly prosperous situation in China's modernization. This is the essential aspect and main trend, as well as a fundamental indication that reform conforms to the historical trends and has great vitality. Reform represents the fundamental interests of all people in China. Therefore, we have all the reasons to believe that by persistently carrying out reform, we will surely be able to solve problems emerging in the course of shifting from the old structure to the new structure, and that problems concerning reform can be solved only in the course of constantly furthering and imroving reform. [applause]

In the course of reform, we should fully understand the necessity of considering both immediate and long-term interests, and both partial and overall interests. Whether our reform can proceed smoothly is determined to a great extent by whether or/nor we can properly readjust the relationship between various interests.

Successful solution of this problem will reduce resistance and bring the initiative of all quarters into full play. Otherwise, results will be the opposite. The purpose of our reform of the economic structure is to remove any obstacles to the development of our productive forces, to make our country prosperous, rich, and powerful, and to make the people well-to-do and happy. With the development of production in the course of reform, we should and can bring tangible material benefits to the broad masses. This has been fully proven by our practice in the last few years.

However, we should not expect that reform can immediately bring marked economic benefits to everyone in society; that would be impossible. Many reform measures must be practiced for a certain length of time before they can yield any effect. Some reform measures even require some localities, departments, enterprises, and masses to temporarily sacrifice some of their economic interests, but they will play a great role in our country's long-range economic development and in steadily improving the people's living standards. I hope that all our cadres and masses clearly understand this point, and conscientiously consider both immediate and long-term interests and subordinate immediate to long-term interests. Our reform must reasonably define the powers and interests of localities and departments, and in particular it should give enterprises greater powers and interests in order to bring into better play their initiative, thus invigorating their economy. However, only if we resolutely adhere to and implement the state's macroeconomic policy and ensure coordinated development of the national economy as a whole, can localities, departments, and enterprises correctly exercise their powers, fundamentally guarantee the realization of their interests, and avoid lack of judgment in displaying enthusiasm. For this reason, all localities, departments, and enterprises should conscientiously establish a concept of overall interest. They should never pursue private interests at the expense of overall interests. They may seek partial interests if their action helps promote overall interests.

4. We should fully understand the strict demands set on enterprises by the new situation in reform. In the course of reform in the last few years, we have gradually expanded the decision-making powers of enterprises, and initially changed the situation characterized by unified state purchases and marketing, unified receipts and allocations by the state, and sharing food from the same big pot. We have enhanced the vigor of enterprises while increasing their responsibilities.

With the furthering of the reform, enterprises should constantly increase the extent to which they assume sole responsibility for their profit and loss. It is inevitable that their responsibilities will become heavier, because they must not shirk their responsibility for losses while having the power to handle profits. As the new economic structure becomes operational, the survival and development of enterprises, and the improvement in the material interests of their workers and staff will be determined more and more by their managerial ability and by the results of their operations. This is a rigorous test for all enterprises and their leaders. In the past, we did not sufficiently stress this point. As a result, some people labored under the misconception that reform is just giving enterprises greater power and letting them retain more profits. Under the new situation of overall reform, all enterprises should strengthen their sense of quality and efficiency, of meeting the demands of the market and society, and of making more contributions to the country's prosperity and to the people's well-being. They should constantly improve their management, raise their technological level, stress the quality of products, reduce material consumption, improve their service attitude, and enhance economic efficiency. Otherwise, they will lag behind the situation of reform, or even be overwhelmed by the situation. The leaders, managers, workers, and staff members of enterprises must soberly understand this situation.

I hope that all our leading comrades will conscientiously understand and implement the principles and policies of the party and the state, resolutely rely on the party organizations, workers, and staff members, and make persistent and unremitting efforts to improve the quality of enterprises. I hope that the working class in our country will fully play, to a high degree, their role as masters of their own affairs, constantly enhance their ideological consciousness, improve their scientific and general knowledge, actively participate in democratic enterprise management, comprehensively offer rational suggestions and technological innovations, and make greater contributions to promoting socialist modernization. [applause]

5. We should fully understand the importance of the need for government organizations to change their management functions and improve their work style. In order to meet the demand of reducing state management of enterprises from direct to indirect control, government organizations should accordingly change their economic management functions. Government economic departments at all levels should change their past practice of putting their main efforts into setting targets, approving projects, and dividing funds and materials. They should gradually shift their main efforts to making overall plans, knowing policies, organizing and coordinating, providing service, using economic regulatory means, and strengthening their supervision. With the change in management functions, we should strengthen general economic management departments and economic supervisory organs, properly merging and streamlining specialized management. This is an important component of economic structural reform as a whole and an important condition for promoting and consolidating other economic reforms, as well as a major change in the socialist superstructure.

Staff members of government organizations at all levels must fully understand the need for, and historical significance of, the change, conscientiously adapt themselves to it, enhance their ideological understanding, and improve their vocational skills, working methods and work style. They should seriously study basic Marxist theories, economic and other specialized knowledge. They should go down to grass-roots units, immerse themselves among the masses, conduct investigation and study, enhance their ability to make decisions scientifically, and deal with problems. They must resolutely do away with bad bureaucratic habits, stop wrangling and empty talk, take action, and strive to improve working efficiency. Because loopholes are unavoidable during the shift from the old to the new economic structure, government personnel must raise their political awareness even further, abide by the law and discipline, be honest in performing their official duties, be faithful in the discharge of their duties, conscientiously protect the interests of the state and society, and serve the people wholeheartedly. [applause]

6. We should fully understand the role of a more effective legal system in enhancing and ensuring reform. To expedite a healthy development in socialist modernization, we must properly handle two things, namely simultaneously carrying out reform and construction and improving the socialist legal system. As economic reform and the national economy continue to develop, there is the growing need to codify into law the norms governing the ever-expanding economic relations and activities, and make these laws an important means for regulating economic relations and activities. An important aspect of building a new socialist economic system lies primarily in controlling and regulating economic operations by economic and legal means, as well as the necessary administrative measures. One of the important purposes of making the socialist legal system more effective is to expedite reform, ensure sound development, and consolidate achievements. Over the past few years, the National People's Congress and its Standing Committee have drawn up a series of important laws; the State Council has also drawn up a series of essential administrative rules and regulations. In the future, all types of legislative work, especially economic legislation, will be intensified, and every effort should be exerted to set up a relatively sound legal system in the economic sector during the Seventh 5-Year Plan, so that there will be laws to guide all types of economic activity.

A current outstanding problem lies in the fact that it is still quite common for work not to be done according to law. For example, (?it must be emphasized that) any organization or individual must obey whatever laws have been promulgated for implementation, and never should the implementation be affected because of a change leadership or a shift in attention. Governments at all levels and their staff members must consciously accept the supervision of the people, people's congresses at all levels, and their standing committees. At the same time, they must obey and enforce laws without fail. [applause] Reform-related projects are numerous during the Seventh 5-Year Plan. We must continue to carry forward the exploratory spirit and march forward courageously. In practice, we must do out work carefully, thoroughly, and meticulously, and consider its ramifications to ensure sound development of reform.

IV. Uphold an Independent and Peaceful Foreign Policy

China's Seventh 5-Year Plan is a program for peaceful development that engages the whole people in working singlemindedly for socialist modernization. To successfully implement this program and accelerate China's modernization drive, we must continue to uphold an independent and peaceful foreign policy, and strive for a prolonged peaceful international environment. The present international situation is turbulent and disturbing. The questions of primary concern to the people of all countries are safeguarding peace and developing the economy. The arms race and regional rivalry between the superpowers are the major threats to world peace and the security of all countries.

The resumption of dialogue and disarmament talks between the United States and the Soviet Union is a welcome development. However, what the people of the world expect of the United States and the Soviet Union are not their rhetoric of peace and disarmament, but practical actions that are truly conducive to peace and disarmament. Both of them should give up their pursuit of military supremacy and cease their aggression and intervention against other countries.

The Chinese people are concerned about the grim situation in the Asian-Pacific region and particularly the hot spots of Cambodia and Afghanistan, which have a direct bearing on China's own security. We have consistently held that foreign forces should withdraw from Cambodia and Afghanistan completely, and that the people in those countries should solve their own problems free from outside interference.

Because of the confrontation and rivalry between the superpowers, the danger of a world war still exists, and we must maintain necessary vigilance against this danger. It is a comfort to note that more countries are determined to hold their destiny in their own hands and reject the superpowers' manipulation. They have actively carried out activities to promote world peace and development. The large number of Third World countries, including China, and the broadly based Nonaligned Movement constitute a major force for safeguarding peace. The European countries, Japan, and other developed countries in Oceania are also in favor of peace and opposed to war. The people of the entire world desire peace ardently. We deeply believe that through the joint efforts of the people and the forces of peace, world peace can be maintained. We are optimists. Although the road ahead is tortuous, the future of the world is full of promise. [applause]

China has scored great diplomatic successes in the past 5 years. We have further consolidated and developed friendship and cooperation with many countries in all parts of the world. China's economic, trade, and technical exchanges and cooperation with all countries have been expanding. Cultural contacts and exchanges in other fields have also constantly increased.

Based on the idea of "one country , two systems," we have, through negotiations with Britain, successfully settled the Hong Kong question, left to us by history, thereby giving a big push toward the grand goal of the motherland's reunification and providing a new experience for settling disputes between countries. We have upheld principles, acted in good faith, matched our words with deeds, and remained open and aboveboard in foreign affairs. This has raised our international status and prestige, and has won us more friends. We can say that China has opened a new situation in foreign affairs, and it now finds itself in the best period since the founding of New China. [applause]

China's progress in foreign affairs is inseparable from the political stability and unity, fruitful reform, as well as the all-round steady economic development at home. It is also inseparable from the well-timed readjustments, reinforcement, and improvement in our foreign policy made in keeping with the objective developments in the international situation.

The main contents and basic principles of the foreign policy we uphold in maintaining independence and keeping the initiative in our own hands consist of the following 10 aspects:

1. Proceeding as it does from the fundamental long-term interests of its own people and the people of the whole world, China takes as the basic objective of its foreign policy to oppose hegemonism, maintain world peace, develop friendly cooperation with other countries, and promote common economic prosperity.

2. China holds that all countries in the world, big or small, rich or poor, strong or weak, should be treated as equals. It is firmly opposed to the big bullying the small, the rich oppressing the poor, and the strong dominating the weak. The affairs of a country should be managed by its own people, and the affairs of the world should be managed by all countries in consultation, and not by one or two superpowers having the final say. China itself will never seek hegemony and it resolutely opposes hegemonism, no matter who practices it and no matter what form it takes.

3. At all times and under all circumstances China will act independently, determining its own attitudes and policies on all world issues on the merits of each case. The criterion by which China judges whether an act is right or wrong is whether it helps to maintain world peace, develop friendly cooperation among nations, and promote world prosperity.

4. China will never attach itself to any superpower, or enter into alliance or strategic relations with either of them. China continues to seek the steady development of Sino-U.S. relations on the basis of strict adherence to the principles established in the joint communiques between China and the United States, and a true improvement in Sino-Soviet relations through the removal of the three obstacles by concrete actions.

5. China stands by the five principles of mutual respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity, mutual nonaggression, noninterference in each other's internal affairs, equality and mutual benefit, and peaceful coexistence. On the basis of these five principles, China strives to establish, resume and expand normal relations with all countries in the world, and to live in harmony and engage in friendly cooperation with them. China does not determine its closeness with or estrangement from other countries on the basis of their social systems and ideologies. China firmly opposes any country's using identity or difference of social system and ideology as an excuse to occupy the territory of others and to interfere in their internal affairs. China firmly opposes terrorist activities of all descriptions and believes that this problem can only be solved once for all by eliiminating the social and political root causes of terrorism.

6. China belongs to the Third World. A basic principle of its foreign policy is to strengthen its solidarity and cooperation with the Third World. China resolutely opposes imperialism, colonialism, and racism and supports Third World countries in their just struggle to achieve and safeguard national independence. It supports them in their efforts to develop their national economies, improve North-South relations, and further South-South cooperation. China earnestly hopes that Third World countries will strengthen their unity and settle their disputes peacefully through friendly consultations, so as to prevent the interference of outside forces.

7. China opposes the arms race and its extension to outer space. At the time of its first nuclear test, China proposed the complete prohibition and thorough destruction of nuclear weapons and declared that at no time and under no circumstances would China be the first to use such weapons. Today, it is of capital importance that the two superpowers should take the lead by drastically cutting back their nuclear arsenals, thus creating favorable conditions for nuclear disarmament by all nuclear countries. China is also in favor of the complete prohibition and thorough destruction of chemical weapons, and the substantial reduction of conventional arms along with nuclear disarmament.

8. China persists in a long-term policy of opening to the outside world and will continue to expand its economic, trade, and technological contacts and cooperation with other countries on the basis of equality and mutual benefits. China pursues a policy of opening to all countries. It not only opposes capitalist...[correcting himself] it is open to capitalist as well as socialist countries and to developed nations as well as the large number of developing countries.

9. In keeping with purposes and principles set forth in the UN charter, China supports the work undertaken by the United Nations in the spirit of the charter and participates in the activities for world peace and development sponsored by the organization and its specialized agencies. China has joined a wide range of international organizations, actively engages in multilateral diplomacy, and strives to promote international cooperation in all fields.

10. China attaches great importance to contacts among people of different countries. To further mutual understanding and friendship among the people of the world, the Chinese Government encourages mass organizations, nongovernmental associations, and people from all walks of life to have contacts with those of other countries and supports cooperation between them in the economic, cultural, educational, scientific, and technological fields and in matters relating to the press, public health, and sports.

All these are basic principles of China's foreign policy.

China's domestic and foreign policies are an organic identity. Construction is unitary and inseparable from peace. Likewise reform is inseparable from opening the country to the outside, and the maintenance of China's national dignity from the principle that all countries, big or small, should be treated as equals in international affairs.

China is a developing socialist country. It is also a large nation with over one billion people. We fully understand our due international obligations and the responsibilities which we must shoulder. On our two fronts, both at home and abroad, we must keep on working harder than ever to continuously develop China's socialist modernization drive and make even greater contributions to world peace and to promoting the progress of mankind. [applause]

Deputies: The goal of the Seventh 5-Year Plan is a magnificent one. The tasks, although formidable, can be accomplished by hard work. This plan has shown us an encouraging, bright future. When this plan has been accomplished, we can, by and large, bring economic relations in various sectors into better balance, basically bring the economic system onto a new track, significantly increase our country's economic strength and upgrade its scientific and technological level, and make major headway in modernizing the national economy as a whole, and the living standard of the people in the nation's urban and rural areas will be further improved. Then, we shall be able to achieve a quicker prosperity in the 1990's, and our great goals can be achieved more surely by the end of this century. [applause]

This is the first year of the implementation of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Successful reform and construction in 1986 will be of the utmost significance in achieving a good beginning for the Seventh 5-Year Plan. The basic requirements for this year are: Regarding reforms, we should continue to consolidate, assimilate, replenish and improve the various reform projects started in 1985, conduct thorough investigation and study, and draw up plans, to be fully prepared for carrying out new and important reforms in the next 2 years. Regarding construction, we should continue to control overall social needs, work hard to improve supply, and continue to enliven production and distribution work. We must continue to guard against thoughtless expansion of construction, but maintain the necessary normal speed of construction on the basis of achieving better qaulity and economic returns, and strive to ensure the needs of key construction projects and renovate our enterprises' technology. We must adopt firm and effective measures to promote exports and conserve our foreign exchange, and make an effort to achieve a basic balance in foreign exchange receipts and expenditures. In light of these requirements, the State Council has drafted the 1986 National Economic and Social Development Plan, which is hereby presented to you deputies for deliberation.

We must emphatically point out here that, throughout the historical stage of socialism, we must intensify socialist spiritual construction as well as socialist material construction. This is our established, long-range strategic principle. In implementing the 1986 plan or in achieving the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we must firmly uphold the principle of carrying out spiritual and material construction at the same time. We must fully understand that economic work is our central task, and that ideological and political work guarantees its normal and healthy development. As our economic work improves and becomes livelier and after our nation has opened to the outside world, our people have broadened their field of vision and become more capable and knowledgeable about new ideas and modern concepts. Inevitably, however, certain negative and unhealthy ideas have also wormed their way into our country. Under the conditions of restructuring the economic system, opening to the outside world and enlivening the economy, ideological work must be conducted in a new way and under a new form so that it can keep up with the needs of the new situation, thus giving fuller play to its role. If we relax or weaken ideological work, our economic work will go astray.

We must fully develop our socialist commodity economy and persist in opening to the outside world; but we must firmly resist the inroads of decadent capitalist ideas and life style, as well as bourgeois liberal thinking. We must continue to give play to the role and acts of putting money above everything else or seeking private gains at the expense of public interests. By commending and publicizing the exemplary deeds of advanced personages and units as well as using other lively means, we should educate the broad masses of cadres and people on patriotism and collectivism, and on the need to uphold the four cardinal principles, to have lofty ideals, ethics, a sense of discipline and education, to foster the lofty communist ideals and to be conscious of public and professional ethics; and we should arouse their enthusiasm in dedicating themselves to building socialism. Government organs at all levels should set an example in intensifying socialist spiritual construction and in combating all unhealthy practices.

The broad masses of personnel of our government organs at all levels work hard to serve the people. They have worked actively and selflessly for reforms and have achieved significant successes. While the mainstream is good, certain serious irregularities have indeed appeared in some localities and units. Some have violated the regulations, taking advantage of their power to engage in trade and other commercial work; some have engaged in smuggling, trade in smuggled goods, and blackmailing; some have made pleasure trips or sent people abroad at public expense; and because of some people's serious bureaucratic attitude and malfeasance, they have incurred great losses in production and construction. We must firmly combat these misdeeds, which have tarnished the prestige of our government organs and corrupted society, naturally evoking complaints and indignation among the masses. Leading authorities must take the initiative in combating unhealty practices, and the task should begin with leading organs and leading cadres at all levels, especially among the central leading organs and senior cadres. They should set strict requirements for themselves and set examples with practical deeds. Cadres who have made mistakes should be criticized and educated, and those who have neglected their duties must have their responsibilities investigated. Those whose serious derelection of duty has constituted malfeasance, those who are involved in economic crimes or have committed other crimes, those who have bent the law for their own interests, and those who have harbored felons must be punished according to law. Without exception, their illegal income shall be confiscated.

We must effectively intensify ideological and political work among cadres at all levels and help them understand that, under new historical conditions, resisting and combating unhealthy practices and eradicating corruption is a long-term struggle against decadent bourgeois ideas and residual feudalistic thinking; it is also a new test for each and every cadre. We must encourage the good habit of supporting righteousness and condemn evil, commend and encourage the good cadres who firmly combat unhealth practices, firmly support those good comrades who dare to uphold principles and enforce law impartially. All acts of dealing blows, retaliation, slander, and framing must be handled seriously. While striving to achieve quick and noticeable successes in combating unhealthy practices, we must firmly strike at serious economic crimes and criminal offenses, intensify overall control of public order, and strive to achieve a fundamental improvement of social conduct as quickly as possible so as to create a better social environment favorable to socialist modernization.

PLA commanders, fighters, public security cadres, and policemen are defenders and builders of our socialist motherland. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan, while valiantly safeguarding the security of the motherland, the PLA kept overall interests in mind and scored tremendous achievements in carrying out reduction-in-strength reorganization; stepping up its revolutionization, modernization, and regularization; and playing an active role in building the socialist material and spiritual civilizations. Vast numbers of public security cadres and policemen made great efforts to safeguard social order and public security. It is hoped that during the Seventh 5-Year Plan, the PLA and the public security cadres and policemen will continue to carry forward their glorious and fine traditions and contribute even more to safeguarding and building the motherland. [applause]

China's Seventh 5-Year Plan embodies the fundamental interests of the people of all nationalities of our country, including compatriots in Hong Kong, Macao, and Taiwan as well as Overseas Chinese. Its smooth implementation will, no doubt, provide a powerful impetus to the sacred cause of rejuvenating China and reunifying the motherland. Taiwan is an inalienable sacred territory of the motherland. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we must continue to make joint efforts with our Taiwan compatriots and all descendants of the Yellow Emperor in supporting reunification of the motherland and actively promoting contacts and cooperation in diverse fields between the two sides of the strait. We must strive unremittingly for the peaceful reunification of the motherland according to the concept of one country, two systems. [applause]

People of all nationalities in the country, including workers, peasants, intellectuals, the vast numbers of cadres, PLA commanders and fighters, and public security cadres and policemen, as well as all democratic parties, people's organizations, nonparty democratic personages, and all laborers and patriots who warmly love the socialist motherland: Let us unite more closely under the leadership of the Communist Party of China, carry forward the hard-working pioneering spirit of the foolish old man who removed the mountains, and strive together for the successful fulfillment of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. [prolonged applause]

NPC DEPUTIES DISCUSS DRAFT SEVENTH 5-YEAR PLAN

OW271634 Beijing XINHUA in English 1605 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 27 (XINHUA) — The draft Seventh Five-Year Plan worked out by the State Council is realistic and practical. This seems to be the consensus among deputies to the current session of the National People's Congress (NPC). The nearly 3,000 NPC deputies have been discussing Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the draft 1986-1990 plan since Wednesday afternoon when the session broke into panels. Many deputies told XINHUA today they found Zhao's assessment of the Sixth Five-Year Plan -- with its achievements and its problems -- an accurate representation of their own experiences in China's cities and countryside.

Zhou Gucheng, vice-chairman of the NPC Standing Committee and a professor at Shanghai's Fudan University, called the new draft plan practical and appropriate becuase it was developed by people who had learned the lessons of the accomplishments and mistakes in the Sixth Five-Year Plan.

Sun Jiazheng, deputy secretary of the Jiangsu Provincial Communist Party Committee, said that the achievements scored in the past five years have not only laid a solid material groundwork for the new five-year plan, but also have provided rich and invaluable experiences. Most important, he said, is that we have learned we must deepen the economic restructuring even though there might be some undesirable results. Other party leaders have said the greater economic autonomy allowed by the reform program has produced successes far more significant than attendant problems of wealth disparity and anti-social behavior. Sun said Zhao's report to the NPC on the draft plan demonstrates the determination needed to push through the reform.

Deputies also seemed pleased with the projected economic growth rate set by the Seventh Five-Year Plan -- an average 6.7 percent a year.

Han Zheyi, a deputy from Shanghai and vice-chairman of the NPC Financial and Economic Committee, called the projected growth rate simultaneously active and steady. The draft plan, he said, shows we have learned from the excessively rapid growth of early 1985, which gave rise to some destabilizing economic effects -- including imbalances in resource allocation and tha inability of the country's facilities to make use of some of the growth.

According to Zhao Jun, vice-chairman of the Tianjin Municipal People's Congress Standing Committee, the draft plan for economic growth will help improve product quality and economic efficiency, and ensure the steady growth of China's economy.

Batubagen, a Mongolian and chairman of the Standing Committee of the Inner Mongolia Autonomous Region's People's Congress, said the plan presents a far-sighted blueprint for economic and social development which will enable people of all nationalities to advance toward common prosperity.

Deputies interviewed said they supported Premier Zhao's conclusion that the key to fulfillment of the draft plan's goals is continued intensive and systematic restructuring of the economy.

That is the only way China's economy can meet the requirements set by the draft plan, said Li Zhen, chairman of the Shandong Provincial People's Congress Standing Committee. And it's a very practical problem. Li said he had toured the country before coming to Beijing for the NPC annual session. People I talked to were for the reforms, he said. But some people need to be helped in their understanding of the matter, he added. For example, some people see the reform only as an opportunity to increase their income. They don't think about how it will release productive forces and expand the economy.

Government officials themselves need to learn more about the reform, said Chen Dingmao, 64, former deputy director of the Beijing motor vehicle plant. Many officials need more political awareness and they need to improve their performance, he said.

Li Qizu, a factory director in Tianjin, said the reform enabled his bicylce factory to release output by 16.5 percent last year over the year before. Sure there are problems cropping up because of the reform, he said. But I think they have to do with the fact that old and new economic systems are opearting at the same time and patience is needed for the kinks to be worked out.

NPC Vice-Chairman Rong Yiren said he was critical of those looking out only for themselves, of people who intend to reap fat profits by taking advantage of the weak links of the reform.

Bai Jiefu, an advisor to the Beijing municipal government, said he believed the overwhelming majority of the pouplation supports the reform. They won't allow anyone to take advantage of others for long by trying to increase any ill-gotten wealth. Bai said he was particularly pleased by Premier Zhao's stress on getting rid of bureaucracy and corruption in the government.

Plan Highlights, Part Five

["Highlights of Seventh Five-Year Plan (5)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, March 28 (XINHUA) -- Output of China's primary energy (coal, petroleum, natural gas and hydropower) will be equivalent to 991 million tons of standard coal by 1990, according to the draft Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-1990). This is 160 million tons more than last year's output, and will represent an average annual increase of 3.6 percent. Energy-saving measures will conserve 100 million tons of standard coal during the five-year period.

Part Six

["Highlights of Seventh Five-Year Plan (6)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, March 28 (XINHUA) -- China's electricity output will rise 6.2 percent annually over the next five years, to reach 550 billion kwh by 1990, according to the draft Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-90). This will be 142.7 billion kwh more than in 1985.

Work will begin on thermal power plants and hydroelectric power stations with a total generating capacity of 60 to 65 million kw during the 1986-90 period. Generating units with a total capacity of 30 to 35 million kw are expected to go into operation during the same period. Meanwhile, a 1,090-km D.C. power transmission line will be erected between Gezhouba in Hubei Province and Shanghai, the country's biggest manufacturing center.

Part Seven

["Highlights of Seventh Five-Year Plan (7)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, March 28 (XINHUA) -- China will produce one billion tons of coal in 1990 -- 150 million more than in 1985 -- according to the draft Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-90). This means an annual average increase of 3.3 percent over the next five years. During that period, development work will start on new mines which are expected to produce a total of 318 million tons a year: and mines with a total annual production capacity of 167 million tons will go into operation.

Part Eight

OW280236 Beijing XINHUA in English 0222 GMT 28 Mar 86

["Highlights of Seventh Five-Year Plan (8)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, March 28 (XINHUA) -- China will pump out 150 million tons (1.05 billion bbl) of crude oil in 1990 -- 25 million tons (175 million bbl) more than in 1985, according to the draft Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-90). The draft projects an annual average increase of 3.7 percent over the next five years.

Meanwhile, natural gas output is expected to reach 15 billion cubic meters by 1990, 2.14 billion cubic meters more than last year -- an annual average rise of 3.1 percent.

Over the next five years, the development of new oil wells will push up production capacity by 60 million tons (420 million bbl), and newly developed natural gas wells will add three billion cubic meters.

Part Nine

OW280244 Beijing XINHUA in English 0230 GMT 28 Mar 86

["Highlights of Seventh Five-Year Plan (9)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, March 28 (XINHUA) -- Here are the 1990 output quotas for major raw material and semi-finished products in the draft of China's Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-90):

-- steel, 55 to 58 million tons, up 17.9 to 24.3 percent from 1985.
-- rolled steel, 44 to 46.5 million tons, up 19.6 to 26.4 percent.
-- chemical fertilizers, 16.3 million tons, up 22.1 percent
-- soda ash, 3.5 million tons, up 75 percent.
-- ethylene, 1.2 to 1.4 million tons, up 84.3 to 115 percent.
-- timber, 68.18 to 72 million cubic meters, up eight to 14 percent.

According to the draft plan, over the next five years China will increase its steel-making capacity by 15 million tons, iron-smelting, 12 million tons, steel rolling, 14.5 million tons and iron ore mining, 42 million tons. Ethylene production capacity to be added will total 930,000 tons, soda ash, 2.6 million tons and timber, 3.04 million cubic meters.

MONEY ALLOCATED FOR 925 PROJECTS IN 7TH PLAN

[Text] Beijing, March 28 (XINHUA) -- China will spend 200 billion yuan on 925 major development projects in 1986-90, according to the draft 1986-90 plan being considered by delegates to the on-going National People's Congress session. The projects, up from the 890 of the Sixth Five-Year Plan (1981-1985), are designed to help ensure steady economic growth in the coming five years and prepare for further advances of the economy in the 1990s, according to the State Planning Commission, which prepared the draft development plan for the NPC. The proposed 200 billion yuan allocation would constitute two-fifths of China's investment in capital construction over the next five years, the commission said.

About 70 percent of the projects -- and the money to fund them -- would involve energy, raw materials, transportation and postal and telecommunication services, key elements of the national economy. Among the projects proposed for the next five years are iron and steel plants, power plants and generating stations, coal mines, cement works, ethylene plants, ports, and railroad electrification projects. Work on 571 of the 925 projects was begun during the last five-year plan period (1981-85), while work on the rest would begin over the next five years. Nearly half of the projects would be completed by 1990, according to the draft plan.

Geographically, the commission said, the majority of the key projects would be located in eastern China, the most economically developed and technologically advanced region of the country.

According to the draft Seventh Five-Year Plan, generating units installed in 1986-90 would have a total capacity of 30,000 to 35,000 megawatts. Coal mines put into operation in the same period would have 167 million tons in production capacity. Planned new oil wells in the period will have a combined pumping capacity of 60 million tons. And 15 million tons of steel-making capacity and 14.5 million tons of rolled steel milling capacity would be added. China undertook a total of 890 large and medium-sized projects in 1986-90 and 496 were completed and put into operation.

FOREIGN TRADE PROSPECTS DEEMED FAVORABLE FOR PLAN

OW271230 Beijing XINHUA in English 1205 GMT 27 Mar 86

["News Analysis: China Faces Major Export Challenge" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, March 27 (XINHUA correspondent Chen Ming) -- China faces a big challenge over the next five years to boost exports in a world where international markets are suffering from sluggish demand, falling prices and keen competition. Plunging oil prices have made matters worse for China's foreign exchange earnings, and while Chinese businesses face a buyer's market overseas, big demand at home has created a seller's market -- attracting potential exporters. However, foreign trade officials here remain confident that measures being introduced to strengthen exports will enable the country to reach its 1990 foreign trade targets.

Premier Zhao Ziyang told the Fourth Session of the Sixth National People's Congress on Tuesday that by 1990, China's foreign trade should be worth 83 billion U.S. dollars -- 40 percent more than last year's figure. The targets for the draft Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-1990) are for imports to increase to 45 billion dollars by 1990, averaging an annual growth of 6.1 percent, and for exports to rise to 38 billion dollars, averaging an annual growth of eight percent.

Officials in the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade said China plans to boost invisible foreign exchange earnings from things such as contracted schemes and labor services for other countries, tourism, transport, telecommunications, banking and insurance. China plans to increase exports to Japan, the United States and West European countries to reduce its trade deficit, according to these officials. Meanwhile, it will continue to resume and develop trade ties with the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe and step up trade with Third World countries in the forms of barter, entrepot trade and multilateral trade.

Chinese officials point out that China has many advantages in developing its foreign trade. It has fundamentally improved its financial and economic situation and ensured a steady growth of agricultural and industrial production. China's exports in the first two months of this year increased by 17.1 percent over the same period last year, and this, in the view of foreign trade officials, is an encouraging sign. Since exports earn more than 80 percent of the country's total foreign exchange revenue, Foreign Trade Ministry officials stress that it is essential to meet the export target set in the draft Seventh Five-Year Plan.

The following measures are being taken in a bid to meet the target:

-- to encourage the production of export commodities by using such economic levers as prices, exchange rates, taxes and credits:

-- to step up the establishment and improvement of export-oriented centers manufacturing machinery and electrical products, textiles and light industrial goods, and farm and sideline produce, and raise the quality and competitiveness of these products:

-- to build and improve a system of sales promotion and service network abroad and promote business exchanges with foreign companies:

-- to further reform the country's foreign trade structure by giving more enterprises the powers to conduct business directly with foreign firms.

PLAN EARMARKS FUNDS TO AID UNDERDEVELOPED AREAS

OW280954 Beijing XINHUA in English 0935 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 28 (XINHUA) -- China will spend 800 million yuan this year to develop its poorest areas, according to the draft of the state budget for 1986. The draft, being considered by the annual session of the National People's Congress here, would target aid to those areas -- primarily in the west -- where people cannot yet feed and clothe themselves without government support. Between 1980 and 1985, the government spent 3.2 billion yuan on its most underdeveloped areas, according to the Ministry of Finance. The state began to earmark funds in the budget for the underdeveloped areas in 1980. The special funds amounted to 500 million yuan each year between 1980 and 1983, and 600 million yuan in 1984 and 1985.

These funds have built highways, reservoirs and other water conservation projects to supply safe drinking water for local people and animals. They have also been used to improve irrigation facilities, plant trees and anchor dunes to restore ecological balance. For the most part scattered throughout western China, the underdeveloped areas include border areas, areas inhabited by ethnic groups and remote mountain areas. Because of their natural and social histories, these areas have been plagued by lack of communications facilities, backward economies and poor living standards since before the founding of New China in 1949.

According to the draft Seventh Five-Year Plan, the government over the next five years would increase its efforts to aid these areas with economic and cultural development programs. Including funds for economic construction in border areas and other subsidies, total assistance this year alone is expected to be three billion yuan.

HONGQI ASSERTS 'NO DECLINE' IN LU XUN'S WORKS

HK270927 Beijing HONGQI in Chinese No 6, 16 Mar 86 p 47

[Article by Chu Shaobai: "Will Theories Lead to a 'Decline' in Creative Work?"]

[Text] Some people say that Lu Xun's essays symbolize the "decline in Lu Xun's artistic creations." This "decline," they say, was caused by his "increasing tendency toward rationalism." In other words, Lu Xun's "artistic temperament (fervor) decreased" and his "philosophical temperament (thought) increased," and this led to a "decline" in his work which is characterized by "being dull and rigid." It is indiscreet of them to make such remarks!

Lu Xun, a great writer, thinker, and revolutionary, erected a monument to the history of modern China's culture and left valuable spiritual wealth for us. Essays are the most important part of Lu Xun's works. Lu Xun's essays embody the fine cultural tradition of the Chinese nation, give expression to the spirit of the new era, and will influence people for several generations. His essays still have a strong artistic appeal and play an important role in educating people. His essays reflect storms in the revolutionary struggle and have blazed a new era in terms of writing style. The profoundness of thought and exquisiteness of art in his essays are without parallel. In the "Preface to 'Collection of Lu Xun's Random Thoughts,'" Qu Qiubai said: "This collection embodies the history of ideological struggle in China since the May 4th Movement. Random thoughts, as a type of writing, will, because of Lu Xun, become a synonym for artistic (Freudian) theory."

Readers of Lu Xun's works understand that, as Lu Xun himself said on many occasions, he believed in the theory of evolution in his early years and that his early works were markedly affected by this theory. Lu Xun's acceptance of the theory of evolution as advanced thought in the ideological field did not lead to a decline in his creative fervor. In his later years, Lu Xun "corrected" his "bias toward the theory of evolution" and began to "seek knowledge from fundamental and practical social sciences." In the practice of the Chinese revolution, he gradually familiarized himself with Marxism and learned how to observe society and life with dialectical materialism. Bursting with youthful vigor, he continued to improve his work. His work (mainly essays) in his remaining years was more profound and convincing, with a higher degree of proficiency that led to an entirely new period. All these are irrefutable facts. How can we ignore them? How can we interpret to Lu Xun's familiarization with Marxism as his "increasing tendency toward rationalism" that brought about a "decline" in creative work? Taking the attitude of respecting objective facts, we might as well say that when a writer deviates from the guidance of correct theories (including progressive ideas in history), the influence of erroneous theories and ideas will certainly lead his works to a decline or even to moral corruption, and he will take the evil road. There have been many such examples, in the past and at present.

The above views seem to uphold creative work, but in reality they are harmful to creative work. These wrong views were refuted by Lu Xun long ago. I am of the opinion that although deprecatory remarks about Lu Xun are not numerous and their influence is not difficult to escape, such deprecation involves the major principled issue of whether Marxist theory should be applied to creative work. For this reason we must treat this problem carefully.

INTERVIEW EXAMINES QUESTION OF CREATIVE PURSUITS

[Article by reporter Bai Sheng: "A Creator's Pursuit -- Interview With Zong Shaolu [1350 4801 6922], an Expert in Missile Guidance"]

[Excerpts] Sitting face to face with me was Zong Shaolu. Although over 50, he is still not very good at talking. I could really get very little from him when I asked him about himself. "Could you say something about your accomplishments in scientific research, please?" I had to ask the question a second time. "I'm working in a research center under the Ministry of Astronautics Industry. I haven't done much work." He was not answering the point of my question!

Since he graduated from the automatic control department of Tsinghu University in 1959 and first came contact with the Ministry of Astronautics Industry, Zong Shaolu has thought very little of his own personal fame and interests, but he has been very vigorous in his work. He has always been willing to remain behind the scenes. Now there is no denying the fact that Zong Shaolu has contributed his creative work to China's successful guided missile nuclear weapon test on 27 October 1966; the launch of the carrier rocket in the Pacific on 18 May 1980, and the launch of the experimental telecommunications satellite on 8 April 1984. The missile guidance plan designed by this senior engineer and his colleagues has been acknowledged as China's own and an advanced one, having made some theoretical breakthroughs.

Zong Shaolu, the missile guidance expert who has made outstanding contributions to China's space undertakings has always concentrated his mind on the vastness of space, but his living quarters are so small. When I visited his home, I found a shabby room, with five people, the young and old of three generations, crowded into it. Zong Shaolu has obtained very little "space." However, he has gained "time." He said, "I can't afford the time to apply for larger living quarters or to get a desk. To get them, you have to find connections, and I am not willing to land myself in distress over trifles."

I asked what forces have supported you to work so hard? He smiled, and said: "Ordinary people do not quite understand what we scientists and technicians are thinking about. China has spent 2 decades doing research in planning the rocket guidance system. At first, we were rather backward in science and technology, and the gaps were wide in the electronic industry, high-precision processing, and electronic computer technology, compared with world advanced levels. But missile guidance requires accuracy in hitting the target, and a satellite must enter orbit accurately and that was really a problem. To solve it, we couldn't possibly follow foreign ways; we had to take our own road. This pressed us to think and to explore, and to overcome a series of unimaginable difficulties -- it is the spirit of being unwilling to lag behind that has spurred us on!"

Over the past 2 decades and more, he has written many high-level research reports, and edited many papers for academic journals. However, he has rarely made public appearances because of his work. On several occasions, I asked about his work accomplishments but he always avoided the topic. In fact, he has rendered many meritorious services to China's space industry.

So I changed the topic: "It's said that between 1980 and 1982, when you went abroad as a visiting scholar researching on a space project, you mentioned your wish to become a CPC member to the party organization, didn't you?"

Zong paused for a while and said: "Yes. However, it was not in 1980, but in 1961 that I first sent in my application for party membership. During the past 2 decades and more, I have sent in a dozen applications. It's to my regret that I have not been up to the standards. But I am not depressed. I am always doing my best, so that I may become one some day."

Thus, I concluded the interview with Zong, and left the research center. On my way back, I was thinking about him and his deeds, and I lost my peace of mind. How to view the pursuit of a creator? How to help a creator realize his pursuit? I was lost in deep meditation.

Commentator's Article

[Commentator's article: "Creating Conditions for Creators"]

[Text] Pursuing acomplishments in one's profession in order to make contributions to the motherland and refraining from the pursuit of personal fame while being willing to dedicate all one has to a cause: these are the fine qualities of China's socialist intellectuals. Today this paper carries a report about Zong Shaolu, a missile guidance expert, who is one of these outstanding intellectuals. In Lu Xun's words, Zong has worked like a cow: it takes in hay, but it yields milk and meat.

He lives in a shabby room, but his heart is flying in space. Observing Zong Shaolu's circumstances we find them really heartbreaking. All three generations of his family are crowded into a very "narrow" space. However, the space industry in which he is engaged is vast and infinite. Here is his explanation of this: Despite the smallness of "space" of our living quarters, "time" is gained. And time is so precious for him. He is not willing to waste his time on obtaining bigger living quarters or a desk, but he will forget about sleep and food for the state's space undertakings, dedicating all his energy.

The most important thing is to understand the intellectuals. When you understand them, you will do your best to create conditions for the cause to which they have dedicated themselves.

Today, many intellectuals feel the pressure of time and the transience of life. To an enterprising person, time means creative work, good results, and contributions. Intellectuals, middle-aged and old in particular, deeply regret the bygone years and are determined to make up for lost time. How they wish they had 48 hours a day and 24 months a year for their work! They really do not have time to think about their personal losses and sorrow. Take Zong Shaolu for example. As he has made such great contributions, it is reasonable for him to "ask for" some reward, or to take a rest, but there is always something pressing and more important for him to do. When a magnificent undertaking and historical mission falls on his shoulders, he has to seize every minute and every second to work hard on it, as always.

Now we are implementing policies for the intellectuals. What is most important is to create better working conditions for their undertakings to the best of our ability, so that their energy and attention will not be diverted nor their time wasted. Those who are engaged in some undertakings are always busy, and the intellectuals are often "aloof from politics and material pursuits." They simply will not ask favors for themselves when the situation does not involve their work. Even with the application for CPC membership, they would rather earn it with their actions than report to you on their ideological activities or by having their suggestions solicited. Leading organs and comrades should not leave things as they stand just because these intellectuals have never complained. Personal style is one thing, and organizational concern is another. They do not mean the same thing. In his speech at the national science conference in 1978, Comrade Deng Xiaoping proposed that necessary working conditions must be created for scientists and technicians and said that he was willing to be their director of support services. These words have played upon the heartstrings of the intellectuals. So look around yourselves, and find out what other difficulties exist for our creative comrades!

HONG XUEZHI ON STRENGTHENING PARTY LEADERSHIP

HK271143 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 17 Mar 86 p 4

[Report by Ma Jihong and Qiao Xiuqing: "Hong Xuezhi Calls for Efforts To Turn Party Organizations of PLA General Logistics Department Offices Into Leadership Cores"]

[Text] Since the beginning of last January, Hong Xuezhi, director and concurrently political commissar of the PLA General Logistics Department, has focused his energy on grasping the organizational development in the offices of the department itself, solved problems in one office after another, and conscientiously corrected party style. He has particuarly stressed turning the offices of the department into strong and vigorous administrative organizations that operate smoothly and have high efficiency. In light of the problems in various sections and bureaus, Hong Xuezhi has advanced concrete requirements for strengthening office organizations.

Hong Xuezhi has pointed out that some office party organizations do not have sufficiently satisfactory regulations concerning the regular activities of party organizations, that there is no sufficient inner-party democracy, that criticism and self-criticism are not satisfactorily carried out, and that party branches fail to focus on major issues in doing their work. Most of the cadres in our offices are party members, but some of these party members have failed to play the role of vanguard and model; they are still influenced by individualism and liberalism. In order to rectify our party work style, we should deal with the fundamentals and grasp the work to improve the office organizations. The key to this is to satisfactorily grasp party building in office party organizations and thus turn office party organizations into strong leadership cores.

Hong Xuezhi has repeatedly stressed that office party organizations should satisfactorily manage the following things: In promoting cadres, party branches and committees should carry out discussions to make an all-round analysis of cadres' performance in order to implement party principles and appoint to leading posts cadres who are really excellent; our party organizations should promptly learn party members' ideological tendencies and conduct satisfactory and relevant ideological work among them; our party members should consciously report to heads of party groups or members of party branches on their thoughts and correctly carry out criticism and self-criticism; our party branches ehould organize their members to conscientiously study basic Marxist theory, the party's principles and policies, and modern science and culture; cur party organizations should teach party members to strictly observe party discipline, keep party secrets, and resist various kinds of unhealthy practices; attention should be paid to unity among our comrades and departments, and our party organizations should grasp unity and encourage unity. We should not give ground on issues of principle, but should pay attention to mutual understanding and accommodation on non-principle issues; and our party members should be strict with themselves, refrain from sowing discord or listening to or spreading hearsay, and fight against any practice that is detrimental to unity.

JIEFANGJUN BAO ON PLA UNIT'S PARTY RECTIFICATION

[Review of Beijing and local press reports on 27 March]

[Excerpt] JIEFANGJUN BAO frontpages a report on a proposal by a group army of the Nanjing Military Region that five clear policy demarcation lines be drawn immediately in order to ensure positive, steady, healthy, and intensive progress in rectifying party style. They are: 1) the demarcation line between showing concern about the collective welfare or cadres and the distribution of cash or other things indiscriminately and without authorization; 2) the demarcation line between receiving remuneration as stipulated in the regulations and misusing power for selfish ends; 3) the demarcation line between normal social contacts inside and outside the Army and establishment of connections for the sake of personal gains; 4) the demarcation line between warm hospitality and use of public funds for extravagant festing; and 5) the demarcation line between legitimate production and other operations on the one hand and making illegal profits on the other.

IDENTIFICATION CARDS ISSUED TO GUANGZHOU RESIDENTS

HK271352 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Text] Today, Guangzhou City held meetings at (Lingnan) Street, Liwan District, and in (Shijing) District in the suburbs on issuing identification cards to residents.

More than 56,000 people living in the street and district were issued PRC resident identification cards. The State Council's decision on issuing resident identification cards throughout the country was made in the light of China's political and economic development. In September 1985, the 12th session of the 6th NPC Standing Committee adopted the regulations of the PRC on issuing resident identification cards. This has given the cards equal validity with the regulations in the country in terms of law. The identification cards help the residents in their social activities and protect their legitimate rights. In addition, the cards help discover, control, and punish criminals, thereby maintaining social order.

The provincial leading group office for issuing resident identification cards is working on the production of identification cards. It will issue them, by stages and in groups, to all residents who have submitted their applications for the cards.

HENAN CIRCULAR ON EXTRAVAGANT WEDDING CEREMONY

HK270849 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 23 Mar 86

[Text] Today, the Discipline Inspection Commission of the Henan Provincial CPC Committee issued a circular demanding that the whole province, particularly party organizations in rural areas and grass-roots factories and mines, take effective measures to resolutely curb and correct the unhealthy trends of holding extravagant wedding and funeral ceremonies and indulging in feudal superstitious and patriarchal activities. The circular by the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission was issued because (Xiao Lian), party member and former head of the processing division of the Hebi Mining Bureau's Fourth Mine, held an extravagant wedding ceremony for his son.

On 24 and 25 December last year, (Xiao Lian) held a wedding ceremony for his son. Prior to this, he asked people in turn to make a careful plan, on two occasions, and bought four kinds of food with a value of 3,761 yuan, of which 1,080 yuan was for meat which he sent people to get from other places. Contrary to regulations, he also used a large number of cooking utensils and 35 cooks from the miners' canteen. To indulge in ostentation and extravagance during the wedding ceremony, he installed 4 tweeters in his house and used 20 houses in the vicinity to receive guests without authority. He gave a 62 table banquet and at this time, (Xiao's) family received a large number of gifts and 3,110 yuan in cash.

While (Xiao Lian) was holding this extravagant wedding ceremony for his son, an accident had occurred in the Fourth Mine and the aftermath was being dealt with. The family members of deceased miners in the vicinity of (Xiao's) family were very sad, while (Xiao's) family was bustling with noise and excitement.

After this incident occurred, not only did (Xiao Lian) fail to examine his mistake but he also used mean tricks to obstruct investigation. The Hebi Mining Bureau CPC Committee decided to take disciplinary action against (Xiao Lian) by placing him on probation with the party for 1 year, administratively discharge him from his post as head of the division, and transfer him from the processing division.

HENAN TIGHTENS CONTROL OVER NEWSPAPERS

[Text] On 20 March the provincial culture department issued a circular on

The circular pointed out that previously, some newspapers and magazines in the province, under the influence of doing everything for money, ignored their social effect and published some vulgar articles. The masses had many complaints about this. In accordance with the spirit of the central leadership on straightening out newspapers and magazines in the province and cancelled some unhealthy and unnecessary ones.

The circular stressed that to strengthen control over newspapers and magazines and to bring into play the active role of newspapers and magazines in building the socialist spiritual civilization, the provincial authorities will issue new registration permits to all newspapers and magazines still in circulation. The old registration permits will become null and void at the end of April.

HUBEI ADOPTS REGULATIONS ON RURAL HOUSEHOLDS

HK271105 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Text] The provincial People's Congress Standing Committee promulgated an announcement today about the implementation of the interim provisions adopted by the 20th session of the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee on the province's work of providing for rural households enjoying the five guarantees. The provisions are formulated in connection with the spirit of state laws and other regulations, as well as in light of the actual conditions in the province. There are 13 clauses in the provisions.

Among the clauses, the third one specifically explains the description and limits of households which are entitled to enjoy the five guarantees. It points out that the households should be those aged people, handicapped people or orphans under legal age living in the rural areas who have no work capability, have no one to depend on or have no source of income. The five guarantees refer to their food, clothing, housing, medical care, and burial expenses, which will be taken care of. Moreover, the orphans should receive allowances for their education.

The fourth and fifth clauses of the provisions clearly point out that no matter what kind of production responsibility system is adopted, all rural areas must provide the above guarantees to those who are entitled to enjoy them.

The standard of provisions offered to the households should not be lower than the average level of the local living standards. In addition, they should be improved in light of the economic development of the rural areas and the improvement of peasants' living standard.

The interim provisions stressed in the 9th and 12th clauses: We should really protect the private properties and other legitimate rights of the households. No unit or individual is allowed to infringe upon their rights or properties in any form or under any pretext. Anyone who discriminates against, deliberately makes things difficult for, or maltreats the households, or who infringes upon the rights of the households, should be criticized and educated, fined, handled by administrative measures, or held legally accountable according to the seriousness of the case.

Today's issue of HUBEI RIBAO carries the full text of the interim provisions on its second page.

HUNAN CPC COMMITTEE CIRCULAR ON SELECTION OF CADRES

HK280419 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Text] On 18 March the provincial CPC Committee issued a circular on implementing the circular issued by the CPC Central Committee on selecting and appointing cadres in strict accordance with the party's principles.

It urged party committees at all levels to earnestly study the spirit of the central circular, to seriously examine selection and employment of cadres, and to correct and prevent malpractices in selecting and employing cadres.

The circular of the provincial CPC Committee pointed out that party committees at all levels must conduct a serious examination on how their areas, departments and units have selected and employed cadres in recent years. They must fully affirm achievements on the one hand and notice existing problems on the other. Leading cadres must take the lead in examining their own malpractices in selecting and employing cadres, such as using social connections, using backstairs influence, sending gifts to others, or seeking private interest. Organizational and personnel departments must seriously examine and check cadres who were promoted and employed in violation of the party's principles and organizational and personnel discipline in recent years. Members of organizational and personnel departments must also examine whether they have upheld principle, fawned on or curried favor with others, abused power, or engaged in malpractices for selfish ends. Establishment departments must thoroughly examine and check all existing problems regarding the size of establishment and number of personnel and, through this examination and check, seriously sum up experiences and draw lessons; find out the main cause for the emergence of various problems; study measures for solving the problems; closely link the examination with the improvement of work; and deal with the problems discovered in the examination in a practical way and according to the different conditions.

The provincial CPC Committee circular also pointed out that in order to effectively correct malpractices in selecting and employing cadres, and to better implement the party's organizational line and cadre policy in the new period, we must uphold the party's basic principle on selecting and employing cadres. We must select cadres who have both ability and political integrity; to appoint people on their merits; to select cadres by adhering to the mass line, and in a fair, upright, and above-the-board way.

To attain this target, the provincial CPC Committee reaffirmed the following disciplinary measures: Leading cadres at all levels are not permitted to place their relatives or friends in violation of policies and regulations or to appoint people by favoritism. After their transfer to other posts, leading cadres are not permitted to interfere in personnel matters in their previous areas or units. Leading cadres who are transferred to other areas or units should not bring their subordinates with them or ask cadres in their original areas or units to work with them in the new areas or units. Selection and employment of leading cadres must be carried out instrict accordance with stipulated procedures and decided collectively by party committees after discussions. It is not permissible to raise extempore motions or to make personnel decisions in selecting and employing leading cadres. It is not permissible to promise posts or other favors, or to promote cadres by naming names. It is necessary to strictly execute security discipline. No individual leaders have the right to approve of the establishment of new organs, to upgrade the level of an organ, or to increase the number of leading cadres in an organ. On the issue of transferring cadres, lower levels must submit to higher levels, and individuals must submit to organizations, so as to put an end to the phenomenon that people cannot be moved in or out and cadres themselves refuse to submit to organizational decisions.

In conclusion the circular pointed out that all localities and departments must formulate corresponding regulations in connection with reality.

SICHUAN'S YANG RUDAI AT TOWNSHIP ENTERPRISE MEETING

HK271334 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Excerpts] The provincial conference on the work of township enterprises, which had lasted 6 days, concluded yesterday [19 March]. Leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee and provincial government, including Yang Rudai, Jiang Minkuan, Liu Chunfu, and Xie Shijie, spoke at the conference.

In the work report, Xie Shijie, provincial CPC Committee Standing Committee member, fully affirmed the achievements in township enterprises last year. The gross output value of the township enterprises last year was 14.4 billion yuan, 62.4 percent more than in the preceding year. Their gross income was 12.86 billion yuan, recording an increase of 74.7 percent. Their net profits were 820 million yuan, an increase of 54.7 percent. They paid to the state taxes of 600 million yuan, recording an increase of 62 percent.

Comrade Xie Shijie said: This year is the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. All township enterprises throughout the province must sum up last year's experiences, open up a new path, and advance. They must make a breakthrough in development.

In his speech, Governor Jiang Minkuan emphatically pointed out: In 1984, in accordance with the spirit of documents No 1 and 4 of the central authorities and on the basis of investigation and study, the provincial CPC Committee and provincial government formulated documents No 21 and 31. The implementation of these documents has played a very important part in creating a new situation in the township enterprises throughout the province. The provincial CPC Committee and provincial government have now reiterated that all policies which have proved to be constructive and which are beneficial to the development of township collective enterprises must be stable and that the policies which have held back township collective economic development must be readjusted and improved. It is also necessary to supplement some necessary policies and measures and to create conditions to promote the development of the township collective enterprises.

In his speech, Yang Rudai, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, demanded: All places must seriously implement the spirit of this conference and do this year's work well. It is necessary to sum up experiences, carry forward achievements, overcome difficulties, and advance on the crest of a victory so that the township enterprises in our province can develop in a still greater manner and make more and still greater contributions toward invigorating Sichuan's economy.

At the closing ceremony, Vice Governor Liu Chunfu delivered the summing-up speech: It Is Essential To Unswervingly Grasp the Township Enterprises as an Important Pillar To Invigorate Our Province's Rural Economy.

YANG RUDAI SPEAKS AT COUNTY LEADERS TRAINING COURSE

HK280859 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 23 Mar 86

[Excepts] The training course of heads of the 35 countries selected for experiments in reform of the economic structure and of 24 large countries with a population of over one million each, concluded in Guanghan County yesterday [23 March]. Yang Rudai, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, attended the meeting to deliver the graduation summing-up speech.

In his speech, Comrade Yang Rudai pointed out that the focal point of the provincial CPC Committee's rural work this year is to do well in grasping the work of the counties selected for comprehensive experiments in reform of the economic structure, and grasping the economic development of the large counties, particularly the large counties with hilly land.

It is profoundly significant to grasp the large counties with hilly land. When the work of these counties has been done well, it iwll fundamentally change the economic structure of our province.

Comrade Yang Rudai said emphatically: Ideological work, policies, planning, and ordering by contract must be carried out down to household level. This is both a reform of the method of rural work and of the guiding ideology. This embodies the aim of serving the people and is an objective and practical requirement. Leading comrades in all places must personally go down and set an example for all of us. This then is practical and realistic work.

Regarding how to speed up the economic development of the large counties, Comrade Yang Rudai pointed out:

1. It is essential to strengthen leadership groups, to build up leadership groups which are well versed in economics and management and can open up a new path, and to practically and realistically carry out all aspects of work down to household level.

2. It is necessary to correctly see the way for the economic development of the large counties with hilly land; to vigorously develop the farming, breeding, and processing trades; to develop labor work in other places; and to fully use non arable land to promote continuous, steady, and forward agricultural development.

During study at the training course, counties, including Guanghan, Xindu, and Qionglai, introduced their experiences in persisting in reform and enlivening the economy. Through studying and exchanging experiences, they felt that such a training course solved problems very well. They came to understand that in current economic construction, reform should be placed above everything else.

YANG RUDAI AT SICHUAN FAMILY PLANNING CONFERENCE

HK280716 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] The provincial family planning conference on grass-roots work concluded on 26 March in Chengdu. During the 5-day session, the participating comrades listened to reports on the spirit of the national family planning conference of advanced units and people, the conference of family planning directors, and the national family planning conference on exchanging experiences in grass-roots work. Furthermore, in connection with the actual conditions, they discussed on the issue and exchanged experiences.

In the course of meeting, Yang Rudai, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, listened to reports of various localities on their family planning activities. He also made a speech.

On behalf of the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial government, he gave the comrades working on the family planning front assurances of his highest consideration. He said: To carry out family planning is a major undertaking of the whole party. We must therefore strengthen our leadership. The principal leaders of party committees at all levels must personally handle the work, and launch several movements every year. They should adopt a stable and continuous family planning policy, rather than having everyone minding his own affairs. At present, all localities must continue to implement the present policies.

In conclusion, Comrade Yang Rudai said: Since the population base of the province is quite large and the Seventh 5-Year Plan period is also the time when the province's birth rate will reach its climax, it is hoped that the cadres and masses will make joint efforts to maintain the achievements made and continue to carry out family planning.

Thus, the province will make further contributions.

At the closing session, the provincial government commended and presented gifts to the advanced collectives which had made achievements in the province's 1985 family planning work.

XIZANG'S WU JINGHUA, OTHERS MEET NPC, CPPCC DEPUTIES

HK271316 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Excerpts] On the morning of 18 March in the hall of the regional CPPCC, leading comrades of the regional party, government, Army, and CPPCC Committee cordially met our region's deputies to the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC and committee members to the fourth meeting of the Sixth CPPCC National Committee and held a forum with them to seek their views on our region's work. The leading comrades of the regional party, government, Army, and CPPCC committee who met the deputies and committee members and held a forum with them were Wu Jinghua, Basang, Dangzin, Gyanincain Norbu, Xuekang Tudengnima, Cao Xu, Tudao Doje, Gong Daxi, Zhang Shaosong, Lhamin Soinam Lhunzhub, Jimzhong Gyaincain Puncog, Gaxoi Qoigyai Nyima, (Huokang Suolang Bianba), and (Tangsai Gongjiebaimu).

Regional CPC Committee Deputy Secretary Dangzin presided over the forum, which was also attended by Lhasa City CPC Committee Secretary Yang Youcai and Mayor Dainba Gyaincain. Pagbalha Geleg Namgya, vice chairman of the CPPCC national committee and vice chairman of the regional People's Congress Standing Commitee; Jiangzhong Zhaxiduoji, NPC deputy and vice chairman of the regional People's Congress Standing Commission; Shengqin Luosanggjianzan, CPPCC national committee member and vice chairman of the regional People's Congress Standing Committee; Lhalu Cewang Doje and (Gongbasa Tudeng Jizha), CPPCC national committee members and vice chairmen of the regional CPPCC Committee; and (Haomuzha), NPC deputy, spoke at the forum one after another. Gyibug Puncogcedain, NPC deputy and vice chairman of the regional people's government, also attended the forum.

Wu Jinghua, secretary of the regional CPC Committee, delivered an important speech at the forum. He said: This year, we must be determined to make concerted efforts to solve the problems of the two educational systems in our region: 1) the educational system for Tibetan characters and language, which is regarded as the main work; 2) the educational system for Han characters and language. We must first establish the system of Tibetan language and characters and, at the same time, establish the system of Han language and characters. Comrade Wu Jinghua hoped all deputies to the NPC and committee members of the CPPCC National Committee meeting will unite as one and be modest and prudent. He thanked all fraternal provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions which had supported the building of Xizang.

The deputies and committee members left Lhasa for the capital -- Beijing -- on the morning of 19 March.

XIZANG MILITARY DISTRICT CORRECTS UNHEALTHY TRENDS

HK280702 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Excerpt] The Xizang Military District CPC Committee recently formulated measures to correct unhealthy trends initially found in itself and its organs and has now scored preliminary achievements.

Last year, the Xizang Military District successively spent 960,000 yuan to buy 11 imported cars, of which 5 were ordinary Blue Bird cars. It was originally decided to allocate two to the office for leaders on active duty and former military district leaders to use.

It has now been decided to allocate them to the military district guesthouse for use in reception and to seal the other three cars for safekeeping. It was originally decided that two ordinary Nissan cars be specially used by the commander and political commissar but it has now been decided to cancel the special cars. Another ordinary Crown car will be used in reception.

The military district CPC Committee came to understand that the importing of a large number of cars to go in for ostentation and extravagance and to display their wealth is an expression of incorrect party style. This time, apart from taking specific measures to correct unhealthy trends, the principal responsible comrades of the military district openly made self-criticisms at the telephone conference on correcting party style and at the enlarged meeting of the CPC Committee.

In September last year, when the Xizang Military District was readjusting its leadership group, the principal leading comrades of the military district accepted entertainment from the general offices of the Headquarters, Political Department, and Logistics Department. The Military District CPC Committee Standing Committee has now made a decision that, in accordance with the principle that whoever has the idea must pay and whoever takes part in the dinner must pay, the secretaries and deputy secretaries of the department CPC committees must each pay back 50 yuan and the other Standing Committee members must each pay back 30 yuan.

On 24 January this year, the military district spent 240 yuan on entertainment to hold a farewell party for a veteran comrade who was about to leave Xizang. Three Standing Committee members took part. In accordance with the principle that the unhealthy trends which have emerged since the meeting of the central organ cadres must be severely dealt with, the commander and political commissar of the military district have each paid back 100 yuan.

Last year, the upper level appropriated special expenses of 612,000 yuan to the Xizang Military District. Dut to various facts, such as entertaining beyond the standards the military district overspent by some 49,000 yuan. The military district CPC Committee Standing Committee has decided that, apart from that needed for united front worker, no public funds are to be used to give dinners or gifts or to entertain beyond the standards.

In January and February this year, when the military district held a conference on logistics work, it strictly enforced the above-mentioned regulations, and saved some 8,000 yuan.

JILIN HOLDS DISCIPLINE INSPECTION WORK MEETING

SK270401 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] After a 6-day session, the provincial work conference on discipline inspection affairs concluded in Changchun on 26 March. The conference stressed that efforts should be made to further mobilize the entire party to straighten out party style along with the task of conducting reforms in economic systems and economic construction in order to score marked achievements in creating a fundamental turn for the better in party style and to strive to achieve such a turn in 1987.

During the conference, Song Jiehan, member of the Central Discipline Inspection Commission, delivered a report relaying the spirit of the seventh plenary session of the Central Discipline Inspection Commission. Wang Xianjin, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, delivered a speech. (Li Deming), secretary of the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission, delivered a work report entitled: Know Well the Situation and Enhance One's Confidence in Order To Strive To Achieve a Fundamental Turn for the Better in Party Style as Soon as Possible.

The conference held earnest discussions and analysis on the situation prevailing in party style throughout the province and made concrete arrangements in line with the actual situation for straightening our party style this year.

The conference contended that party members and party-member cadres had strengthened their party spirit, upgraded their ideological and political quality, and had scored marked achievements in some fields of the work to straighten out party style over the past few years thanks to the positive effort exerted by the party organizations at all levels and by the broad masses of party members, and particularly thanks to carrying out the party rectification drive and education on ideals, discipline, the situation, and the policies and conducting the activities of rendering services in exercising leadership. Judging from the general situation, our province's party style is continuously achieving a turn for the better, the main trend of it is good, and the healthy force inside the party has held sway over all aspects. Though our province still has many problems in party style, they have only cropped up among a few units and party members. If leading organs and cadres at all levels take the lead in the work, the broad masses of party members will certainly be able to actively set examples in straightening out party style and to dare wage struggles against malpractices, and party style will certainly achieve a turn for the better.

The conference pointed out: A good job should be done in fulfilling the following three tasks in the work to straighten out party style this year:

1. The provincial-level organs should set examples in the work and a good job should be done in concentrating efforts on consolidating work style and discipline among the leading organs at or above the country level.

2. All-out efforts should be made to block the malpractices reflecting the characteristics of every trade and units that have completed their party rectification work should regard the task of blocking the malpractices on their own fronts as an important work to make up for the missed lesson in the party rectification drive. A good job should be done in grasping the work in a down-to-earth manner by integrating the work with the task of consolidating work style.

3. It is imperative to deeply deal strict blows to serious economic crimes, to implement in a down-to-earth manner the responsibility system in dealing with cases among leading personnel, and to do a good job in conducting education on combating corrosive influence.

The conference also put forward concrete measures and demands for the issue of how to enhance discipline inspection work and how to fulfill the task of straightening out party style.

Attending the conference were secretaries from the party committees of various cities, prefectures, autonomous prefecture, counties, and districts; secretaries from their Discipline Inspection Commissions; responsible comrades from the discipline inspection departments of the provincial-level organs and a number of key plants, mines, and high educational institutions.

JILIN HOLDS CONFERENCE ON COMMODITY PRICES

SK280940 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] The provincial commodity price conference, which concluded today, defined the most important task of the province's commodity price work as resolutely maintaining a basic stability in commodity prices, adopting coordinated measures for the price refor initiated last year, making good preparations for next year's reform, and upgrading th commodity price work to a new level.

The conference fully affirmed the achievements in reform scored last year, and studied and made arrangements for this year's commodity price work. It pointed out: The principle for this year's commodity price work is to consolidate, digest, supplement and improve the price reform measures that have already been put into effect. Using this principle as guidance, we should fulfill two major tasks: one is to maintain a basic stability in commodity prices, and the other is to make good preparations for next year's reform. To fulfill the first task, we should chiefly stabilize the prices of vegetables and nonstaple foods as well as those of industrial consumer goods and means of agricultural production. On the premise that market prices are basically stable, a small number of exceptionally irrational prices should be adjuested and controlled.

The conference noted: In order to successfully carry out the coordinated measures for the price reform initiated last year and to enable them to facilitate production and circulation, we should strengthen control over the prices of farm products, the prices of the means of production produced in excess of plans, and the prices of commodities sold in village fairs and by self-employed peddlers.

During the conference, leading comrades of the provincial government and the state pri bureau delivered speeches.

QINGHAI'S SONG RUIXIANG AT ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

HK270405 Xining Qinghai Provincial Service in Mandarin 2330 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Text] On 20 March, the provincial CPC Committee and people's government held an economic work conference in Xining. The conference will: Convey and act in the spirit of the relevant central meeting and act in the spirit of the fifth enlarged plenum of the sixth provincial CPC Committee; work out plans for this year's economic and rural work, make arrangements for this year's plans; and will study and readjust economic policies, methods and measures.

The conference breaks the traditional practice and combines meetings on planning, economic work and rural work into one. Song Ruixiang deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and governor, made a speech at the opening ceremony.

He said: The combining of three meetings into one is made because work concerning economics is an organic entity. It parts must be closely related so that we can make plans in coordinated way. At the same time, it is also held for the sake of reducing the number of meetings held, improving work style, and laying stress on practical results.

He said: Chiefly speaking, the documents which will be proposed at the conference involve the policies, methods and regulations of the economic work. They will be proposed by acting in the spirit of the relevant regulations and instructions of the CPC Central Committee and State Council, and in the light of the province's actual conditions, particularly after summing up our experience over the years. This conference is significant in organizing this year's structural reform and economic work, as well as scoring successes in the first step of the Seventh 5-year Plan.

The conference was attended by provincial party and government leaders, including Yin Kesheng, Liu Feng, Huanjiecailang, Zhao Haifeng, Ma Wanli, Song Lin and (Lu Baoyin).

BAI JINIAN AT SHAANXI POLITICAL, LEGAL WORK MEETING

HK270243 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Excerpt] A provincial political and legal work conference concluded on 26 March. The conference stressed that it is necessary to further strengthen the building of democracy and the legal system, crack down hard on serious economic and other crimes, promote a steady turn for the better in social order, and ensure social stability.

Li Senqui, member of the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee and secretary of the Political and Legal Commission of the provincial CPC Committee, conveyed the spirit of the national political and legal work conference and outlined arrangements for this year's political and legal work in the province.

In the past few years, and especially since August 1983, Shaanxi has scored great success in the struggle to crack down on serious economic and other crime. There has been a marked turn for the better in social order, which is now in a relatively good state in the majority of counties and districts. Thirty-three counties and districts are approaching a fundamental turn for the better, and more than 50 have achieved a marked turn for the better. The masses have a much greater feeling of security than before.

The conference held that despite the marked turn for the better in social order in the province, imbalances and instabilities remain. At the same time, some new problems have cropped up in the new situation of economic reform.

There has been an increase in economic and civil disputes. Larceny is also on the rise.

Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Bai Jinian spoke at the conclusion of the conference, giving three views on the building of the political and legal work force. He said: Political and legal cadres and police must love the masses, constantly relieve the people's woes, and serve the people wholeheartedly. They must have the zeal to firmly carry out the party's line, principles, and policies and to boldly punish lawbreakers and criminals. They must act accordings to law, and strictly grasp the policies.

SHAANXI POST OFFICE TO CHECK ON ANOMALIES

HK270455 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 0200 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] According to SHAANXI RIBAO, (Zhang Zuoying), director of the provincial Posts and Telecommunications Administration Bureau, recently announced at a telephone conference of staff and workers of the provincial posts and telecommunications system that from now until national day, all posts and telecommunications bureaus will launch a drive to check on 10 things, crack down on 1 thing, and straighten out work style. The 10 things to be checked are: service; quality; discipline; embezzling and misappropriating payment for stamps and pilfering parcels; using telecommunications channels for smuggling and peddling contraband and for engaging in speculation; allowing telegrams to pile up, and delaying or misdirecting them; the shortage of newspapers and publications; deliberately cutting telecommunications links between customers; the practices of leading cadres in abusing their powers; and other unhealthy trends. It is necessary to crack down hard on economic criminals in light of the problem unearthed by this check.

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS LI XIANNIAN'S FOREIGN VISITS

HK290220 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese 29 Mar 86 p 3

[Editorial: "Promoting Friendship, Strengthening Cooperation"]

[Text] Beginning on 8 March, President Li Xiannian paid state visits by invitation to five friendly Asian and African countries, namely Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Egypt, Somalia, and Madagascar. President Li travelled over 31,000 kilometers in 20 days, during which he again sowed seeds of friendship and reached the predicted goal of promoting understanding and friendship and strengthening solidarity and cooperation, thereby writing a new page in the history of friendship and cooperation between China and the countries of the Third World. The visit was a compete success. We truly hail this.

Although the five countries visited by President Li during this trip are distant from China, the friendship between them goes back to ancient times. Long ago in history, our ancestors started various kinds of exchanges with these countries, and many stories of this friendship are still on everybody's lips today. After the founding of new China, Chairman Mao and Premier Zhou personally formulated the guideline of developing friendship and cooperation with the Third World on the basis of the five principles of peaceful coexistence, and relations between China and the Third World countries developed rapidly. This trip by President Li has further strengthened and developed the long-standing ties of friendship and cooperation between China and these countries.

During his trip, President Li was given a warm welcome and lavish hospitality by the governments and peoples of these countries. He had extremely cordial and thorough talks with the leaders of these countries on major issues of mutual concern, and also explored new fields and ways for strengthening mutual cooperation, achieving results satisfactory to both sides. During the trip, President Li and his party saw the notable achievements of the governments and peoples of these countries in developing their economy and improving people's living standards, and also learned many valuable experiences from them. We are all developing countries with the common task assigned by history of extricating ourselves from and changing our undeveloped status as quickly as possible. Strengthening cooperation between Third-World countries, that is, "South-South cooperation," is of great significance. Solidarity is the source of strength of the Third World, and cooperation is the essential path for common development in the Third World. Vigorously strengthening solidarity and cooperation with Third World countries is the fundamental base point of China's peaceful foreign policy of acting independently and retaining the initative in its own hands and is also an important aspect of China's open policy. China will, as always, continue to strive to strengthen "South-South cooperation" and promote "North-South dialogue."

At present the world faces the two big problems of peace and development. Preserving peace is closely linked to economic development and prosperity. This trip by president Li was a specific expression of China's efforts to preserve world peace and promote the common development of all countries. It can be stated with assurance that the friendship and solidarity between China and other Third World countries will be continually strengthened. The Third World will become a major force playing an ever greater role on the international scene.

CHINA SIGNS NEW CONTRACT FOR OFFSHORE OIL

OW281310 Beijing XINHUA in English 1252 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 28 (XINHUA) -- Another contract for exploration and development of China's offshore oil was signed here today.

The contract was signed between the China National Offshore Oil Corporation (CNOOC) and a consortium made up of the American Occidental Easter, Inc. and Umocal Pearl River, Inc. and the Japan Petroleum Exploration Co. Ltd. Located in the Pearl River mouth basin of South China Sea, the contract area is 340 km, to the southeast of Guangzhou and covers an area of 5,470 square km. in water depth between 100 to 500 meters. The Occidental Easter, Inc. will be the operator.

Zhao Zongnai, vice minister of petroleum industry, was present at the signature ceremony of the contract, the seventh since the second round of bidding of CNOOC. Altogether, CNOOC has signed 31 contracts since China opened its offshore oil for foreign exploration in 1980.

CPC INVITES SWAPO, BELGIAN, SFRY DELEGATIONS

OW310918 Beijing XINHUA in English 0850 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 31 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Communist Party has invited delegations from the South-West African People's Organization (SWAPO) and the Flamand Socialist Party of Belgium to visit China, it was announced here today. Wu Xingtang, a spokesman for the party Central Committee's international liaison department, said the SWAPO delegation, led by its president, Sam Nujoma, would visit in the summer. The Flamand Socialist Delegation, which arrives tomorrow for a two-week visit, is being led by Party Chairman Karel Van Miert.

Meanwhile, a Chinese Communist Party delegation will leave in late April for a visit to Scandinavia at the invitation of the Left Party (communist) of Sweden, the Socialist Left Party of Norway and the Socialist People's Party of Denmark. The Chinese delegation will be led by Wei Jianxing, member of the party Central Committee and head of the Central Committee's Organization Department.

Wu also announced that Mitja Ribicic, member of the presidency of the Yugoslavian League of Communists, had been invited to visit China next month (April). He said the Chinese Communist Party now had contacts and relations with more than 30 socialist, social democratic and labor parties. The party did not believe in allowing ideological differences to prevent efforts to seek mutual understanding and co-operation with other parties. Contacts, co-operation and discussions with other parties on major international issues helped to safeguard world peace.

PRC SPOKESMAN ON RELATIONS WITH EAST EUROPE, USSR

HK310748 Hong Kong AFP in English 0724 GMT 31 Mar 86

[By Lawrence Mac Donald]

[Text] Beijing, March 31 (AFP) -- China seeks to restore relations with all East European Communist Parties but will not consider party links with Moscow as long as the "three obstacles" remain, a party spokesman said Monday. Wu Xingtang, spokesman for the Chinese Communist Party (CPC) International Liaison Committee, said that "so far as Eastern Europe [as received], China is ready to restore relations with all parties" but to do so with the Soviet Union was impossible because of the "three obstacles." Beijing holds that three obstacles standing in the way of normalization of relations with the Soviet Union are Soviet support for the Vietnamese presence in Cambodia, Soviet troops in Afghanistan and the Soviet military build-up on China's northern frontier.

China has often hinted it is willing to restore ties with Eastern European parties, but Monday's statement was the first official confirmation that the CPC was pursuing a two-tier strategy in relations with the Soviet Union and its Eastern European allies, analysts said.

Speaking at a briefing for the foreign press, Mr. Wu said restoration of party ties with Moscow was "out of the question now" and denied there had been discussion of resuming ties at recent meetings between Chinese and Soviet officials. "We're happy to notice development of relations with the East European countries in many aspects, political, economic, and cultural," he said.

Beijing has expanded trade and cultural relations with the Soviet Union over the past year while publicly insisting that there was no progress on political issues, observers said. China broke party ties with all of the Soviet Union's eastern allies except Romania in the early 1960's, after Beijing and Moscow split over ideological differences and mounting strategic suspicions. Eastern European diplomats said that countries in Eastern Europe would not resume party ties with Beijing until Moscow had done so.

China made overtures for resumption of party ties with East Germany during visits by East German officials here last year. East European sources said Beijing had invited East German party leader Erich Honecker to visit China, although Mr. Wu said he had no knowledge of such a visit.

Mr. Wu also announced a program of party visits that included the arrival here Monday of a delegation from the banned African National Congress (ANC) of South Africa and a CPC invitation to the South West African People's Organization (SWAPO), which is fighting for an independent Namibia. Mr. Wu did not say when the SWAPO delegation was expected to visit. China has regularly declared support for both organizations and in 1983 hosted a delegation from each.

Concerning plans for a visit by CPC General Secretary Hu Yaobang to France, West Germany and the United Kingdom this year, Mr. Wu said the dates were still under discussion.

The CPC was to send Qiao Shi, a member of the CPC Secretariat, as an observer to the Italian Communist Party Congress at the end of April, while a CPC delegation was to visit Sweden, Norway and Denmark about the same time, he said. China had made contact with the Japanese Communist Party Congress last year, he recalled, and was "looking forward with hope" to development of the relations.

On China's ties with the Communist Party of the Philippines, which has yet to make peace with President Corazon Aquino's new government, Mr. Wu reiterated that China's support was only "moral", adding that the CPC did not comment on the internal affairs of other parties.

Party to party ties are distinct from diplomatic links and are a largely symbolic demonstration of the strength of relations between two socialist countries. In addition to ties with a handful of ruling communist parties, the CPC maintains contacts with more than 30 social democratic and labour parties, Mr. Wu said.

The CPC, the largest Communist Party in the world, has 42 million members, Mr Wu said.

WORLD BANK CREDIT TO BOOST PRC HIGHER EDUCATION

OW281036 Beijing XINHUA in English 0800 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Washington, March 27 (XINHUA) -- The International Development Association (IDA) today announced a credit of SDR (special drawing rights) 108 million (about 120 million U.S. dollars) to help China upgrade its higher education, especially in graduate programs. IDA, the concessionary lending arm of the World Bank, will use the money to help China add new facilities at 60 universities in 28 provinces and municipalities and to remodel some old buildings.

Technical assistance will be given to China's State Education Commission and the bureaus for provincial higher education in order to strengthen their planning and management capabilities. The Chinese Government will contribute 357 million dollars to the project. The IDA credit is for 50 years and is interest-free.

NEW MARITIME METEOROLOGICAL FORECAST SERVICES

OW300730 Beijing XINHUA in English 0714 GMT 30 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 30 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Central Meteorological Station is to inaugurate daily weather forecast services starting April 1 on its reporting areas designated by the U.N. World Meteorological Organization. The weather forecast will be broadcast worldwide by the Central Television Station, the Central Broadcasting Station and Radio Beijing.

The areas covered by the forecast are the Bohai Sea, northern and southern parts of the Yellow Sea, the East China Sea, the Taiwan Straits, northeastern, northwestern, central and southern parts of the South China Sea and the Beibu Gulf. The weather forecast for these areas used to be undertaken by on-shore radio stations at Dalian, Shanghai and Guangzhou.

The data will be collected from the meteorological stations in Dalian, Shanghai and Guangzhou and processed through electronic computers before they are broadcast worldwide. The television station will present a visual picture of the weather in these areas. The weather forecast mainly serves marine shipping, fishing and offshore oil exploration in these areas.

[Text] Beijing, March 31 (XINHUA) -- Deng Xiaoping, chairman of the Central Advisory Commission of the Communist Party of China, and Yang Shangkun, member of the political bureau of the C.P.C. Central Committee, met here today with Fu Chao-Chu, president of the Chung Newspapers Limited of the United States. Deng answered Fu's questions concerning the construction of the hydroelectric power station on the three gorges of the Yangtze River.

U.S. PRESIDENTIAL ASSISTANT MEETS PRC SCHOLARS

OW291006 Beijing XINHUA in English 0905 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Text] Washington, March 28 (XINHUA) -- John Poindexter, assistant to President Ronald Reagan for National Security Affairs, today received the Chinese senior scholars delegation, headed by Huan Xiang and Ling Qing. The delegation arrived in the U.S. capital on March 23 at the invitation of the Center for Strategic and International Study of Georgetown University in Washington, D.C.

A delegation from the American Center visited China in 1984. Zbigniew Brzezinski, former assistant to the President for National Security Affairs, led that group.

During a visit to Williamsburg, Virginia, the Chinese scholars and their American colleagues discussed international and bilateral issues. U.S. Assistant Secretary of Defense Richard Armitage and Deputy Secretary of State John Whitehead also met with the Chinese delegation. The Chinese scholars will leave for home tomorrow.

U.S. NOTES USSR PROPOSAL FOR ROUNDTABLE TALKS

OW291020 Beijing XINHUA in English 0756 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Text] Washington, March 28 (XINHUA) -- The United States said today it "noted" the Soviet proposal for roundtable talks of the permanent members of the United Nations' Security Council and refused to say whether it's a good idea. Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in a letter yesterday to the U.N. Secretary-General suggested to hold roundtable talks or discussions among the five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council in an effort to seek ways to relax the present intense international situation.

Asked what the U.S. response is to the Soviet proposal, U.S. State Department Spokesman Charles Redman said the U.S. has "noted the Soviet proposal." He said the Soviets "have yet to elaborate what such a proposal might do." The spokesman said, "I would add that we are negotiating with the Soviets in a number of forums. We want progress in all of these negotiations and believe progress is possible." He refused to go into any details.

U.S. REJECTS GORBACHEV'S TEST BAN PROPOSAL

OW300504 Beijing XINHUA in English 0152 GMT 30 Mar 86

[Text] Washington, March 29 (XINHUA) -- The United States today rejected Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's proposal to hold an immediate summit on banning nuclear weapons tests. The White House said in a statement today the United States turned down the Soviet proposal because a moratorium cannot be counted on to lead to the enhanced security desired. The statement said the Soviet Union should instead accept better verification requirements that could lead to U.S. ratification of two existing test treaties.

Gorbachev said earlier today that he will meet U.S. President Ronald Reagan anywhere in Europe to discuss a nuclear test ban and announced his country will continue its unilateral test moratorium unless the U.S. conducts further nuclear tests.

The White House statement issued today in Santa Barbara, California, where the U.S. President is spending his vacation, said, "The United States has repeatedly made it clear that the practical step now needed in the area of nuclear testing limitations is to enhance mutual confidence in the ability of the two sides to verify existing agreements, in particular the unratified Threshold Test Ban Treaty and the Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaty." The statement said Reagan is prepared to move forward toward ratification of the two pending treaties if the Soviet Union sends observers to next month's planned nuclear test in Nevada. It said the U.S. has not changed its position on a nuclear testing moratorium. The statement said the summit meeting should deal with the entire range of important issues between the two countries. The Soviet Union has not replied with a date acceptable to the U.S. on Reagan's invitation for Gorbachev to come to the U.S. for a summit, the statement said.

"If the Soviet Union desires to make serious progress on the question on nuclear testing limitations, it should accept the President's longstanding proposal that we have our experts meet and should respond positively to the President's most recent offer," said the statement.

The United States recently conducted a nuclear test in Nevada. Before the test, the United States invited observers from the Soviet Union but the Soviets refused the invitation.

U.S. SENATE APPROVES AID PACKAGE FOR NICARAGUA

OW281232 Beijing XINHUA in English 1218 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Excerpts] Washington, March 27 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. senate today approved 53 to 47 President Ronald Reagan's request for 100 million dollars in aid to U.S.-backed Nicaraguan rebels. The approval was made under the condition that most of the aid would be withheld for 90 days while the administration seeks negotiations with the Nicaraguan Government. The Republican-controlled Senate approved the request that would immediately release 25 million dollars to the rebels, and withhold 75 million dollars for 90 days.

After three days of debate in the Senate, the bill now returns to the Democratic-controlled House, where it faces strong opposition. The House is on recess until April 15. The Senate's vote had been scheduled for Wednesday, but was postponed to today because Senate Republican leaders under pressure from the Reagan administration wanted to lobby for an agreeement on the aid package. Reagan has been urging Congress to approve the aid since he proposed the package a month ago.

Last week, Reagan suffered a setback, when the House rejected his request 222 to 210. After the house vote, Reagan vowed he would never give up trying to get the package through Congress.

A WASHINGTON POST-ABC news poll published Wednesday showed that 60 percent of Americans disapprove of Reagan's request for renewing military aid to the Nicaraguan rebels. Most of American people, the poll indicated, oppose U.S. involvement in overthrowing the Nicaragua Government despite Reagan citing Nicaragua as a threat to the security of the United States.

GORBACHEV MAKES TV ADDRESS ON NUCLEAR TEST BAN

OW292007 Beijing XINHUA in English 2001 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, March 29 (XINHUA) -- Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev said tonight he is ready to meet U.S. President Ronald Reagan in Europe as soon as possible to discuss a nuclear test ban. In a television address, Gorbachev said "I am ready to meet President Reagan in the nearest future in London or Rome, or in any other European capital that will agree to receive us, in order to reach agreement on this question." The Soviet Leader announced that his country would continue its unilateral moratorium on nuclear explosions after March 31 if the United States follows suit. He noted that the Soviet Union would resume nuclear testing if the U.S. does not join the ban.

On January 15, Gorbachev extended the nuclear test ban, self-imposed by Moscow last August, for another three months until March 31 and called on the United States to follow its example. The U.S. rejected the proposal and conducted an underground test in the Nevada desert on March 22 and is reportedly ready to conduct another test in the next few days. Gorbachev said today that "We are again giving the U.S. Administration a chance to take a responsible decision -- to end nuclear explosions. Failing which, the Soviet Union will resume testing."

GORBACHEV CALLS FOR FIVE POWERS CONFERENCE

OW281930 Beijing XINHUA in English 1925 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, March 28 (XINHUA) -- Soviet Leader Mikhail Gorbachev Thursday repeated a call for an international conference involving the five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council to work out ways of diffusing international tension, according to a TASS report. In a message to U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar, Gorbachev welcomed declaring 1986 as an International Year of Peace by the U.N. and stressed the need to keep the world "free from weapons and violence."

"An accord on the complete elimination of the medium-range missiles of the Soviet Union and the United States in the European zone on a reciprocal basis could become a major event of the International Year of Peace," Gorbachev said. He added that Moscow "is prepared to come to terms on the issue, just as on nuclear testing, without any linkages."

Gorbachev said the five permament members of the U.N. Security Council -- the Soviet Union, the United States, China, Britain and France -- have a special responsibility for ensuring stability throughout the world. "This is why the Soviet Union suggests that the five powers gather at a round table to discuss what can and should be done to strengthen peace, and first of all to do away with nuclear weapons," he said. The Soviet Leader called on world leaders not to let 1986 pass without concrete disarmament agreements. The message followed an earlier call for an international conference in this regard in his political report to the 27th Soviet Communist Party Congress in Moscow last month.

SOVIET UNION SETS UP UYGUR STUDY INSTITUTE

[Text] Moscow, March 27 (XINHUA) -- An Institute of Uygur Studies has been established in Alam-Ata, capital of Kazakhstan, the official Soviet News Agency TASS reported today.

The institute is to sum up the achievements in basic Uygur studies, publish cultural relics of the Uygur and enlarge the scope of Uygur ethnology and literature. The Uygurs, numbering about 1.5 million, live mainly in Kazakhstan of the Soviet Union which has more than 100 minority nationalities.

PAPER VIEWS PROBLEMS IN SOVIET REFORM

HK280928 Shanghai SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO in Chinese 17 Mar 86 p 4

[Article by Wang Shouhai of the Institute of World Economy and Politics under the Academy of Soviet Sciences: "Contradictions Between Gorbachev's Concepts and Soviet Reform"]

[Text] The Soviet Union's economic reform can be viewed from four aspects: Large-scale economic experiments, Gorbachev's concepts, opinions of the theoretical circles, and the principles and policies specified by the official documents.

The outline of Gorbachev's concepts is as follows: Under the premise of strengthening centralized leadership and planning, it is necessary to improve the planning and management system, reduce state intervention and the overelaborate economic targets which seriously restrict enterprises, and extensively adopt economic norms so that corporations and enterprises can take the initiative in arranging their production and development. Administrative means should be reduced in economic management, and commercial methods and economic levers should be used more. At the same time, it is necessary to establish a sound economic accounting system and to implement the principle of material incentives in distribution by linking people's remuneration with the results of their work and eliminating egalitarianism and income not from labor.

In order to deepen the reforms, Gorbachev emphasized the necessity of reforming the organizational structure of management from the central level. He particularly demanded that the State Planning Commission improve its work and turn it into "an economic organ that concentrates on major scientists and economists." In order to meet the needs in economic development, he said, it is necessary to establish some large-scale and comprehensive management institutions to manage the national economy and to change the functions of various government ministries by concentrating on formulating long-term plans, ensuring the production of quality goods, and developing technologies. In the entire management system, it is necessary to enhance the role of the basic links -- corporations and enterprises and disband the intermediate link -- national industrial consortiums. This shows that Gorbachev's reform concept is to reform the organizational structure in a comprehensive way from "the high level to the low level." Through such readjustment, the country may streamline administration, raise efficiency, overcome bureaucratism, and all kinds of red tape.

The Problem of 10 Years Ago Remains Unsolved

The practice of the Soviet Union shows that even if reform is carried out under the premise of centralism, it is still very difficult to advance reforms smoothly. Last June, Gorbachev said at a meeting on developing technology: "Technological progress definitely requires profound reforms of the planning and management system and the whole economic mechanism. We have talked a lot about this for many years and have weighed various measures, but we have not made actual advances." "The problems we have to deal with today remain the same as those appearing 10 years ago, and the problems have become more serious." In fact, since the mid-1960's, the Soviet Union has conducted several rounds of economic readjustments and reforms, but the defects of the economy remain unsettled.

For example, previous reforms were all directed at the problem of the excessive degree of centralism, but after these reforms, the degree of centralism remained at a level "higher than the best level." For example, when an enterprise wants to use hundreds of rubles in production, it must submit this to the ministry in charge for approval. When people discuss the management of various economic departments, they can point out many defects in the management system. However, the barriers between the departments cannot be removed, and they are still sharply separated one from another. The contradictions between centralization and decentralization and between vertical economic ties and horizontal economic relations remain unsettled. The problem of the overstaffing and unwieldy state of many government institutions was also a target for previous reforms, but the administrative structure in the Soviet Union has not been streamlined; instead, it is still swelling. The rigid management system and the unwieldy administrative structure have caused low economic efficiency and seriously hindered the advance of intensive production and technological progress.

Various Contradictions in Reform

Why did reform in the Soviet Union make few advances in the past? As a matter of course, it is not easy to change a long-standing and ossified economic structure, and it is impossible to solve the complicated issue of properly managing a socialist economy in a single move. Problems can be solved only through continuous practice and explorations. In addition, some unfavorable factors remain in leading bodies, the ranks of cadres, and the organizational system, and these factors still affect reform. For example:

First, the Soviet Government has long been headed by old people who lack energy. From the later years of Brezhnev to Andropov and Chernenko, the Kremlin was ruled by senile old people, and such leading bodies, which lacked energy, could not but affect work efficiency.

Second, people who cling to old conventions and their vested interests always stand in the way of reform. Conservatism and inertia among Soviet cadres formed the main reason for the standstill in the reforms. In the field of theory, some scholars still cherish "outmoded concepts and old conventions." "Dogmatic concepts, negative forces, and conservative thoughts" often obstruct the development of theoretical studies. Another major obstacle comes from the vested interests. Structural reforms, the readjustments of economic relations, and the changes in organizational structures will certainly affect some people's vested interests or threaten their powers and positions. So some people will in fact oppose any change, although they also "support reform in words." Whenever the interests of their groups are affected, they will go all out to "resist" the reform. All signs show that the dispute and struggle between reformists and conservatives are still continuing.

Third, the administrative system in the Soviet Union is too cumbersome to be effective in implementing the orders of the central authorities. As a highly centralized country, the power of the central authorities can reach all remote villages and grass-roots units and enterprises. However, it is still hard to put every central instruction into actual practice in all parts of the country. Many places are too far away and beyond the reach of the central authorities. Frequently, the resolutions and major measures made by the party and government were simply cast aside in localities or were carried out perfunctorily.

PRC TO ISSUE DUAL CURRENCY BONDS IN JAPAN

OW261937 Beijing XINHUA in English 1932 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Tokyo, March 26 (XINHUA) -- Three contracts under which the Bank of China will issue yen-dollar dual currency bonds totalling 20 billion yen (111.1 million U.S. dollars) in Japan for the first time were signed here today. A Chinese banker, who asked not to be named, told XINHUA that this is the first time China has issued such bonds to raise funds in international financial markets. The ten-year bonds will be issued in yen but will be subscribed for in U.S. dollars at par. They will be repaid in dollars at a 7.2 per cent interest rate. The bonds will be bought by five Japanese security companies -- Nikko, Nomura, Yamaichi, Daiwa and Nihon-Kangyokakumaru. China, the first country in the world to issue dual currency bonds in Tokyo's financial market, has issued bonds four times before in Japan with par value of about 540 million U.S. dollars.

NEW ZEALAND'S LANGE WRAPS UP PRC VISIT

Calls on Rewi Alley

OW281004 Beijing XINHUA in English 0943 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 28 (XINHUA) -- Visiting New Zealand Prime Minister David Lange called on Rewi Alley of New Zealand who now lives in China here this morning at Alley's residence. The 89-year-old Alley, who arrived in China in 1927, and has spent most of his life here has written many books, articles and poems on China.

Today Alley was in good spirits, wearing a cap of China's Uygur nationality and a grey suit. He greeted the Prime Minister at the entrance of his room, and then the two sat down for a chat in the guest room. Lange asked about his life, work and health in China. Alley told the prime minister that he was given the certificates making him an honorary citizen of Beijing and Gansu Province where he had worked for many years.

This afternoon, the Prime Minister and Mrs Lange joined two New Zealand Maori delegations here attending the opening of a Maori room of the New Zealand Embassy in Beijing. The opening ceremony was held in way of Maori tradition and customs by dancing and singing. Maori representatives from various parts of the country spoke at the ceremony to express their best greetings to the Chinese people. Chinese Minister of Textile Industry Wu Wenying was also present.

Zhao Ziyang Bids Farewell

OW281240 Beijing XINHUA in English 1228 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 28 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang went to the State Guesthouse here this afternoon to bid farewell to visiting New Zealand Prime Minister David Lange, who is scheduled to leave here tomorrow morning for the Philippines. Zhao told Lange that his visit to China had been a successful one, which would further promote the sound development of the relations between the two countries. Lange agreed that his visit had deepened their mutual understanding.

Speaking to Chinese journalists at the International Club here earlier this afternoon, Lange said that he had very useful talks with his counterpart Zhao Ziyang and his meetings with other Chinese leaders had been detailed and constructive. He said that New Zealand and China shared a commitment to peace and stability in the Asia and the Pacific region as well as an interest in the prosperity in that region. According to the prime minister, trade between the two countries had grown on a two-way basis, with its volume increased from one million U.S. dollars in 1972 to 185 million last year. Admitting there has been a four-to-one trade imbalance in New Zealand's favor, he said that New Zealand wants to see China sell to its market. "We are going to make sure that China has the best chance to sell in New Zealand," he promised.

Earlier this afternoon, the China National Aero-Technology Import and Export Corporation and the Beijing Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics signed with Progeni, a New Zealand firm, contracts for joint technical development and for setting up a fourth generation learning system center.

Deng 'Extraordinarily Robust'

[By staff reporter Wang Gangyi]

[Text] The economic and social developments of the next five years are crucial to China's stability and progress in the following decades, Deng Xiaoping told New Zealand Prime Minister David Lange in Beijing yesterday. "China has achieved remarkable results over the last five years," Deng said during his talks with the visiting prime minister in the Great Hall of the People. "But this is only the beginning of a long march," said Deng, chairman of the Chinese Communist Party Central Advisory Commission. Deng told Lange that China's success depended on two important conditions, the continued pursuit of the country's present policies and the maintenance of world peace.

The Chinese leader said that during the Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-90), comprehensive economic reforms would involve politics, education, science, technology and other areas. The success of these reforms would lay a foundation for continued stability for several decades to come. National construction depended on a peaceful environment, so China adhered to the pursuit of an independent foreign policy, which was aimed at maintaining world peace, he said. China's progress would benefit peace, he continued, and the country would become an important force for preventing world conflict.

The New Zealand prime minister yesterday also met Hu Yaobang, general-secretary of the Chinese Communist Party. Lange said that his visit to China was "very significant" and he considered that the two countries could strengthen their economic co-operation by launching joint venture enterprises. Hu noted that friendship between China and New Zealand had developed greatly, and suggested that the two countries undertake various forms of co-operation in trade, textiles and light industry.

The New Zealand prime minister told reporters at a press conference in Beijing yesterday that he didn't detect any policy differences among the Chinese leaders in his talks. To press on with the economic reforms, Lange said, was a consistent theme in the talks. There was absolutely no possibility of a deviation from existing policies, he asserted. He said: "The speculation that if one of the leaders were to go the commitment to the economic reform would be shattered, seems to me invalid.

"I must also say," he added, "that Chairman Deng seems to me to be extraordinarily robust." Yesterday afternoon, Premier Zhao Ziyang went to the State guesthouse to bid farewell to Lange who is leaving China today for a visit to the Philippines.

No Nuclear-Armed Ships

OW290045 Tokyo KYODO in English 0033 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 29 KYODO -- Chinese leaders say China will not allow nuclear-armed ships from other countries to visit its ports, New Zealand Prime Minister David Lange told newsmen here Friday evening. Lange disclosed this after three days of talks with Chinese leaders, including senior leader Deng Xiaoping, party chief Yu Yaobang and Premier Zhao Ziyang. Lange is to leave here for the Philippines Saturday morning. The Chinese position on the issue was disclosed when Lange asked whether China had resumed talks with the United States about port calls by U.S. warships, he told the newsmen.

A scheduled call by U.S. Seventh Fleet ships at Shanghai last May was canceled after China demanded that they carry no nuclear arms. The U.S. never says officially whether its warships are nuclear-armed or not.

Previously, China only informally disclosed that the U.S. refusal to clarify whether the ships are nuclear-armed led to the cancellation of the port visit. And Lange was the first foreign premier to hear from Chinese leaders that China will keep out nuclear-armed ships from all countries and not only the U.S.

Chinese leaders, however, told Lange that Beijing showed its basic position on the problem to the U.S. side not from an aggressive intention but from an earnest wish to maintain good relations with Washington, Lange told newsmen.

FILIPINOS EXPRESS CONCERN OVER DISSOLVING PARLIAMENT

OW261916 Beijing XINHUA in English 1856 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Manila, March 26 (XINHUA) -- The Official PHILIPPINE NEWS AGENCY (PNA) today reported mixed reactions to President Corazon Aquino's proclamation yesterday of the provisional constitution and the dissolution of the National Assembly. While ordinary citizens favorably reacted to the president's move, politicos of the old order were severe in their criticism of the chief executive's action, PNA said, adding that some of the opposition even declared they would join protests against Mrs Aquino's moves. But those newly-appointed to positions in local governments praised the president and told people in their localities that Mrs. Aquino's action was necessary to effect reforms, PNA said.

The Agency quoted Herminio Bautista, an engineer in Baguio City, as saying that the proclamation "is very encompassing to deliver the needed measures to help our community solve its manifold problems. Only by this means could President Aquino institute reforms both in the government and private sector. A sweeping reform could eradicate graft and corruption in our midst," Bautista said.

Twenty farmers, fishermen, housewives and market vendors interviewed by the agency said is does not matter if people will call Mrs. Aquino a dictator provided she does not steal and rob the government funds.

Command Brig. Gen. Ramon Montano, acting chief of the military's capitol region, along with his Chief of Staff Col. Emiliano Templo, expressed optimism that under the present setup, the government will pave the necessary changes in the country's "political, economic and military establishments."

MP Rafael Palmares, who had been deputy agriculture minister in the Marcos administration, however, said he has relayed his disagreement over the dissolution of the national assembly to his colleagues in Manila. He expressed the desire to join the nationwide protest over the president's move, PNA said. Palmares said he will attend the projected National Assembly session on April 14 and is willing to be arrested or shot as a consequence of his defiance.

Today some MPs expressed their opposition to the president's decision and threatened to set up a rebel legislature which will convene on April 14.

PHILIPPINES MULLS REPUDIATION OF SOME DEBTS

OW301310 Beijing XINHUA in English 1254 GMT 30 Mar 86

[Text] Manila, March 30 (XINHUA) -- The Philippines is considering selective repudiation of foreign loans, Economic Planning Minister Solita Monsod said today. "We're studying the possibility of repudiating foreign debts arising from overpricing," Solita Monsod said in a telephone interview. According to Monsod, local projects with Japanese funding were mostly overpriced.

One option, Monsod said, is for the Philippines to pay Japanese lenders of the actual loan and write off the portion arising from overpricing. Another option is to completely write off the debt, charging that there was "bad faith" in the loan arrangement, she said.

She said the national economic and development authority (NEDA), of which she is the director-general, will review all the government and private contracts related involving government financing and guarantees and Japanese lending. "We will determine if there are evidences of overpricing," she said, adding that she intends to raise the issue in the cabinet. She declined to give any figure arising from the overpricing.

Monsod made the statement following reports that Japanese firms overpriced their equipment they sold to local industries and gave multi-million dollar commissions to deposed President Marcos and his businessmen friends. A former executive of Galleon Shipping Corporation said today that Marubeni Corp. of Japan overpriced by as much as 70 million U.S. dollars for nine Japanese vessels it sold to Galleon in 1980.

OVERSEAS CHINESE PAPER TO RESUME IN PHILIPPINES

HK290744 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1444 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Hong Kong, 25 March (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- News from Manila: Yu Chang-cheng, former publisher, and Yu Chang-keng, former chief editor of the Philippine OVERSEAS CHINESE COMMERCIAL NEWSPAPER [hua qiao shang bao 5478 0294 0794 1032], disclosed here yesterday that this paper will resume publication very soon and that preparations are being made now.

Referring to the paper's purpose, the Yu brothers said that, as in the past, the paper will preserve its character of daring to speak out and will offer constructive criticisms on the Chinese community, Philippine society, and China. It will also arouse its readers' interest in the future and trends of the Philippine Chinese community.

The OVERSEAS CHINESE COMMERCIAL NEWSPAPER was first run by Yu Yi-ting, father of the Yu brothers. It ceased publication after Yu Yi-tung was arrested and killed by Japanese troops when the Philippines fell into the hands of the Japanese. After the surrender of the Japanese, it resumed publication and was managed by Yu Chang-cheng and his brother. In 1970, the Yu brothers were deported to Taiwan by the Marcos government and the OVERSEAS CHINESE COMMERCIAL NEWSPAPER was then closed down in 1972. In 1972 and 1973, the Yu brothers were set free one after another. They left Taiwan and went to live in North America. In early March this year, after Marcos stepped down, they returned to the Philippines to reunite with their families. Yu Chang-keng said: We were born and brought up in the Philippines and will be happy to contribute to Philippine society.

SINGAPORE WORKS TO KEEP FINANCIAL CENTER STATUS

OW301314 Beijing XINHUA in English 1303 GMT 30 Mar 86

[Text] Singapore, March 30 (XINHUA) -- Singapore has recently set up a high-powered committee to ensure the country's position as a leading international foreign exchange center. The committee is aimed at meeting the growing challenge of other financial centers in the region, such as Tokyo and Hong Kong and improve professional and ethical standards here. It will look into ways of expanding and strengthening foreign exchange and financial markets, such as fund management. It would also tap more international business.

Singapore is a foreign currency market. Nearly 14 billion U.S. dollars in foreign currency, about 8 percent of the world's turnover, are traded each day in Singapore, ranking the country first in Asia and fifth in the world after London, New York, Zurich and Frankfurt. The world foreign exchange market has grown from about 40 billion U.S. dollars of daily turnover in 1974 to about 170-180 billion U.S. dollars a day at the end of last year. Other foreign exchange centers such as Tokyo, Hong Kong and Frankfurt were growing much faster than Singapore. Among more than 100 banks and about 50 merchant banks represented in Singapore, only about a dozen are said to be active market makers. So, one of the main tasks of the new committee is to increase the number of active participants.

[Text] At the invitation of the relevant departments of Singapore, a 5-member Shandong provincial economic investigation group led by Liang Buting will leave Beijing for a week's tour of Singapore on 31 March. The group will conduct investigations on the situation of urban construction, social development, and tourist trade during its stay in Singapore. This is the first high-level visiting group dispatched by our province since last September when Lee Kuan Yew, prime minister of Singapore, toured our province during this visit to China. On the evening of 28 March together with Mr (Fu Jingguo), outgoing representative of the Singapore trade representative's office in China, (Li Yingjun), newly appointed representative of the Singapore trade representative's office, and his wife met with Liang Buting and his part at the office in Beijing. The two parties talked with each other in an atmosphere of cordial friendship. They unanimously expressed that from now on they will increasingly expand the cooperation and exchange in the cultural and education fields. Mr (Li Yingjun) wished Liang Buting and his party a successful visit.

SINO-AUSTRALIAN SMELTER TO AID PRODUCTION

OW300908 Beijing XINHUA in English 0648 GMT 30 Mar 86

[Excerpts] Canberra, March 30 (XINHUA) -- Australia's gross export income from bauxite, alumina and aluminum in 1985 is estimated to exceed 2,500 million Australian dollars (about 1,775 million U.S. dollars), which is about 25 percent higher than 1984's. According to the latest review by the bureau of mineral resources of the country's resources and energy department, Australia in 1985 exported 7,176,093 tonnes of alumina (including aluminum hydroxide) and 559,517 tonnes of aluminum refinery shapes.

Australia, the world's largest bauxite and alumina producer, is estimated to produce 32,400,000 tonnes of bauxite, 8,791,501 tonnes of alumina and 851,286 tonnes of aluminum in 1985, which respectively represent about 42, 36 and seven percent of the western world's production. Australian Minister for Resources and Energy Gareth Evans said a few days ago that his country's production and exports of aluminum are likely to increase substantially in the late 1980s when the Portland aluminum smelter comes on stream. The smelter, a joint project in which the China International Trust and Investment Corporation has ten percent equity, is planned to produce 600,000 tonnes of aluminum annually after it goes into full operation..

DANISH PRIME MINISTER COMPLETES CHINA VISIT

Zhao Ziyang Phones Schluter

OW291516 Beijing XINHUA in English 1436 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Text] Shanghai, March 29 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang made a phone call from Beijing to Danish Prime Minister Poul Schluter in Shanghai this afternoon, congratulating Schluter on his successful visit to China. Zhao told Schluter said that the visit had strengthened mutual understanding between China and Denmark, and has given an impetus to their friendly cooperation in the future. Zhao asked the prime minister to convey to the Danish people the good wishes of the Chinese people after his return to Denmark.

Schluter expressed his thanks for the hospitality accorded him during his stay in China. He described his visit to China as being "very successful", adding, "We've seen so much and we have had discussions with so many kind people." The Danish premier told Zhao that a highlight yesterday was his party's tour of the Baoshan steel works in Shanghai.

Schluter discussed with personnel from economic circles on further developing economic and technological cooperation between Denmark and Shanghai here this morning, and visited a township on the outskirts of China's biggest industrial city this afternoon. The guests enjoyed a theatrical program here tonight. They arrived from Hefei, capital of Anhui province, yesterday and are scheduled to leave for home tomorrow.

Meets With Rui Xingwen

OW300650 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 0100 GMT 30 Mar 86

[Excerpts] Danish Prime Minister Schluter yesterday evening held a press conference at the Shanghai Jinjiang Guest House. He emphatically pointed out: My current visit to China is very successful. My two discussions with Deng Xiaoping and Zhao Ziyang in Beijing are the two most interesting discussions in my many years of political life.

Touching on the issue of how to maintain a trade balance between China and Denmark, Prime Minister Schluter said: China can export various things to Denmark. In recent years, China's exports to Denmark have increased over the past. In the future, China can export more to Denmark. Denmark has been importing textile, chemical industry, and some machinery products. Denmark can also help China export its products to other countries and we have actually done this.

Yesterday evening, Rui Xingwen, secretary of the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee, met with Danish Prime Minister Schluter and accompanied the distinguished Danish guests to see a cultural performance especially prepared for them.

According to other reports, yesterday afternoon in Beijing, Premier of the State Council Zhao Ziyang, telephoned Danish Prime Minister Poul Schluter, who will soon leave Shanghai for home, to congratulate him on the complete success of his visit to China.

Departs Shanghai for Home

OW300858 Beijing XINHUA in English 0847 GMT 30 Mar 86

[Text] Shanghai, March 30 (XINHUA) -- Danish Prime Minister Poul Schluter and his party left here for home by air this morning at the end of their official visit to China.

Before his departure Schluter said in an interview with Chinese journalists that his journey had been a great success both politically as well as with regard to bilateral economic and industrial relations. He said his two conversations one with Deng Xiaoping and the other with Zhao Ziyang were almost the most interesting ones he had in many years of his political life.

Schluter said mutual cooperation between Denmark and China and other West European countries were based on a common desire of safeguarding world peace. He said China was a good trade partner with Denmark and there were great potentials in bilateral trade.

Schluter and his party were seen off at the airport by Minister of Civil Affairs Cui Naifu who had accompanied him on the visit and Vice-Mayor of Shanghai Municipality Zhu Zongbao.

Meet With Hu Yaobang

OW291048 Beijing XINHUA in English 1030 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 29 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Communist Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang met Hans-Jochen Vogel, vice-chairman of the Social Democratic Party of Germany and chairman of the parliamentary group from the party of Bundestag, and his group here today. Hu and Vogel exchanged views on international issues of common concern.

Speaking on world peace, Hu said the unity of people of all countries to fight against war and in defense of peace is the best way to safeguard world peace, adding that the bright future of world peace can be gained.

Sharing his view, Vogel said that the people of the world should embark on a long march for the cause of peace. The United States and the Soviet Union should spend the money, which they use for arms race, on eliminating the unjust phenomena in the world and on eliminating poverty, he said. Vogel praised the tremendous efforts China has been making in its economic restructuring, and wished its people still greater achievements in economic construction.

Present on the occasion was Hu Qili, member of the political bureau, and member of the secretariat, of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee.

The Federal German visitors arrived here March 26 as guests of the Chinese People's Institute of Foreign Affairs, and will leave here tomorrow for a tour of Wuhan, Shanghai and Suzhou.

SINO-FRENCH ECONOMIC LAW SEMINAR OPENS

OW300856 Beijing XINHUA in English 0822 GMT 30 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 30 (XINHUA) -- Sino-French Seminar on Economic Laws, sponsored jointly by China's Ministry of Justice, the China Law Society and L'Ordre des Avocats a la Cour de Paris (Parisian Law Society), opened here today. The purpose of the seminar is to enhance understanding between Chinese and foreign lawyers and to pave the way for economic cooperation between China and other countries.

During the four-day sitting, about 60 Chinese and French experts will discuss the legislation on joint ventures, contracts, patents, trade mark and arbitration.

Since China endorsed an open policy in 1979, it has promulgated over 50 laws and regulations governing its economic relations with foreigners.

Almost all courts in the country have economic courts. And the China Council for the Promotion of International Trade has set up here in the capital the commission for arbitrating foreign economic dealings and trade. Apart from its committee for examining trade marks, the State Administration for Industry and Commerce has committees at all levels for arbitrating economic disputes. The Chinese Patent Bureau has an examination office for patent rights. In addition, law offices have been set up in many major cities and coastal ports to provide services to foreign businessmen.

In order to learn from their foreign counterparts, Chinese lawyers have, in recent years strengthened exchanges with lawyers from Japan, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United States.

DUTCH NAVAL COMMANDER FETED IN BEIJING

OW291627 Beijing XINHUA in English 1542 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 29 (XINHUA) -- The Commander-in-Chief of the Royal Netherlands Navy, Vice-Admiral C.H.E. Brainich, and his wife were honored at a banquet given by Chinese Navy Commander Liu Huaqing here tonight. In a toast, Luu said, though China and the Netherlands are far apart geographically, both share the desire to safeguard world peace and develop bilateral relations.

The successful visit to Shanghai by a task group of the Royal Netherlands Navy earlier this month left a deep impression on the officers and men of the Chinese Navy, he said. He believed that the vice-admiral's current visit would further enhance mutual understanding and friendly relations between the two navies.

His Dutch counterpart said that, in addition to getting an insight into Chinese society and culture, he also hoped to see Chinese naval installations and to discuss matters of common interest with Chinese naval personnel during the visit. He also hoped his visit would strengthen the existing ties between the two navies.

Soon after the guests arrived here this afternoon, Liu Huaqing presided over a welcoming ceremony at the local naval headquarters. Later they held talks.

MUGABE THANKS PRC, UK FOR MILITARY TRAINING HELP

OW281658 Beijing XINHUA in English 1648 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Harare, March 28 (XINHUA) -- Zimbabwean Prime Minister Robert Mugabe expressed thanks yesterday to the Chinese and British Governments for helping train the Zimbabwe National Army, Zimbabwe newspaper reported here today.

Speaking after reviewing a parade by the first field regiment of the Zimbabwe artillery near Chakari, the prime minister said that Zimbabwe's borders could have been extremely vulnerable to external aggression, particularly one by South Africa, had it not been for the assistance received from the country's friends.

The regiment was first trained by the Chinese for a year and received another year's training from the Birtish military advisory training team.

"In our attempts to achieve our desired goal of military discipline and excellence, we are fully aware that a weaker Zimbabwe could aggravate instability in our sub-region and so create seeds of international insecurity," the prime minister said. He said, "accordingly we salute those of our friends and allies who join hands with us in creating favorable conditions for regional stability and international peace and security."

The prime minister urged the regiment not to be complacent with the training they had received, but to continue training and keep abreast with the changing world of military technology.

There was also need for army cadres to be politically conscious of national, regional and international affairs, he stressed.

SFRY PRESIDENT MEETS PRESS ON EVE OF PRC VISIT

OW310712 Beijing XINHUA in English 0635 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Excerpts] Belgrade, March 31 (XINHUA) -- Yugoslav state leader Radovan Vlajkovic last week said that Yugoslav-Sino friendly relations have developed in a sound and comprehensive way. The relationship is built on the principle of full mutual respect and trust, and non-interference in each other's internal affairs. President Vlajkovic made the statement during a wide-ranging interview with Chinese reporters given as a prelude to his visit to China beginning April 2. But, the growth of bilateral economic cooperation, though steady in recent years, does not reflect the potential and the interest of both sides in this field. Vlajkovic predicted that his coming visit to China will result in new prospects for bilateral cooperation, especially in the economic field.

Referring to the Non-Aligned Movement, Vlajkovic said under the present international situation, people in the world naturally hope that the movement will adhere to its basic directions in major international issues such as peace and security, disarmament, democratic international relations and progress of the world. The eighth summit conference of the Non-Aligned States will convene in Harare this year. As one of the founders of the Non-Aligned Movement, the president said, Yugoslavia will continue to give its full support to the principles of the movement, and will help strengthen the movement, which was founded 25 years ago.

[Text] Belgrade, March 28 (XINHUA) -- The President of the Presidium of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia Radovan Vlajkovic left here this morning for official visits to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the People's Republic of China. "I am very glad to pay the visits," Vlajkovic said to a Chinese reporter before getting on a special plane. "My visit to China is taking place at a time not only when the friendly relations between China and Yugoslavia are developing vigorously, but also when the political and economic situation in the world is serious." He said he will have a frank and detailed exchange of views with Chinese leaders on important relations between the two countries and on international problems. He believed the talks will be rich in content, he added. Vlajkovic will visit China after his five-day tour of Korea starting tomorrow.

He was seen off at the Belgrade airport by Sinan Hasani, vice president of the Presidium, Ilijaz Kurtesi, president of the assembly and Janez Zemljaric, vice president of the Federal Executive Council. Some officials from the Korean and Chinese Embassies here were also present on the occasion.

[Text] Beijing, March 28 (XINHUA) -- President Li Xiannian returned here this evening after concluding his five-nation tour, which has taken him to Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Egypt, Somalia and Madagascar. Li and his party were greeted at the airport by Chinese leaders Zhao Ziyang, Yang Shangkun, Hu Qili, Wu Xueqian and Zhou Gucheng. Diplomatic envoys in Beijing from countries Li has just visited were also present. This morning when President Li and his party left Karachi where they had a stopover, they were seen off at the airport by Pakistan President Ziaul Haq, Foreign Minister Sahabzada Yakub Khan and Governor of Sind Province Jahandad Khan.

ZHAO ZIYANG, PENG ZHEN AT 2D NPC PLENARY MEETING

[Excerpt] Beijing, 26 Mar (XINHUA) -- The Fourth Session of the Sixth National People's Congress held its second plenary meeting at the Great Hall of the People this morning. The meeting heard a report on the draft 1986 plan for economic and social development by Song Ping, state councillor and minister in charge of the State Planning Commission. It also heard a report on the implementation of the state budget for 1985 and the draft state budget for 1986 by Wang Bingqian, state councillor and and minister of finance. Chairman Peng Zhen and Premier Zhao Ziyang attended today's meeting. The executive chairmen of the meeting today were Wang Renzhong, Ngapoi Ngawang Jigme, Yan Jici, Yang Dezhi, Ma Qingnian, Batubagen, Sun Guozhi, Li Zhen, He Haoju, Zhang Zhengde, Zhao Xiu, Huang Huang, and Jiao Linyi. The deputies began group meetings this afternoon to deliberate the reports by Zhao Ziyang, Song Ping, and Wang Bingqian.

Wang Bingqian on State Budget

OW290421 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0754 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, 26 Mar (XINHUA) -- In his report on the execution of the state budget for 1985 and on the draft state budget for 1986 to the Fourth Session of the Sixth National People's Congress, Finance Minister Wang Bingqian, who is also a state councillor, pointed out that as a result of carrying out the principle of invigorating the economy, opening to the outside world, and undertaking economic reform in economic and financial work while tightening control over macroeconomic operations, the country's economic situation had continued to improve in 1985.

Wang Bingqian said: According to present estimates, total state revenues in 1985 stood at 185.411 billion yuan (of the total revenues, domestic receipts amounted to 182.9 billion yuan), accounting for 120.8 percent of the budgeted figure; total expenditures stood at 182.594 billion yuan, accounting for 116.7 percent of the budgeted figure. As a result, there was a surplus of 2.817 billion yuan. Wang Bingqian noted that the following are the gratifying changes that had taken place in the country's financial situation:

1. There was a change from a deficit to a balance between revenues and expenditures in the state's finances.

The 1985 state budget predicted a deficit of 3 billion yuan, but in order to eliminate the financial deficit and stabilize the economy, the state adopted a series of measures and made concerted efforts to develop production, increase funds and revenues, and exercise control over expenses, thereby achieving a balance between revenues and expenditures despite a fairly large increase in both revenues and expenditures.

2. With the development of the economy and the expansion of financial sources, state revenues steadily increased. For years, China's state revenues lingered at around 100 billion yuan and generally increased at an annual rate of from 5 to 6 billion yuan. State revenues began to increase steadily beginning in 1983. Domestic receipts for 1983 and 1984 rose 12.7 and 25.5 billion yuan over 1982 and 1983, respectively. In 1985, domestic receipts again rose by 36.2 billion yuan over 1984, representing a rate of increase of 24.7 percent.

3. Rational distribution and utilization of funds ensured the construction of key state projects and the development of intellectual resources. In 1985, total state expenditures rose by 28.9 billion yuan, or 19 percent, over 1984. Of the total expenditures, the appropriation for domestic capital construction rose by 9 billion yuan, or 20 percent, over 1984; the appropriation for cultural, educational, scientific, and health undertakings went up by 5.399 billion yuan, or 20.5 percent, over 1984. The rate of increase of these two appropriations exceeded that of the total expenditures. New progress was made in construction in 1985, as the construction of key projects was completed at a quicker rate. Ninety-seven large and medium-sized projects were completed and put into operation in the same year, while another 134 individual projects were also completed.

4. With the development of production, people's living conditions further improved. In 1985, we made an important stride forward in wage reform. In state organs and institutions, we put a system into effect in which wages are related to specific work posts; in some large and medium-sized enterprises where conditions permitted, we tried out a system in which the total payroll of the workers and other employees was allowed to fluctuate with the economic performance of the enterprises. However, most of the enterprises continued to adopt the system of basic wages plus bonuses after having made proper wage readjustments. The state also subsidized a small number of enterprises that could not readjust workers' wages because they lacked bonus funds. Urban per capital income and peasants' per capita real income in 1985, after being adjusted for price increases, rose 10.6 and 8.4 percent, respectively, over 1984.

5. We achieved initial success in improving financial and economic discipline by launching a general inspection of taxation, financial work, and commodity prices.

Wang Bingqian said: This year is the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Making proper arrangements for the state budget for 1986 and fulfilling it is very important for accomplishing the economic and financial tasks for the 5-year plan period. The state budget for 1986 submitted to the current NPC session for examination has the total state revenues and expenditures in balance at 214.147 billion yuan. Wang Bingqian said: In order to successfully fulfill the state budget for 1986, to achieve a balance between revenues and expenditures and accomplish the financial and economic tasks for the first year of the 5-year plan period, we must seek ideological unity, pool the wisdom and efforts of the masses, and strive to accomplish the following tasks:

-- We must make vigorous efforts to increase production and practice economy, to raise economic efficiency, and to ensure a continued and steady increase in state revenues;

-- We must continue to tighten control over macroeconomic operations, act according to our capability, do the best we can, and exercise control over and reduce expenses;

-- We must strive to do a good job in restructuring the economy in accordance with the needs to consolidate, digest, and supplement the achievements of reform and to further improve our financial and taxation systems;

-- We must strengthen supervision over financial work, improve financial and economic discipline, and conscientiously curb unhealthy tendencies.

[Text] Beijing, March 29 (XINHUA) -- China will complete 3,600 km of new trunk railway lines over the next five years, according to the draft Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-90). During the same period, 3,300 km of lines will be double-tracked and another 4,000 km electrified. Construction of 11,600 km of expressways and trunk highways and dredging of 5,000 km of inland navigation channels are planned. The country will increase harbor handling capacity by 200 million tons over the next five years following completion of 120 deep-water berths and 80 which will handle smaller ships. The draft projects the installation of 2.5 to three million telephones in urban areas.

[Text] Beijing, March 29 (XINHUA) -- China's retail sales will jump 50 percent to 646 billion yuan in 1990 from 1985 levels, according to the draft Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-90).

The draft projects an average annual increase of 8.5 percent over the next five years. The volume of retail sales in rural areas will grow an average of 7.3 percent annually and in urban areas 10 percent during the same period, according to the draft. The number of outlets for retail sales, catering and service trades across the country would double to 25 million. Those outlets are expected to employ 50 million people -- a jump of nearly 100 percent from 1985.

[Text] Beijing, March 29 (XINHUA) -- Crop cultivation will account for 62 percent of China's agricultural output value in 1990, compared with 66 percent last year, according to the draft Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-90). The figure does not include the value created by village-run industries. Forestry, animal husbandry, aquatic product breeding and sideline production in rural areas will increase from 34 to 38 percent of all agricultural activity in the country, according to the draft. Overall, agriculture is expected to comprise 51 percent of the total rural output value by 1990, down from 57.1 percent last year. Grouped together, rural manufacturing, construction, transport, commerce and services are expected to increase from 42.9 to 49 percent.

[Text] Beijing, March 30 (XINHUA) -- Here are the 1990 output quotas for major household electric appliances and foods in the draft of China's Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-90):

-- television sets, 15 million, including five million or 22 percent more color television sets than last year.
-- refrigerators, 6.5 to 7.5 million, 4.7 to 5.4 times as many as in 1985.
-- washing machines, 12 million, up 36 percent from 1985.
-- sugar, 5.5 to six million tons, up 23.6 to 34.8 percent.
-- beer, 6.5 million tons (6.5 billion liters), up 110 percent.
-- soft drinks, three million tons (three billion liters), triple the 1985 figure.

In addition, according to the draft, Chinese-built parts and accessories for the electrical appliances are expected to replace most imported ones by 1990.

Part Fifteen

["Highlights of Seventh Five-Year Plan (15)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, March 30 (XINHUA) -- China will be able to employ virtually all of the 30 million people expected to enter the urban labor force over the next five years, according to the draft Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-90). The draft calls for creating jobs in enterprises owned by collectives and by individuals particularly in service industries.

According to the plan, workers in state units will by 1990 comprise 67.2 percent of the total urban employment, down from 69.9 percent last year; those in urban collectives will increase from 26.6 to 27.8 percent; and urban self-employed workes, 3.5 to five percent. In rural areas, according to the draft, farmers raising crops are expected by 1990 to accound for 50 percent of the rural workforce, down from 65 percent last year. Peasants engaged in forestry, livestock breeding, fisheries, and production and processing of goods related to agriculture will increase from 15 to 20 percent of the rural workforce; those working in rural factories or construction firms, 12 to 18 percent; and those in transportation and commerce, eight to 12 percent.

[Text] Beijing, March 30 (XINHUA) -- The wages of Chinese workers and other employees will total 190 billion yuan in 1990, 54.5 billion yuan more than last year, according to the draft Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-90). The draft projects an annual average increase of seven percent. By 1990, the net income of each peasant will 560 yuan, up 41.1 percent from 1985 -- an annual average rise of seven percent. Of this, earnings from farming will comprise around 60 percent, down from 70 percent last year, while those from other rural economic sectors will rise from 20 to around 30 percent. Compared with the previous five years, the expenditure on food of urban and rural residents will go down from 58 to 55 percent of their incomes; and on fuel, from four to three percent. Spending on other consumer goods will rise from 13 to 15 percent; and cultural entertainment and services, from four to five percent. Rents are expected to increase from eight to 10 percent, while spending on clothing will remain at much the same level of 12 percent.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT GOALS OUTLINED IN PLAN

OW290940 Beijing XINHUA in English 0849 GMT 29 Mar 86

["Five-Year Plan Sets Regional Development Goals" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, March 29 (XINHUA) -- China will speed up economic growth along its east coast region over the next five years and through the 1990s, according to the draft Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-1990). Meanwhile, central and inland (?areas will) concentrate on developing energy and raw materials, while the western region will make further preparations for its future development. The east region includes the three big cities of Beijing, Shanghai and Tianjin, covers more than 1,300,000 square kilometers and has a total population of about 400 million. The central region, as defined in the draft plan, stretches north from Inner Mongolia, covers 2,700,000 square kilometers and has a population of 370 million, and the western region covers 5,300,000 square kilometers and has a population of about 230 million.

As the plan points out, the coastal region is the most developed, and China's economic development shows a tendency of spreading westwards. According to the plan, the eastern region should focus its economic growth on the technological modernization of traditional industries and existing factories. It should also develop new industries, such as high technology and industries making quality consumer goods.

During the next five years, China will step up construction of its four special economic zones, and 14 coastal cities and three other areas open to foreign trade and investment. They are all in the eastern region. The draft says: They should become China's base for trade with other countries, and should train senior engineers and managerial staff for and supply new technology, consultancy and information to other parts of the country.

Over the next five years, the eastern region will give top priority to technological modernization in old industrial cities such as Shanghai, Tianjin, and Shenyang and Dalian in Liaoning Province. It will continue efforts to attract foreign investment, new technology and advanced equipment.

During the 1986-1990 period, the central region will step up development of energy resources (electricity, coal and oil), non-ferrous metals, phosphorus and building materials. Development over the next five years could turn the area into the country's largest producer of energy, raw materials, major machinery, electrical products and grain. According to the draft, the region's coal output is expected to exceed 600 million tons a year by 1990 -- up 24 percent from 1985. The draft says: The central region should boost lateral economic ties with the eastern and western regions, while absorbing advanced foreign technology and managerial expertise.

During the 1986-1990 period, the western region will concentrate on expanding agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry and transportation. It will also develop energy and mineral resources and processing industries. It will build new railway lines connected with the central and eastern regions, and speed up road construction. Civil aviation will be greatly expanded in Xinjiang, Qinghai, Yunnan and Tibet. The draft proposes the establishment of energy and mineral development zones along the middle and upper reaches of the Yellow River and the upper reaches of the Yangtze River. Top priority will be given to expanding the iron and steel industry, non-ferrous metals, chemicals and electric power in the Sichuan-Yunnan-Guizhou border area. The draft plan says the western region should promote elementary education in areas inhabited by ethnic minorities, strengthen links with the eastern and central regions and expand trade with other countries, particularly border trade.

NPC DEPUTY ON DEFENSE AIDING CIVILIAN SECTOR

OW281528 Beijing XINHUA in English 1446 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 28 (XINHUA) -- China's better-equipped defense industry will further switch to civilian production in the next five years, a Chinese official said here today. The focus will be on projects concerning the building of nuclear power plants, civil airliners, satellites for civilian use, and complete sets of equipment and key parts that civilian industry is presently unable to produce, said Nie Li, deputy director of the science and technology section under the Science and Technology Commission for National Defense. Nie, a deputy to the National People's Congress, said that the defense industry should make further efforts to share its advanced technology with all the other sectors of the economy by surmounting regional and departmental barriers, and developing various forms of cooperation in personnel, resources, funds and technology. The shift of technology developed by the defense industry to civilian use, according to Nie, is an important step in the strategic change of the defense industry and is of great significance in China's modernization drive.

In line with the principle of integrating military and civilian production, Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang told the National People's Congress on Tuesday, we must continue to apply scientific and technological achievements in the defense industry more widely and effectively in other sectors of the economy.

In 1985, according to Nie, the output value of products for civilian use manufactured by the defense industry quadrupled that in 1980 and its proportion in the total output value of the industry rose from 16.3 percent in 1980 to 41.8 percent in 1985. In the past five years, Nie said, the defense industry's civilian production mainly focused on transport vehicles, medical instruments, machinery for the energy, food and light industries, optical instruments, electronic products, and durable appliances. Products turned out by the defense industry in those years included 1.97 million bicycles, 1.3 million motorcycles, two million washing machines, 5,500 motor vehicles, 5,000 sets of hydraulic props for the mining industry and 14.6 million watt-hour meters. Nie said that 63 varieties of the defense industry's civilian products won national quality awards and some have entered the international markets. A number of scientific and technological achievements have been transferred from the defense industry to other sectors of the economy and have brought about good economic results, according to Nie. Also, the defense industry has enagaged in research on and production of several key components of imported equipment and helped keep the equipment operating well.

PANEL DISCUSSIONS ON ZHAO, OTHER REPORTS

OW291255 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Excerpts] Deputies to the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC continued panel discussions today to deliberate Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the draft Seventh 5-Year Plan, Song Ping's report on the draft 1986 plan for national economic and social development, and Wang Bingqian's report on the execution of the state budget for 1985 and on the draft state budget for 1986. Over the past few days, the deputies have earnestly discussed the series of principles and measures put forward by Premier Zhao in his report on national economic and social development during the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

Geng Biao, deputy from Hunan and vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, said: Comrade Ziyang's report concerning the Seventh 5-Year Plan is a programmatic document for our struggle in the next 5 years. It is different from the previous reports in the following points: First, it is more realistic, in that it confirms the achievements as well as clarifies existing problems. Second, it stresses the importance of political and ideological work, which, along with the building of spiritual civilization, is indispensable to our modernization drive. Third, it cites 10 aspects of our independent peaceful foreign policy, which has been the basis for our diplomatic activities in recent years and has brought about an unprecedentedly excellent situation on the diplomatic front.

Ni Zhifu, deputy from Tianjin and secretary of the Tianjin Municipal CPC Committee, said: The most important task of the Seventh 5-Year Plan is to give priority to reform and explore new economic operational mechanism. Urban economic structural reform should start with reforms in enterprises and encouragement of lateral economic cooperation. He went on to say: At present, Tianjin Municipality is making preparations, together with the ministries of machine building and electronics industry, to try out an integration project for the machinery and electronics industries, in order to set up corporations of machinery and electronics enterprises in Tianjin.

Ni Zhifu pointed out that to revitalize Tianjin's industry it is necessary to reinforce the construction of basic links, improve final product quality, and accumulate necessary reserves in material technology and specialized personnel for the Seventh 5-Year Plan and beyond.

Pu Chaozhu, deputy from Yunnan and secretary of the Yunnan Provincial CPC Committee, said: My understanding of the need for moderate economic growth rate, as explained by Premier Zhao in his report, is that we must adopt a realistic and scientific approach. Take a province for instance. It is necessary to base the link between regional interests and the overall national interests on the actual condition in the province. Although Yunnan is weak in its foundations and backward in technology, it has rich resources and great potential. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we shall persistently make reforms, bring into full play our advantages, and encourage existing enterprises and the 37 million peasants to set up rural enterprises, so that the province's economic growth rate will be slightly higher than the national average.

The deputies agreed with Premier Zhao's principle of giving top priority to reform and carrying it out simultaneously with construction.

Ye Xuanping, deputy from Guangdong and its governor, said: During the Seventh 5-Year Plan, Guangdong will continue to steadfastly carry out the policies of opening to the outside world and making reforms. Although problems will crop up in the course of reform, as long as we try our utmost to overcome difficulties, we shall be able to push forward the reform.

The Fourth Session of the Sixth CPPCC National Committee also continued panel discussions on the reports by Premier Zhao, Song Ping, and Wang Bingqian.

Governors Praise Report

OW291321 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 0200 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Excerpts] In deliberating over Premier Zhao Ziyang's report, the deputies of the Sixth National People's Congress unanimously held that it completely conformed with the actual situation in the country and was extremely inspiring.

Jiang Minkuan, an NPC deputy and governor of Sichuan, said: The report on government work completely conforms with the actual situation in Sichuan Province. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan, Sichuan scored new achievements in economic construction. Its total product increased by 10.2 percent each year on average, surpassing the 5 percent increase required by the Sixth 5-Year Plan. Its national income increased every year, surpassing the 5 percent increase required by the Sixth 5-Year Plan. With the situation becoming better each passing day, we have even greater confidence in the party and in the people's government.

Comrade Xue Ju, governor of Zhejiang, said: The favorable economic development in Zheijiang proves that the principles and policies laid down since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee are absolutely correct. He said: The three major indices in Zhejiang during the Sixth 5-Year Plan -- Zhejiang's total output value in industry and agriculture, its total product values, and its national income -- more than economic development in the province has never been so fast since the forthcoming of the nation. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we must continue to bring into full play the predominant role of the light and textile industries, try our best to improve economic efficiency, and follow the new economic system as soon as possible.

PLAN TERMED 'MORE COMPREHENSIVE, SUBSTANTIAL'

OW291523 Beijing XINHUA in English 1501 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 29 (XINHUA correspondent Wang Jinhe) -- China's draft Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-90), now being considered by the on-going annual National People's Congress (NPC) session, is a "more comprehensive and substantial development plan" than the preceding one. This is the general view of deputies to the NPC session, which began Tuesday, while discussing the draft. What China achieved in the last five-year period has attracted worldwide attention, they noted, and the new plan is even more positive. A salient feature of the draft plan is that it has not only definite targets but also clear strategic principles and policy measures -- an illustration of the new style of stressing actual results in guiding China's economic work. The NPC deputies expressed their satisfaction with the fact that the current draft has been submitted for deliberation in the first year of the five-year period, whereas previously the draft plans were submitted in the second or the third year. This shows a marked improvement in government work and planning, they noted.

What is more important is that the draft sets the country's economic growth rate at 6.7 percent for the coming five years -- a more moderate one than that in the last five years. This will bring China's 1990 industrial and agricultural output value to 1,677 billion yuan (calculated on the 1980 constant price) -- 2.3 times the 1980 figure. In other words, China in 1990 will have completed more than 50 percent of the target of quadrupling the 1980 figure by the turn of the century.

Premier Zhao Ziyang said in his report, read to the congress previously, that the growth rate is optimistic but not over-ambitious, and it is likely to be exceeded. Both the NPC deputies and Beijing economists agree with this. A prevailing view in their group discussions is that the quadrupling target is sure to be realized ahead of time. Other outstanding features of the draft include an over-all arrangement of the country's economic construction work, improvement of the people's livelihood and of the country's immediate interests and long-term development needs. According to the draft, the rate of individual consumption will rise by around 27 percent in 1986-90, but at the same time efforts will be made to concentrate necessary financial and material resources on sectors which have a direct bearing on the further development of the country's economy and on the fundamental intersts of the people while controlling investment in fixed assets in general. The sectors include energy, posts and telecommunications, scientific research, education and the upgrading of existing enterprises.

The third salient point of the plan is a call for priority on restructuring in all regions, departments and enterprises. The 100,000-word draft devotes several chapters to this, elaborating the importance, tasks and targets for the effort to restructure the country's economic set-up, in addition to setting the targets for each sector, as well as policies and measures, so that the deputies to the current session may discuss, revise and add as they deem necessary. The previous five-year plans, in contrast, contained very few policy measures apart from targets for various industries.

The deputies also pointed out that the draft plan embodies the principle of equality among all minority nationalities, as it lists practical measures for development of areas inhabited by ethnic groups. Deputies from the minority nationalities describe the draft as "a program to promote the unity and prosperity of all the country's nationalities."

It is also a plan for peace and development, as China stresses that its modernization drive needs a long-term peaceful international environment. The draft plan also sets targets for appropriate brakes on the growth of national defense expenditure. The draft explains that China will make further efforts to open to the outside world in the next five years, while promoting socialist culture and morality, socialist democracy and the legal system to guarantee the implementation of the new five-year plan.

LOCAL LEADERS ADVOCATE ATTENTION TO AGRICULTURE

OW301146 Beijing XINHUA in English 1123 GMT 30 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 30 (XINHUA) -- China should further consolidate agricultural production to make it a solid foundation of the national economy. This was a call from deputies from major agricultural areas of China at the on-going National People's Congress (NPC) session today. During the three-day examination of the Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-1990) put forward by Premier Zhao Ziyang Tuesday, many local leaders called for more input in agriculture and fresh measures to stabilize grain production and introduce a new economic set-up in rural China. In his report, Premier Zhao said that China's future agricultural production will more and more depend on the progress of science and technology, and on increased material input to improve the conditions of agricultural production. This was supported by many local leaders.

Jiang Minkuan, governor of southwest China's Sichuan Province, said his province will allocate 30 million yuan more for agriculture this year. This, he said, will be used in building market grain producing bases, farming facilities and in spreading science and technology know-how. The province will also provide funds for more fertilizers, Jiang said.

The governor noted that the province set up a foundation to aid the processing of farm produce in 1982 and the funds were provided by local financial departments. In addition, he said, the provincial scientific and technological association has also provided funds for projects such as soil improvement and trial manufacture of new products. With a population of more than 100 million, Sichuan ranks first in agricultural output value. It produces ten percent of the grain of the country with the 1985 figure reaching 37 million tons. Jiang affirmed that his province will keep its present grain-growing hectarage. According to a provincial government decision, peasants must reclaim the same hectarage of land for grain crops if they designated the same size of land to growing cash crops.

Cheng Xi, a senior official from southeast China's Fujian Province, suggested that funds for agricultural production be covered by the state, collective and individuals, and the local large key projects should enjoy central government financial aid.

Li Zhen, chairman of the Shandong Provincial People's Congress Standing Committee, called for greater attention to be paid to agriculture in realizing the Seventh Five-Year Plan. He criticised those who belittle the importance of this sector. He admitted that the size of cultivated land the province loses each year equals to a medium-sized county due to reckless use of the land. Moreover, because water conservancy facilities are in a state of disrepair in recent years, rural areas have suffered imcreasing natural disasters, and the province loses 84,000 hectares of arable land a year, the chairman added.

XINJIANG CHAIRMAN ON ZHAO ZIYANG WORK REPORT

[By reporter Hadir Umurdi and correspondent He Ruizhi]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 28 Mar (XINHUA) -- In a panel discussion to study Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the draft Seventh 5-Year Plan, Tomur Dawamat, deputy to the Sixth National People's Congress and chairman of the Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region, said: The report made a correct appraisal of the current economic situation in the whole country and summed up the fulfillment of the Sixth 5-Year Plan. The details of the Seventh 5-Year Plan have greatly inspired the people. They will encourage the people of all nationalities through the country to work hard in unity to achieve the nation's magnificent goals.

He said: Under the Sixth 5-Year Plan, China scored tremendous achievements in developing the modernization drive. Great changes took place in carrying out economic work. Xinjiang, like other localities in the country, witnessed sustained, stable, and coordinated growth. The whole region overfulfilled the Sixth 5-Year Plan by 10.9 percent. The total output value of industry and agriculture in 1985 in the region reached 12.325 billion yuan, overfulfilling the target set by the state by 11.1 percent. Tremendous progress was made in animal husbandry. The total grain output reached 9.933 billion jin. The region became self-sufficient in grain and sugar.

The total value of retail sales in Xinjiang in 1985 reached 6.2 billion yuan. In foreign trade, the total value of imports and exports came to $290 million. Xinjiang's revenues rose for 4 consecutive years. New developments were made in implementing the policy of opening to the outside world. A total of 22 economic contracts were signed with foreign businessmen. Xinjiang also established relations of cooperation with various fraternal provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions and with 13 ministries under the central government. Living standards of people of all nationalities in Xinjiang gradually improved. The total amount of saving deposits in the region reached 3.35 billion yuan in 1985, marking an increase of 550 million yuan over 1984. He said: All these achievements in Xinjiang show that our party's line, principles, and policies are correct. They conform with the aspirations of the people of all nationalities, laying a solid foundation for the overall fulfillment of the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

He said: During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, Xinjiang must continue to raise the living standards of the people of all nationalities while developing production. Particular efforts must be made to help peasants and herdsmen in poverty-stricken areas drive off poverty and become well-to-do. At the same time, Xinjiang must further develop socialist spiritual civilization, and bring about a fundamental change for the better in party style and in the general mood of society.

REN ZHONGYI, BAINQEN ERDINI COMMENT IN PANELS

OW301345 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1459 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 28 Mar (XINHUA) -- Deputies attending the Fourth Session of the Sixth National People's Congress held that the past 5 years were a period that witnessed the best economic and social development since the founding of the republic, that the next 5 years will be a critical period in which our economic development and reform should make tremendous progress, and that observing, analyzing, and appraising the current situation correctly and objectively is the most important guarantee for unifying the thinking and action of the people of the whole country and triumphantly fulfilling the "Seventh Five-Year" Plan.

The deputies today continued panel discussions of Premier Zhao Ziyang's report, the draft "Seventh 5-Year" Plan, and the reports made by Ministers Song Ping and Wang Bingqian. The panel discussions lasted the whole day. Yesterday and today the deputies focused their discussions on the current situation.

Deputy Ren Zhongyi, member of the Central Advisory Commission, said: In sizing up the situation, one must view the whole situation and make historical comparison and analysis. To make conclusions on the basis of individual, localized, or outward, temporary phenomena would be to make erroneous judgements which, in turn, would cause wavering or vacillation in policy, frustration of enthusiasm on the part of cadres and the masses, and serious and even irreparable political and economic loss.

He said: Tremendous achievements have been made in the past few years in all fields of work throughout the country. This is the main aspect. Some problems do exist. They are problems arising in the course of our advance. They are a minor aspect. Economic restructuring is a profound revolution. Each step forward may mean new contradictions, new problems, and new difficulties. But they are all temporary and can be solved in the course of our advance.

Deputy Bainqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyaincain, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, said: The plan contained in Premier Zhao Zhiyang's report is a heartening plan. He said: The achievements we have made are tremendous. Of course, we have come across some difficulties. But they are difficulties in the course of our advance, and not problems of orientation or line. They can certainly be overcome.

Deputy Wan Shaofen, secretary of the Jiangxi Provincial CPC Committee, said: Premier Zhao presented the draft "Seventh 5-Year" Plan to the NPC deputies for discussion in the very first spring of the "Seventh 5-Year Plan" period. This shows that our party and government have achieved a more profound understanding of socialist economic laws and have the ability and resolve to master objective economic laws. We must do our work still better to meet the requirements of the "Seventh 5-Year" Plan. Internally, we must invigorate our economy still more boldly; externally, we must open to the outside world still more boldly.

Deputy Li Ruihuan, mayor of Tianjin, said: It is imperative to carefully sum up the experience gained during the "Sixth 5-Year" Plan period and earnestly use this experience to guide our work in the "Seventh 5-Year" Plan period.

DEPUTIES STRESS REFORM IN GROUP MEETINGS

OW301401 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1453 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 29 Mar (XINHUA) -- Deputies to the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC, in group meetings examining and discussing Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the draft Seventh 5-Year Plan, emphatically pointed out that during the Seventh 5-Year Plan it is imperative to persist in placing reform in first place.

Chen Junsheng, secretary general of the State Council and deputy to the NPC, said: Our country's achievements during the "Sixth 5-Year Plan" were manysided. The biggest achievement among them was the successful implementation of reform of the economic structure in the rural areas and significant initial progress in reforming the economic structure in the cities. Chen Junsheng pointed out: In carrying out the reform work, we will naturally encounter some problems. Tactically, we must pay good attention to those problems and seriously study ways and means to properly solve them. However, strategically speaking, all those problems are nothing if compared with the great role of reform in promoting progress.

The problems that arise in the course of reform will gradually be solved as we deepen and improve our reform work.

Deputy Quan Shuren, governor of Liaoning Province, said: At the beginning of the "Sixth 5-Year Plan," Liaoning had all kinds of economic problems and could not make any progress. Through reform, especially in the past 3 years, we have seen bumper harvests in agricultural production and steady growth in industrial production. We have promoted coordination in developing the economy and made relatively big progress in opening to the outside world. The industrial base has been revitalized. In the "Seventh 5-Year Plan," the state regards Liaoning as a major region in carrying out technological transformation and capital construction. We must persist in placing reform in first place, further improve our economic work, stress carrying out technological transformation and building key construction projects, and concentrate our efforts on promoting Liaoning's economy.

Deputy Gao Di, secretary of the Jilin Provincial CPC Committee, said: The way out for our country lies in reform. The "Seventh 5-Year Plan" is a plan which places reform first. Some imbalances and unreasonable and unsatisfactory conditions that arise in the course of reform are unavoidable. The key to solving these problems is to seriously study and effectively solve these problems in the spirit of reform.

Deputy Li Qingwei, governor of Shaanxi Province, said: We must unify the cadres' and masses' understanding of reform and persist in placing reform in first place during the "Seventh 5-Year Plan" in order to ensure the healthy development of reform.

Deputy Zhou Keyu, deputy director of the General Political Department of the PLA, said: The "Seventh 5-Year Plan" was formulated in good time. Its explanations are quite full of adequate scientific proof. It has enable us to see a bright prospect. We must further unify our understanding of the situation and of policies, and especially raise our understanding in carrying out the three strategic changes in economic work. Army building should be subordinated to national economic construction and serve national economic construction. We must do a good job in streamlining the Army and use concrete actions of defending the security of the motherland's frontiers to promote the political situation of stability and unity. We should actively take part in building key construction projects of the state, do a good job in building spiritual civilization together with the people, cultivate more people who can do both military and civilian work, carry forward the fine tradition of the PLA's political work, and carry out the various tasks of the Army in a satisfactory manner.

THREE HARBIN OFFICIALS ACCUSED OF TAKING BRIBES

[Text] Harbin, March 27 (XINHUA) -- Three senior officials have been arrested in northeast China for allegedly taking bribes, a Harbin Public Security Bureau official said today. The three officials have been expelled from the Communist Party, and removed from their official posts. They will face prosecution when investigations have been completed.

Wang Zhengming, who was deputy director of the electric power bureau of Heilongjiang Province, is accused of abusing his authority by telling one of his bureau's plants to sell 50 tons of scarce rolled steel to a company in Shandong Province at a reduced price. He is alleged to have received a 10,000 yuan bribe from the Shandong company through one of his relatives, who is said to have secured the deal. Wang is said to have secretly returned the bribe last April when he began to fear that he might be found out.

Yang Cheng, party secretary and director of the Harbin municipal administration for industry and commerce, is said to have accepted bribes by granting trading licenses to two trade companies set up by state enterprises and several private businesses. Investigators say he took bribes of 16,000 yuan between the end of 1984 and last May. Yi Jingshan, party secretary of the Harbin municipal bureau of real estate, is accused of protecting some criminals and accepting 20,000 yuan in bribes from them.

[Commentator's article: "Abuse of Power for Selfish Ends Is Definitely Not Allowed"]

[Text] Who gives power to our cadres at various levels? The people give such power. What is our power intended for? It can be used only to serve the people. These are two basic points in the elementary knowledge of communists. However, some cadres who are party members forget such elementary knowlege under the influence of feudalist ideology and corruption by capitalist ideas. They have used the power given by the people to seek personal gains and, in doing so, unscrupulously disregarded law and discipline and have even fallen into the criminal abyss. The cases of three bureau-level leading cadres in Heilongjiang Province who asked for and received bribes, reported by this paper today, are precisely typical examples in this regard.

By analyzing these cases, we can see that the leading cadres who misused their power for selfish ends were overcome by covetousness and blinded by lust for gain. They lost the elementary qualifications for state functionaries and completely discarded the Communist Party members' goal of serving the people wholeheartedly. Though they knew they were committing criminal offenses, what they had in mind was how to turn power into money, and they ignored everything in trying to achieve this goal. A telephone call or a brief note could bring them a stack of bank notes. This convenience made them more and more grasping. They lost their heads, became unscrupulous, and were finally directed by the road sign of abusing power for selfish ends and embarked on the vile road of committing serious economic crimes.

Undoubtedly, neither the party nor the people will allow such bad elements to corrupt our party style and harm the interests of the state and people. These kinds of acts of abusing power for selfish ends is bitterly despised by the masses and must be investigated and dealt with resolutely. For those who have violated the criminal law, expulsion from the party is not sufficient, and it is imperative to look into their legal responsibility. The serious action taken by Heilongjiang Province to investigate and deal with the three criminal cadres has not only manifested our determination to struggle against the unhealthy practice of abusing power for selfish ends but is also aimed at educating the vast numbers of party members and cadres to bear in mind the party's purpose and state functionaries' duties, to be strict in disciplining themselves, to rectify their style, and to lead the masses to work hard selflessly for the program of socialist modernization!

HARD-WORKING, AFFLUENT PARTY MEMBERS LAUDED

[Commentator's article: "Party Members Who Take the Lead in Becoming Rich Through Hard Work Are Fine Examples"]

[Text] At present not many people will turn pale at the mention of becoming rich.

However, 4 or 5 years ago, when so many people did not have a clear understanding of the party's policy for making the people rich, party members in rural areas who took the lead in becoming rich through hard work had to take some risks. They needed the courage of those who "eat crabs" for the first time.

The "disease of being afraid of becoming rich" caused by "cutting off the capitalist tail" and "criticizing the upstarts" alone, which has lasted for a long time, could not be cured merely by several documents or calls of the authorities, let alone the confusion caused by traditional notions such as "the protruding part of a rafter rots first." Under such circumstances, without people who are like "the protruding part of a rafter" or " a treetop which stands higher than others," it would have been difficult to dispel the atmosphere in which 10,000 horses were all muted. What has actually happened is that many party members and peasants with broad vision and a relatively higher level of political consciousness and who have understood the spirit of the party's policies relatively faster than others, have given full play to their wisdom and ability, have seized and made use of all opportunities in developing production and in improving management, and have taken the lead in becoming rich. More and more people have followed their examples and a new situation in which the people are like the eight immortals crossing the seas, each one showing his or her prowess at becoming rich through hard work, has prevailed over the whole rural area. This is what people often say in places where the economy and the living standard have improved relatively quickly: Without the examples set by several courageous party members in the beginning, we could not have achieved today's prosperity.

In times of war in the past, party members charged under heavy fire. Likewise, in the course of rural economic reform, party members also dare to smash the "leftist" shackles and take the lead in becoming rich through hard work. This is the most practical spiritual encouragement and an effective call to the masses of people. It is a concrete manifestation of the value of being advanced as a communist.

To bring about common prosperity is our fundamental goal. This goal can only be attained step by step. Therefore, the party has put forward the policy of permitting some localities and some people to become rich through hard work before others so that they can bring along more people to become rich. Party members who have taken the lead in becoming rich through hard work have set an example in implementing this policy. Through what they have done, they have given impetus to the masses to take a concrete step forward toward the goal of common prosperity.

Of course, we should commend party members who have actively led the masses in becoming rich, and we hope that they will help and spur on more people to become rich by showing them the ways to do so and providing them with technological assistance, as well as helping them solve ideological problems and problems related to policies. Regarding party members who have used some improper methods to become rich, we should criticize them, educate them, and help them correct their mistakes. Regarding a few party members who have abused their power and violated the law to reap staggering profits, we should seriously punish them according to state laws and party discipline. We should never negate the role of party members who take the lead in becoming rich through hard work. Much less should we set "becoming rich earlier or later" against "common prosperity" to criticize party members who have become rich before others. When few dared to become rich, the masses had their eyes on those who did. Now that others have become rich, the masses still have their eyes on them. To fully affirm the positive role played by party members who take the lead in becoming rich through hard work is a concrete expression of upholding the policy of permitting some people to become rich before others. To protect them means to protect the peasants' enthusiasm for becoming rich through hard work.

It is very necessary to pay serious attention to this important question in the current rural party rectification work.

AFFLUENCE THROUGH PERSONAL INDUSTRY DEFENDED

HK290512 Beijing NONGMIN RIBAO in Chinese 14 Mar 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "Do Not Set 'Getting Rich Together' Against 'Getting Rich Ahead of Others'"]

[Text] Recently, some readers have written this paper asking whether the policy of allowing some peasants to get rich ahead of others has changed, and whether some peasants will still be allowed to prosper ahead of others in the future. Some reflected that those who prospered in their areas were forced to donate money and materials to "foster style" and engage in a "getting rich together " plan; others said that some cadres in their areas asked prosperous household for food, drinks, and loans and brought their products at low prices. A representative of specialized households in Hubei Province's Zhijiang County said that a local civil administration cadre wanted him to put money "to do good deeds" in order to leave a way out for himself. Certain areas even confiscated properties of specialized households, conducting investigations against them as if they were "upstart households" or "economic criminals." Although such cases are few, they have, nonetheless, occurred in differing degrees in many places, and some continue to happen, producing a very pernicious effect and they are definitely a symptom worth watching.

The above-mentioned phenomena pose questions worth pondering: How exactly should one correctly look at peasants who get rich ahead of others? How should the relationship between some people getting rich ahead of others and that of everyone getting rich together be correctly handled?

As everyone knows, we are socialist country, but it is necessary to understand precisely what socialism is. Comrade Deng Xiaoping said: "Poverty is not socialism, and socialism must eliminate poverty." The primary task of socialism is to promote the forces of production and gradually raise the standards of the people's material and cultural lives in order to attain common prosperity. This is the goal of our party's struggle.

Now, how can common prosperity be attained? Facts have proven: To define getting rich together as a condition where all people achieve the same degree of prosperity at the same time, and to reach this state by "curbing the rich to help the poor" and "trimming the peak to fill the holes" will certainly result in "eating from the same big pot" and "stirring up communist winds," dampening the enthusiasm of the great mass of working people, and ultimately leading to common poverty. Without some people getting rich ahead of others, then common prosperity cannot be realized. Thus, since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, on the basis of popularizing a system of contracted responsibilities on the household basis, with payment linked to output, a new policy suitable to our country's condition was implemented: To allow some localities and some peasants to increase their income through industry and labor, and therefore, get rich before others. Subsequently, through the effects of definite economic transfers and impetus, more and more peasants and localities would grow rich together.

In recent years, with precisely the correct implementation of this party policy, there are already some peasants and localities which have started to get rich to varying degrees ahead of others, and have began to play an exemplary and motivating role for other peasants and localities.

The problem is: Due to the incorrect understanding of the relationship between "getting rich ahead of others" and "getting rich together," some people do not proceed from facts, engage in metaphysics, and think in terms of absolutes. When speaking of "getting rich ahead of others," they try hard to get rich to the extent of looking down on the poor and admiring the rich. When speaking of getting rich together, they refute "getting rich ahead of others" and even stir up communist winds. In short, they are always contradicting the two concepts.

Why does such phenomena occur? In the final analysis, this is due to the fact that "leftist" thinking has not been eliminated and that there is incorrect understanding of the party's policy of enabling the people to prosper and of today's peasants and rural reform. As of now, some people still use the "class viewpoint" from the democratic revolutionary period in viewing peasants who prosper under today's socialist system. In their opinion, regardless of how you prospered, "prosperity is necessarily malevolent." They could never bear the sight of people who got rich, and eyed them covetously, waiting for every opportunity to strike against them. This kind of erroneous understanding is extremely detrimental. Hence, party Central Committee Document No 1 in 1986 emphasized: "Our policy not only adheres to the direction of getting rich together, it also recognizes the difference in development. To allow some people and localities to prosper ahead of others is beneficial to advancing progress in society." This directive from the Central Committee once more clearly tells us: It is necessary to correctly view peasants who lead the way in attaining prosperity through industry. It is necessary to regard them as representatives of the advanced forces of production in rural areas and as pioneers of the concept of getting rich together as well as activists in following us in our thorough implementation of rural reforms. To refute them is to refute the path of getting rich together. Thus, it is imperative to support and care for them, protect their legitimate rights, and encourage them to continue working for prosperity through industry and within the law. At the same time, it is necessary to educate jealously-stricken people to transform envy to competitiveness, modestly learn from households which have earned prosperity through industry, and strive to catch up with them. As for those who "live off the big households," "exploit the big households," threaten and terrorize households which got rich ahead of others, and even plunder and persecute them, it is necessary to put a firm halt to this and deal with them severely according to party and state laws.

It should be pointed out that there is indeed a very small number of people who wrongly prosper through industry. Among them, there are some who abused power and grew rich by jeopardizing the interests of the country, the collective, and other people. Some took advantage of the reforms and engaged in dishonest practices and even in criminal activities. With these people, minor offenders should be criticized and educated and have economic sanctions taken against them; serious violators must be dealt with according to the law. This is essentially a different matter from getting rich through industry, and should not be confused with it. Moreover, it should not be equated with it.

BAN ON CADRES' BUSINESS ACTIVITIES EXPLAINED

OW310756 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0753 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, 29 Mar (XINHUA) -- Since the distribution of the "regulations of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council on further prohibiting party and government organs and their cadres from engaging in commercial activities and opening their own business enterprises" (reference No Zhong Fa [0022 4099] (1986), hereinafter referred to as the "regulations"), some questions concerning implementation have been raised by certain units and localities.

In this connection, a XINHUA reporter has interviewed the spokesman of the General Offices of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council, who answered the reporter's questions.

Question: Why is it necessary to strictly prohibit any party or government organ and any party or government cadre from engaging in commercial activities and opening business enterprises?

Answer: This is due to the nature of party and government organs and the duties of party and government cadres. If party and government organs and their cadres were allowed to engage in commercial activities and open their own business enterprises, not only would these organs and cadres be hampered from properly implementing the party principles and policies and justly carrying out their duties, but they might misuse their authority to seek private gains, thus corrupting our government and party discipline and the general mood of our society and hurting the prestige of the party and government among the masses. This would cause considerable harm. The fundamental reason the CPC Central Committee and the State Council issued these "regulations" is to take resolute action to check the present unhealthy trend manifested by some party and government organs and their cadres in abusing their authority to seek private gains by engaging in commercial activities or opening their own business enterprises. This action will ensure that our country's policy of enlivening the domestic economy and opening to the outside world will be implemented thoroughly, that the economic structural reform will develop in depth, and that there will be a fundamental turn for the better in our party style and in the general mood in society. Therefore, it is imperative for party and government organs at all levels and their cadres to carry out in all seriousness these "regulations" issued by the CPC Central Committee and the State Council.

Question: What is meant by party and government organs and their cadres engaging in commercial activities and opening their own business enterprises?

Answer: This refers to the instances where party and government organs and their cadres use public funds (including funds for the disbursement of administrative expenses, operating expenses, special fees, and so forth), loans, and funds raised in one way or another to carry out commercial activities and open business enterprises for the private profit of their own units or of the individuals themselves. There are two exceptions, however: One involves the retail stores, laundries, barber shops, bath houses, hostels, auditoriums, printing shops, and so forth which party and government organs established and operate to improve their logistic service and to meet the daily requirements of their staff and workers and which are aimed mainly at serving their own needs but are also open to others provided that conditions permit. These facilities are not prohibited. The other exception involves the labor service companies and other business units established by party and government organs to provide employment to the children of their staff and workers. These companies and units, which have a positive effect on freeing the cadres, staff members, and workers of worries about their families and on ensuring the stability and unit of society, should continue to be established and operated. However, they should employ predominantly jobless youths and should focus on developing service trades and the proceessing industry. Such enterprises should abide by the relevant state rules and should engage in legitimate operations. The organs that established these enterprises are required to step up their leadership over them.

Question: Are scientific research and educational institutions permitted to engage in activities such as making technology transfers and providing consultation and other services?

Answer: According to the "decision of the CPC Central Committee on the reform of the science and technology management system," the "decision of the CPC Central Committee on the reform of the education system," and other relevant regulations promulgated by the state, scientific research and educational institutions may gear their work to society, and they may carry out operations such as technology transfers, technical consultations, technical services, and contracted technical work, provided that these operations will not adversely affect their fulfillment of the state plans. However, they are not permitted to engage in any operation that has nothing to do with their own fields of work or technology. Scientific and technical personnel may do technical work and render consultation services in their spare time after they have fulfilled their duties and provided that the spare time activities to not adversely affect the technological rights and interests and the economic benefits of their units. They can receive reasonable rewards for such work and service in accordance with the pertinent regulations.

Question: How should party and government organs sever themselves thoroughly from the enterprises they have established?

Answer: "Severing thoroughly" as stated in the "regulations" means that the management of the enterprises' personnel, financial, and supply work be separated from the party and government organs. The enterprises' personnel should not be included in the scope of administration of the organs. The enterprises should operate on their own, have independent accounting systems, pay taxes as required, and assume their own economic responsibility. Revenue earned by the enterprises should not be used by party and government organs. If enterprises use houses, equipment, or transportation means belonging to the organs, enterprises should compensate the organs, and the organs should collect fees for the use of such facilities at a reasonable rate.

Question: Can cadres of party and government organs hold concurrent posts in enterprises?

Answer: Cadres of party and government organs cannot hold concurrent posts in enterprises or any other units that have an economic income. In case they must do so to meet special work requirements, a request must be submitted to the party Central Committee and the State Council for approval according to the prescribed procedures. A cadre holding a concurrent post in another unit should not receive remuneration from that unit. However, a party or government cadre may serve as a part-time teacher, do translation work, write books to advance new ideas, and write articles for newspapers and periodicals after he has fulfilled his own duty and provided that such activities are not against the pertinent regulations. He may receive reasonable rewards for such activities.

Question: The "regulations" contain special provisions on leading cadres' children and spouses doing business and establishing enterprises. To which leading cadres do they refer?

Answer: The "leading cadres" referred to in the "regulations" are cadres above the county and regimental levels (inclusive of county- and regimental-level cadres), including incumbent cadres and those who have withdrawn to the second line.

RENMIN RIBAO URGES STRICTLY ENFORCING DISCIPLINE

HK290718 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 25 Mar 86 p 5

[Article by Qiang Xiaochu: "Discipline Is an Important Guarantee for Rectifying Party Style"]

[Text] The strength of the proletarian political party lies in its iron discipline.

Today, when we are carrying out socialist modernization construction, iron discipline is still an important guarantee for us to resisting and overcoming the corrosive influence of various nonproletarian ideologies, to set aright the party's ideological style, to smoothly develop the two civilizations, and to build socialism with Chinese characteristics.

Comrade Chen Yun has pointed out: "The party style of a ruling party is a matter of life and death for the party." This sharply pointed out the importance and necessity of setting the party style straight. However, not all people can so deeply understand this. Many people still think that "this may be important in words, but it may not be so important in deeds." If we cannot maintain a good party style and establish good public conduct, we will not be able to successfully carry out socialist economic construction. Even if the economy is developed, it may just add more fuel to capitalism. The degeneration of our spirit will lead to the decay of the entire economy. Therefore, we should be soberly aware of this danger and should always be on the alert. At any time and in any case, we must not neglect and relax the development of spiritual civilization and must first set aright the party style and social values. The party's discipline inspection organs should make a firm determination and adopt resolute measures to straighten out party style and to enforce party discipline.

Correcting unhealthy tendencies is not only a pressing matter of the moment, but is also a major long-term political task of the whole party. We must mobilize the whole party to fulfill this task. We should commend the good and punish the bad. Only by strictly following the rules for rewards and punishment can we encourage healthy trends and severely check corrupt and evil practices. Only thus can we maintain the dignity of party discipline and bring about a fundamental turn for the better in our party style.

A serious problem that we must notice at present is that party organizations in some localities and organizations are weak and slack in the enforcement of party discipline. This state also exists in some party discipline inspection organs. In a small number of units and departments, the phenomena of violating discipline and breaking laws have developed to a very serious degree. For example, some people use their official power to do business and engage in speculative transactions to reap staggering profits; some people take advantages of the opportunities of attending meetings or making business trips to make pleasure tours in scenic spots, or use public money to give dinners and gifts to each other; some people indulge in making counterfeit goods, including fake medicines, in order to make big money, and they do not even care about people's safety; some people collude with evil persons in society to conduct black market currency transactions, give and take bribes, smuggle goods and resell smuggled goods, and evade customs duties; some people neglect their duties and even commit the crime of malfeasance; some people copy, sell, project, and watch pornographic video tapes and degenerate morally; and some people do immoral things when they visit foreign countries and humiliate the national dignity and cause heavy political and economic losses to the party. They disregard the party central leadership's repeated instructions and orders and cling to their perverse behavior and even purposely go against discipline and law. The unhealthy tendencies and lawbreaking activities have not only disturbed and disrupted our ongoing economic structural reforms and our "four modernizations" program, but have also seriously corroded people's minds and ruined a number of our cadres. Apart from other ideological and social reasons, the most important reason for the appearance of these problems is that we have not strictly enforced party discipline and laws. This is a profound lesson that we must learn. If we fail to strictly enforce party administrative discipline and laws, the improvement of party style and public conduct will merely be empty talk, and the building of the two civilizations will fail. Therefore, we must really do the following things in the future:

First, we must strictly enforce laws and discipline. During the 10 years of domestic turmoil, the two counterrevolutionary cliques headed by Lin Biao and Jiang Qing wantonly trampled on party discipline and state laws. They misrepresented, destroyed, and abandoned the discipline and laws of the party and the state. Their practice left a serious "sequelae" to our party and state. In order to eliminate the residual influence of these bad things, we must keep the party in order by strictly enforcing party discipline. In general, when people inside and outside the party commit the same mistake, more severe punishment should be meted out to those inside the party; similarly, leading cadres, especially senior leading cadres, who commit mistakes should be punished more severely than ordinary party members, because a senior leading cadres' mistake may be more harmful. Their mistakes not only affect their personal reputations, but more importantly also hurt the reputation and image of the party. Therefore, by taking more serious disciplinary measures against them, we may better retrieve the party's reputation. Of course, we do not mean that punishment should be unreasonably severe, and we must not repeat the previous methods of mercilessly attacking erring people. Our severe measures should be taken in a reasonable and lawful way and should serve the purpose of rescuing people who err and educating other people.

Second, the purpose of severely punishing these evils is to educate all people. Punishment is not our final aim, it is just a means of education. We consistently hold that education should precede the enforcement of law and that it is necessary to first let people know the rights and wrongs and guide them according to the rules and regulations before enforcing discipline and the law against them. We do not hold that severe punishment can solve all problems. However, we should take the measure of "executing one as a warning to a hundred" and "eliminating an evil to satisfy the public." Only thus can be effectively check evil tendencies, straighten out the party style, encourage honest and upright practices, win the people's trust, and ensure the party's cause and the continuous development of work in all fields. If people do something wrong in a field which is not governed by any clear policy in the course of exploration for lack of experience, we should mainly use the method of education to distinguish right from wrong so that people may draw a lesson from their experience, and we should not excessively affix responsibility to individuals. However, if some people knowingly go against the clear instructions of the central leadership and deliberately violate the law and discipline, thus causing serious political and economic losses to the party, they must be severely punished. No one can use this or that pretext to condone them. Only thus can the evildoers be deterred from continuing their evil practices and other people be warned against bad examples.

Third, all party members are equal before party discipline. In society, all people are equal before the law, and this is also the case inside the party. Party discipline and the party's rules should function in the same way as state laws. If anybody in a unit does something harmful to socialist interests and the party's reputation in violation of discipline and the law, not only must that evildoer be punished according to the law, but the party committee and the discipline inspection commission in that unit should also bear the responsibility. Responsibility should also be affixed to people who obstruct or disturb the investigation and handling of the cases and who shield or absolve wrongdoers. In some serious cases, they should also be punished according to law. Party discipline and state law apply to all people, no matter what position they hold. Evildoers should be dismissed from office as they deserve. Criminal offenders should be arrested and tried by the judicial department according to the law and should be put into prison or executed as they deserve. We must never tolerate evil and abet it, otherwise we will leave endless trouble for the future. At present, a small number of criminal offenders perversely continue their lawbreaking activities in the knowledge that they have strong backing, and we often encounter disturbances and obstruction when handling these cases.

Some people only pay attention to human relations and disregard the law, discipline, and principles. They even bend the law for the benefit of their relatives or friends or use their official power to shield and defend each other. They obstruct the handling of some cases or mitigate the seriousness of cases involving senior officials or people who have close relations with them. Enforcing party discipline and improving party style are basic tasks for the discipline inspection organs. All discipline inspection cadres should faithfully perform their sacred duties. They must hold a firm position and show a clear-cut attitude when dealing with major cases, must have the spirit of fighting against all evil things through to the end and struggling for a fine social and political environment, for a fundamental turn for the better in party style, and for the building of the two civilizations.

COLLEGE GRADUATE JOB ASSIGNMENT REPORT APPROVED

OW302046 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1452 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, 25 Mar (XINHUA) -- The State Council recently approved and transmitted the State Education Commission's "report on improving the work of job assignment for 1986 graduates of institutions of higher learning." In a circular accompanying the report, the State Council said: In making job assignments for 1986 graduates of higher learning institutions, it is necessary to continue to develop last year's experience in reform, adhere to the orientation of reform, implement the principle of compatibility between study and practice to ensure that everyone is able to fully apply the special knowledge he has learned, do well in ideological and political work, and assign the limited number of graduates to work posts where they are most needed and can best give play to their roles.

The State Education Commission's report said that the number of 1986 graduates from all regular institutions of higher learning is expected to reach more than 308,000. The handling of job assignments for these graduates should be carried out in accordance with the guidelines and basic principles for state economic construction and the guidelines of the decision on restructuring the education system and by adhering to the principles of making unified arrangements and rational use and reinforcing the key areas while taking the rest into consideration. It is necessary to continue to meet the requirements of and step up assignments to the energy, transportation, communication, agriculture and forestry, education, light and textile industry, and raw materials departments and the key military industry and national defense projects. It is especially necessary to pay attention to the needs of the existing enterprises in improving management, increasing economic results, and carrying out technological transformation. In principles, all graduates from the border and remote provinces and regions (including units directly under the various ministries and state commissions that are located on the border and remote provinces and regions) should be assigned to their places of origin.

Regarding the formulation of plans for job assignments for the graduates, the report said: In principle, assignments for graduates of local institutions of higher learning should be made by the various provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities themselves within their localities. Coastal and inland provinces and municipalities should encourage some of their graduates to get job assignments on the border and in remote provinces and autonomous regions -- particularly those with which they have established cooperative links -- to support construction there. With regard to graduates of higher learning institutions of the various central operations departments, aside from those transformed by the state in accordance with the need for their specialties to beef up the strength of key departments, all the rest should be assigned by the respective departments in charge of their schools to job positions in the units directly under these departments or in the units of compatible trades and professions.

The State Education Commission will be responsible for job assignments for graduates of the higher learning institutions directly under the commission. In making the assignments, the State Education Commission should first start from the top by working out a plan itself that spells out assignment quotas for the various departments and areas. Under the guidance of this plan, the schools will submit specific plans for assignments based on the different specialties and the needs of the various units. In doing so, the schools should first, acting in light of the needs reflected by the employing departments and localities and considering both the specific conditions of the individual graduates and the requirements for their specialities, consult with the departments, localities, and employing units and adopt the method for arranging meetings between the supply and the demand sides.

The report said: Shanghai Jiaotong University and Qinghua University will continue to experiment, under the guidance of the state plan, with the method where students choose the jobs they desire, the schools make recommendations, and the employing units hold examinations and employ the best.

The report said: The job assignment policy for 1986 graduates should mainly aim at solving the following problems:

1. Make further efforts to implement the system of fixed-time service for the graduates. The first problem that should be solved well is the transfer of graduates who have completed their service period in the border and remote provinces and regions after being assigned there from the large or medium-size cities in the inland areas.

2. Take effective measures to stop the detaining of graduates. The report stipulates that no locality or unit is permitted to make graduates assigned jobs by the plan stay longer than they are required and it is necessary to resolutely stop any unhealthy practices in handling job assignments.

3. Seriously study the problem of assignments with compensation. The scope will no longer be expanded in 1986 for the trial practice of assignments with compensation. In places where this was experimented with last year, the experiment may be continued.

The report clearly noted: For graduates who do not comply with assignments made to them, the relevant past documents and regulations will still apply. In conclusion, the report emphasized; All concerned departments and higher institutions should pay attention to ideological and political eduation among graduates. They should, in view of the characteristics and actual thinking of the graduates, carry out effective ideological education work among them in connection with education on the situation and policies. The purpose is to inspire their patriotic enthusiasm and pioneering spirit, encourage them to foster the concept of a life of serving the people, and consciously obey their assignments and strive to work for the cause of socialism.

COMMENTATOR VIEWS ASSIGNMENT OF GRADUATES, REFORM

[Commentator's article: "Uphold the Direction of Reform in Assigning Graduates of Institutes of Higher Learning"]

[Text] In recent years, some reforms have been made in the matter of assigning graduates of institutes of higher learning. Increased authority has been vested in schools and employment units. Links involved in the business of assignment have been reduced.

Enthusiasm of the three sides -- the school, the employment unit, and the student -- has been aroused, bringing life to the whole effort. The assignment of school graduates this year will begin soon. This year's work chiefly calls for unifying thought, upholding the direction of reform, and further trying to do work in conscientious and proper manner. Graduates of institutes of higher learning are cultivated by the state in a planned manner. In the present situation marked by a shortage of skilled personnel, problems in supply and demand, and an extremely great imbalance in economic and cultural development between areas, it is still necessary for the state to strengthen macroeconomic control over employment of school graduates and enforce assignment in planned manner. This approach helps to ensure the fulfillment of the needs of key state construction projects, strengthen forces in remote areas and weak departments, and improve the irrational state of distribution of skilled personnel marked with overly great differences. This is in line with important prerequisite for upholding the correct direction of reform. Some people set enforcement of plans in opposition to reform. They consider that since there must be reform, it is no longer necessary to talk about planning. They suggest that the state drop any kind of control, giving schools full authority and freedom in the matter of assignment, or that students be allowed to find work themselves. This is obviously a wrong idea. It is incompatible with the spirit of the economic reform and the reform of the educational system and incompatible with national conditions.

Institutes of higher learning offer numerous specialties. The targets of training and the content of study vary. The same specialties offered by different schools have their own features. There are also differences in the quality, skills, and interests of graduates. Needs of employment units across the country vary greatly. Given such a complicated situation, if only a small number of people are allowed to formulate all-inclusive unified assignment plans, freely assigning college graduates as "pawns" at the same grade and exercising rigid planned controls, we will inevitably depart from reality, restrain enthusiasm in various quarters, fail to give full play to the proper enthusiasm of graduates, and interfere with the healthy development of the reform in assigning graduates. Conditions in the above two fields dictate with in the assignment of graduates, simultaneous with the strengthening of macroeconomic control, we must seek further microeconomic revitalization. The two supplement each other. Only with macroeconomic control excercised and properly taken care of can there be microeconomic revitalization free from chaos. Similarly, only with microeconomic liberalization can there be a guarantee for the implementation of macroeconomic plans. Concretely speaking, the state has an overall plan for assignment of graduates specifying targets of control based on departments, provinces, cities, and schools. As to which are the most suited to units to which numerous graduates with different conditions are assigned, full freedom is given schools, employment units, and the departments in charge in individually taking care of graduates, with actual conditions in mind and through the method of keeping prospective employers and employees in contact. In the process of doing so, if the state plan is found not to be fully compatible with reality, we must carry out proper readjustment in a down-to-earth manner after full consultations, in order to perfect it. Thus, not only is the spirit of reform realized, but seriousness of plans is upheld. Not only are social needs properly taken care of, but vitality is stimulated in various fields and increased responsibilities are assumed by various quarters. By following this road, a still better job can definitely be done in the assignment of graduates.

IMPLEMENTATION OF MINERAL RESOURCES LAW URGED

[Commentator's article: "Supervise and Use Mineral Resources Well According to Law"]

[Text] "The Mineral Resources Law of the PRC" has been adopted by the 15th Session of the Sixth NPC Standing Committee.

This happy event is in line with the people's ardent expectations. China is rich in mineral resources. Over the last 30 years and more since the founding of the PRC, significant achievements have been scored in the prospecting and exploitation of mineral resources. However, the growth rates of prospecting and exploiting mineral resources still fail to meet the needs of socialist construction. The phenomena of mineral resources being destroyed and wasted can be found almost everywhere in some parts of the country. "The Mineral Resources Law," which explicitly defines the management of mineral resources in the form of law, is of extremely great significance in further accelerating the prospecting, exploitation, and use of mineral resources, strengthening mineral resources protection, in raising the growth rates and economic results of the prospecting and exploitation of mineral resources, and in ensuring the present and long-term needs of the socialist modernization program.

The Chinese Constitution stipulates that mineral resources are owned by the state. "The Mineral Resources Law," reaffirming this principle, clearly stipulates: "The state ownership of mineral resources on the earth's surface or underground will not change with the various rights to own or use the land containing the mineral resources." In other words, mineral resources are owned by the state and there is no question of collective or individual ownership of mineral resources. According to the stiuplations of "the Mineral Resources Law," no unit or individual shall seize, destroy, buy or sell, lease out, or transfer in any form the state's mineral resources.

"The Mineral Resources Law" stipulates that a system of putting mineral resources prospecting under unified registration management, under which those who intend to open up mines should undergo a process of submitting applications and getting approval through examination before obtaining a license, is to be introduced. "The law" also lays down clear stipulations on the handling of unlawful practices. These stipulations provide a legal guarantee for "decontrol, invigoration, and sound management," as well as the rational exploitation and use, of mineral resources. Our mineral resources are limited. Therefore, we must cherish them very much. Cherishing or protecting our mineral resources is aimed at exploiting and using them in a rational and planned way. This will not only be conducive to the present development of the national economy but will also benefit our coming generations.

While stipulating that state-owned mines are the main body designated to exploit mineral resources, "the Mineral Resources Law" also clearly lays down that the principle of active support, rational planning, correct guidance, and strengthened management should be practiced among the collectives and individuals in towns and villages engaged in mining. The present development of mining by town and village collectives and individuals has played a positive role in promoting regional economic prosperity and helping the people in poor mountainous areas become prosperous through the elimination of poverty. However, some regions are vying with state-owned mines for mineral resources, indiscriminately opening up mines and neglecting production safety and environmental protection. "The Mineral Resources Law" allows and encourages licensed mining by town and village collectives and individuals of minerals resources within the areas permitted by state stipulations. By conscientiously implementing these stipulations, we will be in a better position to determine the limits of mining areas for such purposes, to avoid disputes, to implement the measures for production safety and environmental protection, to raise the utilization ratio and the economic results of the use of mineral resources, to give guidance to the healthy development of mining by town and village collectives and individual, and to quicken the pace of exploiting mineral resources.

"The Mineral Resources Law" provides an essential basis for the prospecting, exploitation, and protection of mineral resources. We must thoroughly understand, repeatedly propagate, and firmly implement it. People's governments at all levels must strengthen leadership and management over the prospecting and exploitation of mineral resources, conduct publicity and education work among the masses of poeple in various forms, and correctly handle the relationship of interests between the state, the locality, and the individual.

They must also institute or perfect their administrative organs for mineral resources development and solve the law-enforcement problem satisfactorily. In brief, with regard to "the Mineral Resources Law," we must ensure that the law is observed and enforced strictly and that lawbreakers are dealt with, so that mineral resources can be better and more effectively used in the service of the socialist modernization program.

WRITERS' ASSOCIATION SECRETARY ON LIU BINYAN

HK300220 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0936 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, 28 Mar (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- This morning, at a meeting with Hong Kong reporters covering the NPC and CPPCC sessions in Beijing, Deng Youmei, a secretary of the secretariat of the Chinese Writers' Association, said: Over the past few years, we have refrained from stating our position on what is right and what is wrong concerning the problems pointed out in Liu Binyan's articles. In addition, we have never commented on his writing methods, his style, or the problems he discussed.

Deng Youmei said: Those who have shown their disagreement with Liu Binyan are those characters mentioned in his articles. If, in my articles, I refer to a certain person without being faithful to the facts, how can I not allow this person to step forward and defend himself?

In reply to the question of how Chinese writers view criticism abroad, Deng Youmei said: There are three types of criticism abroad: The first type is both accurate and lucid. We accept correct criticism whether it is published in left-wing or right-wing newspapers. The second type is inaccurate and is full of conjecture. We can exchange views with these critics in order to understand each other better. There is also a third type. There are individuals who want to discover new subject matter and trends from Chinese articles, with extraliterary motives. Their articles have had no effects on the mainland.

When a reporter asked Deng Youmei why some intellectuals who have suffered so resolutely wanted to join the CPC, Deng Youmei said: I am also a "rightist." Chinese intellectuals love their nation and their country. Their sense of responsibility toward their nation and their country has been inherited from their forebears. Even when our circumstances were the most difficult, they did not forget to serve their motherland. They want to join the party because they firmly believe that this party can fulfill the important task of leading the Chinese people to bring about the four modernizations. Of course, I was labelled a "rightist," but not because the person who made me suffer had evil designs on my wife; his wife is even more beautiful than mine.

Questioned on Wang Meng

HK281539 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0856 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Report: "Deng Youmei's Response to the Rumor That Wang Meng Has Become Minister of Culture"]

[Text] Beijing, 28 Mar (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- It is rumored that Wang Meng has been appointed minister of culture by the Chinese Government. This morning, Hong Kong reporters reporting on the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC and the Fourth Session of the Sixth CPPCC in Beijing asked Deng Youmei questions on this. Deng Youmei is a secretary of the Secretariat of the Chinese Writer Writers' Association.

Deng Youmei said: I telephoned Wang Meng and asked him this question. He said: "No comment." However, he did not deny it either. "Thank God I am spared from this disaster." Deng described Wang Meng as a vigorous young man with many new ideas. However, Deng said, it is very difficult to be a good minister and a good writer simultaneously. If I were given such a job, I would not be able to be a writer at the same time because I would not have time to write anything.

YU QIULI URGES PLA TO AID SOCIALIST CONSTRUCTION

OW301430 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1418 GMT 29 Mar 86

[By reporter Hu Nianqiu]

[Text] Beijing, 29 Mar (XINHUA) -- Yu Qiuli, director of the General Political Department of the PLA and also deputy to the NPC, spoke today at the PLA delegation's group meeting to examine and discuss Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the draft Seventh 5-Year Plan. He called on commanders and fighters of the whole Army to carry forward the PLA's honorable tradition; continue their efforts, show concern for, support, and take part in socialist construction, further improve their work; and struggle for the accomplishment of the "Seventh 5-Year Plan" together with the people of the whole country.

He said: The goals set forth by the "Seventh 5-Year Plan" are grand and far-sighted. They are realistic and can be fulfilled through hard efforts. Yu Qiuli pointed out several main tasks which the PLA should accomplish during the "Seventh 5-Year Plan."

It is necessary to completely fulfill the task of streamlining the PLA and reducing its strength by 1 million troops to make the Army more suitable for modernized and regularized building and to enable the state to concentrate more financial, material, and human resources on economic construction.

It is necessary to take an active part in key construction projects according to the needs of the state and capabilities of PLA units. We must ensure that the construction projects undertaken by PLA units are of good quality, and we must complete such projects on time or ahead of schedule. PLA units should do their best to undertake any new construction projects as requested by the state and various localities, according to the actual situation of the various PLA units. We should take the initiative to support, much as possible, social public works in areas where the troops are stationed.

We should further organize cadres and fighters to study culture and scientific knowledge, cultivate people who can do both military and civilian work, and provide more capable people for national construction. In recent years, all PLA units have achieved significant results in studying culture and scientific knowledge and in cultivating people for both military and civilian work. A large number of retired servicemen who had received training in both military and civilian work are now playing a positive role in the development of urban and rural economy and in political, judicial, educational, and cultural work. In the next 5 years, we should truly include this work in the regular reduction and training of the various PLA units.

We should further unfold the activities of building socialist spiritual civilization together with the people. In recent years, the armymen and people have worked together to build socialist spiritual civilization. It has played a positive role in fostering fine social morality and customs and improving social order. In the future, all units with the necessary conditions should launch such activities are quickly as possible.

Those units which have already started such activities should further improve their work under the leadership of local party committees and government. In unfolding such activities, we should publicize the party's line, principles, and policies; disseminate communist ideology, morality, and style; promote a fundamental improvement of party conduct and social customs at an earlier date; create a better environment of stability and unity for economic construction; encourage the masses to build the four modernizations with concerted efforts; spread economic information and help the masses develop production and become rich through hard work; and assist the masses in learning cultural and scientific knowledge and professional skill in order to raise labor productivity.

DENG YINGCHAO ATTENDS CPPCC PANEL DISCUSSION

OW281328 Beijing XINHUA in English 1317 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 28 (XINHUA) -- Deng Yingchao, leader of China's consultative body, today called on her colleagues from minority areas to suggest ways and means for the development in their areas. She said that leaders in these areas should earnestly carry out government policies toward minority areas so that such areas will be able to catch up with other parts of the country in the level of economic develpment. This afternoon, Deng, chairwoman of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference (CPPCC), attended a panel discussion on Premier Zhao Ziyang's report delivered earlier this week concerning the draft Seventh Five-Year Plan.

Eight CPPCC members spoke at the discussion. They all said that the new five-year plan, with realistic goals, embodies the desire of all nationalities in the country for common prosperity. Three of them are from Inner Mongolia, Tibet and Ningxia Hui (moslem) Autonomous Region, and one is of She nationality from Fujian Province. The four suggeted that the central government give more aid to remote and border areas where most minority people live. The said these areas need more funds to develop education, and train cadres and teachers from among local inhabitants.

Deng Yingchao assured her colleagues representing different nationalities, the central Government is very much concerned with development in your areas and how policies are implemented there. Although I'm over 80, the chairwoman said, I still hope to do someting for the minority people.

XI ZHONGXUN ON COMPILING CPC HISTORICAL DATA

OW301050 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1506 GMT 29 Mar 86

[By reporter Zhang Sutang]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 29 Mar (XINHUA) -- "CPC Organizational History Data", a set of historical data books which record and reflect, systematically, accurately, and in an overall manner, the founding, development, and growth of the Communist Party of China and compile historical data concerning the party's organizational developments at the central, provincial, prefectural and county levels, will be jointly edited and published by the commision for collecting party historical data and the organization department under the CPC Central Committee and the Central Archives Center during the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

This afternoon at Zhongnanhai's Huairen Hall in Beijing Xi Zhongxun, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee; Deng Liqun, and Hao Jianxiu, members of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, met with all the comrades attending a forum on compiling and editing data for this set of books.

In his speech, Comrade Xi Zhongxun expressed his vigorous support for compiling and editing this set of books. He hoped that everyone will try to compile and save all data in a systematical way, adhere to the principle of accuracy first, and do a good job in compiling and editing this set of books. According to the current plan, the "CPC Organizational History Data" will have two parts. The first will contain documents, while the second will outline changes and developments.

The forum on compiling and editing data on CPC organizational history was jointly sponsored by the commission for collecting party historical data and the Organization Department under the CPC Central Committee and the Central Archives Center and held on 27 March. During the forum, Feng Wenbin, member of the Central Advisory Commission and chairman of the commission for collecting party historical data under the CPC Central Committee; Li Rui, member of the Central Advisory Commission; Wang Zhaohua, deputy head of the Organization Department of the CPC Central Committee; and Wang Mingzhe, head of the Central Archives Center, delivered speeches on how to do the job of compiling this set of books.

GU MU ON ZHEJIANG'S TOURIST DEVELOPMENT

OW280632 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1755 GMT 25 Mar 86

[By reporter Guo Shuochuan]

[Text] Hangzhou, 25 Mar (XINHUA) -- After an inspection tour of some scenic spots in Hangzhou, Ningbo, Shaoxing, and Tonglu, Gu Mu, state councillor and head of the tourism coordination group of the State Council, made the following remarks on 23 March to leading comrades of Zhejiang Province and Hangzhou City: Zhejiang has rich resources for developing tourism. It is a key province for simultaneous development of the economy and tourism. Unified overall planning should be made to develop tourism in the province with the Xi Hu scenic area and other places of beauty and historical interest in Hangzhou as a tourist center. Gu Mu pointed out: Development of tourism in Zhejiang Province may be carried out in two steps: The first step is to make Hangzhou a tourist center and do a good job in preserving the natural beauty of Xi Hu as well as the adjacent scenic spots and places of historical interest, make necessary renovations, and open them to the public. Work should be done to solve the relevant problems concerning restaurants, hotels, transportation, and recreational facilities, including the problem of civil air transportation service within the province, and to develop the production of those items that may serve as souvenirs. We should make Hangzhou, a city long known as a "paradise," even more attractive to tourists both at home and abroad. The second step is to integrate Hangzhou's tourist work with that of eastern and western Zhejiang so that they will promote each other.

Gu Mu showed a keen interest in Hangzhou City's proposal for the establishment of silk and tea museums. In building the museums, he said, attention should be paid to economy and practical use, the economic benefits to be produced, and the harmony between the museum buildings and their surroundings. Buildings of several stories are not necessarily required, he added.

WANG ZHEN, ZHANG JINGFU RECEIVE GOLD PRODUCERS

OW281149 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0224 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 26 Mar (XINHUA) -- Some 300 "gold diggers" who contributed to the rapid development of China's gold industry went to Zhongnanhai today to receive awards from the party and the people.

At 1000 Wang Zhen, vice chairman of the CPC Central Advisory Commission; Zhang Jingfu, state councillor; and other leading comrades appeared before the "gold diggers." Wang Zhen congratulated them on their glittering achievements and called on the gold industry to contribute even more to China's prosperity during the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Zhang Jingfu told them that the party Central Committee and the State Council attach great importance to gold production. He urged cadres and workers of gold mining enterprises and local people who mine gold to produce more gold for the state in support of the four modernizations.

HAO JIANXIU CONGRATULATES QINGDAO DRAMA TROUPE

OW301254 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0747 GMT 29 Mar 86

[By reporter Yin Hongzhu]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 29 Mar (XINHUA) -- Since its premiere in Beijing on 20 March, the drama "Fly, Storm Patrols" performed by the Qingdao City Drama Troupe of Shandong Province has been widely acclaimed by young audiences. Many middle school students said: This drama not only reflects the ideals and goals of middle school students in 1980's but also indicates that we must also display the spirit of working harder than ever as pioneers.

After the performances, Hao Jianxiu, member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, met with the leading comrades, actors and actresses, and staff members of the drama troupe and with the responsible comrades of the cultural and propaganda departments in Qingdao City. She hailed the comrades of the drama troupe for performing an excellent drama for the broad masses of young people. She said: The whole party and the entire society must pay attention to work on promoting ideals and education among young people and must help them grow healthily. Right now, there are not very many dramas that reflect the young people's lives, learning, and ideals. The broad masses of literary and art workers should concern themselves with young people and write more and better creative works for them.

Since March last year, this drama has been performed more than 120 times in Qingdao and Jinan. Over 100,000 middle school students, fifth and sixth graders of various primary schools, as well as teachers and parents watched the performance. The Qingdao Drama Troupe gave the Beijing performances at the invitation of the Ministry of Culture.

DU RUNSHENG INSPECTS SHAANXI HANZHONG PREFECTURE

HK310243 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 0200 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] According to NONGJIA XINSHI BAO [PEASANT MESSENGER], Du Runsheng, director of the Rural Policy Research Office of the CPC Central Committee Secretariat, and Wu Xiang, deputy director of the Rural Development Research Center of the State Council, headed an investigation team which carried out on-the-spot inspections in Hanzhong Prefecture, Shaanxi, from 10 to 13 March.

The team pointed out after its investigation: It is first necessary to arrange market relations properly. Regulation by market mechanism should be stepped up and lateral ties strengthened in order to solve the exising difficulties in buying and selling things. Second, it is necessary to speed technological progress and transformation. Third, it is necessary to continue to explore reforms and promote diversification in production modes. We should find new ways of jointly using the masses' investment and labor, and organize the production relations still better. With these three things done well, we will have a bright future and excellent prospects.

XIAMEN ISSUES PREFERENTIAL CARDS TO FOREIGNERS

HK290402 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0843 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] Xiamen, 27 Mar (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- According to reports by reporters at the Xiamen Border Inspection Station, since 1 March, preferential exit/entry cards have been issued by the Xiamen Border Inspection Station to dozens of businessmen, specialists, and professors from foreign countries and from Hong Kong and Macao who are now working in Xiamen.

Priority will given to these card holders when they go through the formalities at the Xiamen Border Inspection Station. This has made it more convenient for people from foreign countries and from Hong Kong and Macao who come to Xiamen to make investments, run factories, negotiate business, or exchange technology and culture.

ANHUI CPC ISSUES CIRCULAR ON CADRE SELECTION

OW203042 Hefei Anhui Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Excerpts] The Anhui Provincial CPC Committee recently issued a circular calling on party committees at all levels to seriously implement the CPC Central Committee circular on selecting and using cadres in strict accordance with party principles.

The circular of the provincial party committee says: The CPC Central Committee circular on selecting and using cadres in strict accordance with party principles is a very important document. It is an important set of rules formulated by the party Central Committee to improve the party style, as well as a fundamental measure to ensure selection and use of cadres in strict accordance with party principle and to organizationally ensure a smooth proceeding of the socialist modernization and all reforms. Party committees at all levels must seriously study and resolutely implement it.

The circular of the provincial party committee puts forward six opinions concerning implementation of the Central Committee circular:

1. It is necessary to take further step to study the documents of the central authorities.

2. Party committees at all levels must exemplarily adhere to party principles and enforce the organizational and personnel discipline.

3. Party committees at all levels should firmly guarantee the implementation of all regulations promulgated by the Central Committee on selecting and using cadres strictly in accordance with party principles.

4. Party committees at all levels should immediately conduct a general inspection of their respective localities and departments with regard to selection and use of cadres, establishment of new organizations, and the composition of leading bodies.

5. It is necessary to strengthen the organization and personnel departments, and bring their role into full play.

6. In order to more strictly enforce demands for leading cadres and to strengthen organizational supervision over them, whenever the sons, daughters, or spouses of leading cadres of cities and provincial departments and bureaus are to be promoted more than one grade at a time, the planned promotions must be submitted to the provincial party committee for approval and the appointments must be made according to the jurisdiction of cadre management.

SHANGHAI PARTY SECRETARY COMMENTS ON CITY's GOALS

HK300524 Hong Kong AFP in English 0430 GMT 30 Mar 86

[By Bernard Degionni]

[Text] Shanghai, China, March 30 (AFP) -- Shanghai's leaders hope that residents will be earning ten times as much by the year 2000 and that they will be reaping those rewards according to policies that link income to output.

Rui Xingwen, secretary of the Communist Party's Shanghai municipal committee, told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE that the average annual per capita income in the city ought to be 10,000 yuan (3,125 dollars) by the year 2000.

The goal is ambitious. Official figures show that the average income in the city last year was only 1,017 yuan (325 dollars), and that this huge metropolis of more than 12 million people is due to grow by more than one million over the next 14 years. "We will introduce into the city the experiments that have succeeded in the countryside," Mr Rui said, noting that the innovations would include linking wages to productivity. "The time in Shanghai when the state and city would systematically make up for all deficits is now gone," Mr Rui explained.

Foreign businessmen based here feel that only by encouraging personal initiative will it be possible to revive an economy which has been backsliding for the past 30 years. "Either it works or it will all collapse," said one foreign banker, adding that the situation could become no worse then it already is.

The liberalized economic policies pursued by Beijing since late 1978 were not welcomed in Shanghai, a traditional bastion of hardline Maoism. City leaders hostile to the reforms were ousted about eight months ago. The reasons for Shanghai's economic decline are also historical. In 1950, soon after coming to power, the new communist leaders sought to halt the expansion of the city which accounted for half the country's wealth and which, in their eyes, was tainted by its capitalist past. Shanghai's economy was dismantled and its leading industrial and intellectual figures dispatched to other regions.

As a result, heavy industry here, once the city's strong point, is now obsolete. Shanghai's new leaders are now counting on an economic revival coming from the advanced technology industries, and the tertiary and banking sectors.

A foreign businessman here offered other explanations. "Too proud and too sure of themselves, Shanghai people show intransigence in negotiations. Other Chinese regions, more flexible, have no difficulty in taking over the markets." As one Chinese manufacturer commented: "Many of us are resistant to collaborating withthe outside world, feeling that if there are profits to be made, there is no sense in sharing them with others."

Despite its difficulties, Shanghai is still China's most prosperous city. On a national level it accounts for 30 percent of exports and 20 percent of state revenue. In 1980 the city accounted for 16 percent of the nation's total industrial production, Western sources estimated.

Mr Rui pointed to the fact that 164 Sino-foreign joint ventures had been or were about to be set up in Shanghai and that 46 percent were now operational. Official figures show that 1.27 billion dollars of foreign capital has been invested in Shanghai over the past five years by businessmen from Hong Kong (35 percent), the United States (32.9 percent), Japan (16 percent) and Europe (13.4 percent).

Volkswagen produces cars here, with 15,000 of its "Santana" model to be turned out for the domestic market this year. The U.S. company McDonnell-Douglas assembles DC-9 aircraft here. Belgium is providing telephone exchanges, in line with the goal of one telephone for every 10 people here by the year 2000. Foreign partners in joint ventures frequently complain of "little return on Chinese personnel," and the resulting poor quality of goods produced.

To help in its economic revival, Shanghai received 300 million dollars from the central government at the beginning of the year. The city will also be allowed to retain 84 percent of its fiscal receipts and is the first city in China to sell bonds abroad.

Shanghai's economic progress will be linked to its ability to update its transport infrastructure. The Seventh Five-Year Plan for 1986-1990 now being considered by the Chinese parliament contains plans for the construction of a second airport and the expansion of port facilities here which last year handled one-third of Chinese maritime traffic. Shanghai will also have to double its energy output -- the city's industry suffers frequent power cuts. However, Beijing has just postponed indefinitely construction of a nuclear power plant at Sunan, not far from here.

ZHEJIANG OUTLINES 1986 PARTY RECTIFICATION TASKS

OW290237 Hangzhou Zhejiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Text] The Discipline Inspection Commission of the Zhejiang Provincial CPC Committee recently outlined this year's major tasks in rectifying the party's work style. It asked party committees and discipline inspection commissions at all levels to seriously implement the series of important instructions of the CPC Central Committee and the guidelines of the seventh plenary session of the Central Discipline Inspection Commission and to strive to create a situation in which everyone in the party works to improve the party work style.

The basic requirements for theis year's work are as follows: During the first half of this year, organs at the county level or above that have completed party rectification should stop the practice of procuring new or replacing old cars and of using public vehicles in violation of regulations; generally control foreing trips by groups or individuals by coordinating the review and approval of their applications; curb the unhealthy practice of cadres using public funds for sightseeing, either openly or secretly; change the practice of lavish receptions, entertainment, and gift-giving; resolve the question of party and government cadres seeking illicit income and of their children or spouses using their connections to engage in business in violation of the relevant regulations; and correct the actions of leading cadres that violate organzational and personnel discipline and contradict party principles. Districts, towns, and townships still in the process of party rectification should quickly stop the unhealthy practice of building houses in violation of discipline, pay compensation to the state for building materials already used, draw up a repayment schedule for the debts owed to the state, and compensate the state for funds spent that had been confiscated or collected as fines. Enterprises should seriously rectify their managerial thinking, approach, and style. They should overcome the idea of putting money above all else. They should particularly resolve such questions as taking a second job by some people to seek additional income, demanding or accepting kickbacks in official or business activities, creating dummy companies or projects, evading taxes, falsifying production costs, indiscriminately distributing bonuses or awards, and engaging in other wasteful activities.

GUANGDONG TRANSPORT SHIP SINKS; 22 MISSING

[Text] Last night, the "Humen," a dredger of the Guangzhou channel bureau, collided with No 311 transport ship of the Hainan shipping company on the river near (Jinshoupai) at the mouth of the Humen. No 311 ship of the Hainan shipping company sank at once and 22 persons on board the ship were missing as of this morning. The country's departments concerned and naval forces have sent personnel, ships, and boats to help look for the missing persons.

GUANGXI: CHEN HUIGUANG CALLS FOR COMMODITY PRODUCTION

HK290659 Nanning Guangxi Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Excerpts] While recently conducting investigation and study in some townships and towns in Pubei County, Comrade Chen Huiguang, secretary of the regional CPC Committee, pointed out: If we have firm confidence, carry forward the spirit of the foolish old man who removed the mountains, and vigorously develop commodity production according to our local advantages, we should stand a good chance of success in increasing our income and getting rich.

On 25 March, Comrade Chen Huiguang went to (Beitong) township, Pubei County, and listened to the reports of responsible comrades of the township and villages. He visited a firecracker plant, a food processing factory, and banana and lychee farms in this township. He expressed satisfaction with economic work and the building of spiritual civilization there. He hoped that they would do well in grasping spring farming, planting trees, combating drought, and sowing seeds without losing any time.

Summing up on-the-spot visit and investigation, Comrade Chen Huiguang held: (Beitong's) plan for future economic development and its guiding ideology are defined and the road it has taken is correct. It is worth emulation by all places, and there is much in (Beitong's) method that all places can apply.

He said: Qinzhou Prefecture has excellent conditions for developing subtropical fruits, and the masses also have rich experiences in and urgent demands on its production. Their foundation for developing township enterprises is relatively good. So long as we further strengthen leadership, clearly understand the situation, work out a good plan, set an example to enlighten and lead the masses, rely on technology, provide service before, in the course of, and after production, develop economic relations among enterprises and regions, and work in a down-to-earth manner, we can turn into reality what Comrade Hu Yaobang expected of us while he was inspecting Qinzhou Prefecture.

HENAN PLA MEETING ON REGIMENTAL PARTY RECTIFICATION

HK300317 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Text] Henan Military District held a telephone conference yesterday evening, which called on all units to concentrate efforts, clear away interference, and fulfill party rectification at regimental-level with assured quantity and quality. Commander Zhan Jingwu put forward the following specific demands:

1. Get a good grasp of ideological education and party rectification to lay a good ideological foundation for transferring the people's armed forces departments to local authorities.

2. Devote great effort to education in specific topics, and further strengthen the party spirit concept of party members, so that they will correctly handle the relationship between the interests of the revolution and personal interests, take a correct view of the transfer of people's armed forces departments to local authorities, and spontaneously obey the requirements of the organization.

3. Have a clear idea on the main problems to be solved in party rectification.

4. Persistently conduct simultaneous rectification and correction. Problems that can be solved must be solved without delays and haggling. A start must be made with tackling major cases.

5. Further strengthen leadership over party rectification work. The CPC committee and leaders of the units must concentrate their main energy on party rectification, and also go down to find out the situation and help solve problems.

HENAN PEOPLE'S BANK HOLDS FIRST PRESS BRIEFING

HK281021 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Text] Yesterday [24 March], the provincial People's Bank held the first press briefing on finances to introduce the current financial situation in our province and several main measures which financial departments will take.

At the briefing, (Jia Tanyu), a press spokesman of the provincial People's Bank said: Last year, the provincial People's Bank and all specialized banks on the one hand strengthened extensive financial control and on the other, strived to enliven finances. They scored marked achievements. However, the financial situation confronting our province this year is still relatively severe. This year, credit funds are running short, enterprises' savings deposits are less than last year, contradiction between supply of credit and demand is more conspicuous, and it is harder to ensure a balance of supply of credit funds and demands.

In the face of this situation, the principle of the work of the financial system is that on the one hand, we must strengthen macroeconomic control and on the other, improve macroeconomic control. Concentrating on three focal points -- increasing saving deposits, improving service, and rationally using funds, we must do a good job in reform of the financial structure. Vigorously organizing savings deposits is the most important measure to mitigate the contradiction between supply of funds and demand and is the major task for banks this year. In supplying credit funds this year, we must do very well in supplying loans for the floating capital need by enterprises so that industrial production can maintain a suitable increase; we must also issue all kinds of loans which are related to agricultural production to guarantee the development of agricultural production, particularly grain production.

In addition, the financial departments must improve the method of settling accounts this year and strengthen control over foreign exchange, consolidation of financial organs, and the guidance of the capital market. At the same time, they must use the lever of credit interest to speed up enterprises' capital turnover and to reduce lockup capital.

At the press briefing, responsible comrades of the provincial People's Bank, all provincial specialized banks, the Zhongyuan Development, Trust, and Investment Corporation, and the Henan International Trust and Investment Company answered many queries from reporters on the spot.

HUBEI PARTY RECTIFICATION SYMPOSIUM ENDS 26 MARCH

HK290635 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] The provincial symposium on party rectification in districts and townships which lasted 5 days concluded in Wuchang today.

Some 100 responsible persons of the party rectification offices of all prefectural, city, autonomous prefectural, and county CPC committees and departments and bureaus concerned at the provincial level attended this symposium, which summed up and exchanged experiences in party rectification in districts and townships, analyzed the current situation in party rectification in districts and townships and the main problems existing, and made arrangements for the next step in party rectification in districts and townships.

During the symposium, Qian Yunlu, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and deputy head of the party rectification guidance group, held a forum with some representatives attending the symposium. Liu Qizhi, member of the provincial CPC Committee Standing Committee and director of the party rectification office, made a report entitled "Further Strengthen Leadership and Do Party Rectification Work Well in Districts and Townships."

Xiaogan Prefectural CPC Committee; Qichun, Guangji, and Gongan County CPC Committees; (Yangdian) District CPC Committee in Xiaogan City; and (Dajupu) Township CPC Committee in Daye County introduced their experiences in strengthening leadership and doing well in party rectification in districts and townships. Units including the provincial supply and marketing cooperative and grain department, introduced their experiences in helping the CPC committees in all places do well in grasping party rectification in the grass-roots units of their own systems.

The symposium held: Our province has made a good start in party rectification in districts and townships and the development is healthy. However, in comparison with the requirements of the central authorities and the provincial CPC Committee, many problems still exist. The symposium demanded: We must do work well and complete our tasks of party rectification in districts and townships in the following several aspects:

1. From the plane of the overall situation, CPC committees at all levels must further enhance understanding of party rectification in districts and townships, tangibly reinforce the party rectification leadership forces, and establish the system of responsibility for party rectification work. The No 1 men of the county CPC committees must personally grasp this work and the deputy secretaries in charge of this work must go all out to grasp it.

2. We must set a high standard and strict demands and avoid carrying out party rectification perfunctorily or superficially.

3. We must give prominence to the key points, really strengthen party spirit, correct party style, and strictly enforce party and legal discipline.

4. We must closely link party rectification with reform and economic work and use party rectification to promote the economy and reform.

SICHUAN'S YANG RUDAI URGES DEVELOPING DEFENSE INDUSTRY

HK290703 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] On 26 March, at the provincial ideological and political work conference of science, technology, and industry for national defense, Yang Rudai, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, pointed out that we should give play to the advantages of the defense industry to invigorate the province's economy.

Comrade Yang Rudai pointed out: The defense industry is one of the province's strong points. In order to strengthen its third-line construction, the state has invested in many large-scale key projects in the province. At present, the province has formed an industrial system marked by large scale, advanced equipment, strong technological force, and availability of necessary facilities. This is a unique favorable condition for us to develop the national economy.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the province has scored successes in the areas of integrating military and civilian production and transferring some military technology to civilian use while ensuring defense needs. However, we have not given full play to the advantages of the defense industry. Thus, we must overcome our outmoded thinking and promptly switch our defense industry enterprises from the traditional economy to the commodity economy. Otherwise, there is no way out for us.

Comrade Yang Rudai said: The main way of transferring part of the military technology to civilian use is to extensively develop lateral economic ties. Thus, we can achieve great and rapid benefit with relatively small investment. In particular, the defense industry enterprises and civilian enterprises can stimulate each other and give play to each other's strong points through cooperation [word indistinct]. We should take the lateral economic ties as the breakthrough point for reforming the structure of the defense industry. Therefore, we must do this well. Local governments at all levels must also create conditions for the defense industry enterprises to transfer some military technology to civilian use while ensuring defense needs, and to develop lateral economic ties.

YUNNAN PARTY LEADER DISCUSSES PROVINCE'S PROSPECTS

HK290557 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0228 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, 29 Mar (ZHOGNGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Pu Chaozhu, Secretary of the Yunnan Provincial CPC Committee and an NPC deputy, told ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in an interview yesterday that by 1990 Yunnan's total industrial and agricultural output value will reach 30 billion yuan; gross domestic product will reach 24.4 billion yuan, rising at an annual average of 9.3 percent; and export volume will reach $300 million, more than double last year's figure.

Although these goals are slightly higher than the national average growth during the seventh 5-year plan, Pu Chaozhu holds that they are attainable.

Pu Chaozhu was born and raised in Yunnan. He was secretary of a county CPC committee and county governor for a long time, and later undertook leadership work in a prefecture for more than 10 years. Three years ago he was appointed deputy secretary of the provincial CPC committee and governor. He assumed his present post last year.

Pu Chaozhu said that the economic growth rate and the actual achievements of the province in the past 5 years were the best since the founding of the new China. Despite some of the worst natural disasters for 30 years last year, including drought, floods, frost, and earthquakes, total industrial and agricultural output value rose from 12 billion yuan in 1980 to 20.4 billion yuan last year, showing an average annual growth of 11.2 percent; average peasant income rose to 340 yuan, an increase of 238 yuan over 1980; and [words indistinct] growth was registered in all sectors of the national economy except for grain, in which output fell by 1.4 billion jin compared with the previous year.

The CPC Central Committee is extremely concerned for the development of the southwest border region. General Secretary Hu Yaobang has inspected Yunnan three times in the past 5 years. He has demanded that the cadres of Yunnan "climb upwards," that is, study theory, and "go deep downwards," that is, go deep into the grassroots to investigate and study. He stressed tht Yunnan must do well in taking advantage of its three strong points: abundant mineral resources; the tropical and southern subtropical zone covering about 100,000 square kilometers or one-quarter of the province; and forestry, animal husbandry, and medicinal herbs in the high mountains.

Pu Chaozhu revealed that the provincial CPC committee and government have accordingly formulated a six-point development strategy, including the following: speeding up the development of the tropical zone, and developing tropical crops such as rubber, sugar, shellac, spices, medicinal herbs, and fruit into significant undertakings; promoting specialization, commodity production, and modernization in the agricultural economy; and clearing the export channels and the transport links with other areas, and increasing the number of export points.

On the question of further improving work style, Pu Chaozhu said that the provincial CPC committee has recently decided that the cadres should spend more than 3 months a year in the grassroots; within 3 years the members of the standing committee of the provincial CPC committee and the governor and vice governors should visit all the 128 counties in the province, while the party and government leaders of prefectures and cities should visit all districts in their prefecture or city, and the country-level leaders should visit all the townships in their county. This 56 year-old provincial CPC committee secretary is determined to visit this year all the 26 counties that he has not visited in the past 3 years.

YUNNAN DIRECTIVE URGES IMPROVED LEADERSHIP STYLE

HK290257 Kunming Yunnan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Excerpts] The Yunnan provincial CPC Committee recently issued a decision on tangibly improving leadership style and going deep into reality to investigate and study. The decision pointed out: Comrade Hu Yaobang's recent important instruction on paying attention to two aspects in leadership work emphasized again. From the plane of the Marxist theory of cognition, the very great importance of combining theory with practice and book knowledge with practical knowledge. It profoundly set forth the close relationship between the party's work style and its ideological line. This is the important prerequisite for our leading organs and cadres in exercising correct leadership. It is a basic element in cadre maturity.

The cadres must adapt to the new situation, actively strive to improve themselves in light of the new realities, and work hard to study and master basic Marxist theory, knowledge of modern management, and knowledge of science and technology. While striving to improve themselves, they must not forget to go deep down into the grassroots. They should do very well at integrating these two aspects.

To bring about a big improvement in leadership style at all levels in Yunnan, so as to meet the needs of creating a new situation in the four modernizations the provincial CPC Committee's decision makes the following points:

1. Leading cadres of the province and of the prefectures and counties must take the lead in going deep into reality to investigate and study. They should get to know the state of the country and of the province, counties, and townships, acquire practical knowledge, and exercise face-to-face leadership in the grassroots. Provincial-level and department and bureau-level and department and bureau-level leading cadres should spend not less than 3 months a year in going down to the rural areas and factories. Leading cadres of prefectures and counties should spend still more time in this endeavor.

Beginning this year, within the next 3 years, the members of the provincial CPC Committee Standing Committee and the governor and vice governors should visit every county in the province. The principal party and government leading cadres of the prefectures and cities should visit all the districts in their prefecture or city. The leading cadres of the county CPC committees and governments should visit all the townships in their county.

The leading cadres at all levels should set up their own more or less permanent liaison point or points in the grassroots. They should frequently get to know and become familiar with what is going on there. In particular, in implementing certain major policies and carrying out certain major reforms, they should as far as possible directly take part in practice at those points and get to know what happens throughout the entire process, so as to gain relatively systematic experiences for guiding the overall effort.

2. Continue to send large numbers of organ cadres and science and technology personnel to the rural areas and factories to launch the masses to unfold a drive to get rich through increasing income and [words indistinct] through increasing output. This should be done three times a year, once in February, March and April, once in July and August, and once in December and Janaury. The main tasks of the cadres and personnel sent down are to publicize the policies, investigate and study, formulate plans, firm up measures, carry out inspection and supervision, and provide specific assistance. They should sum up experiences, popularize typical examples, and provide service work for the rural a reas in developing commodity production and for enlivening the enterprises.

At the same time, a number of young cadres with good political quality, a certain ideological and policy level, a certain educational standard, and a certain amount of work experience should be transferred from the provincial organs to counties in serious difficulty to be steeled through holding posts there. They should be rotated every 2 years.

4.[Number as heard] In going down to the rural areas and the factories, the cadres at all levels must stress practical results and avoid formalism.

5. Apart from the original arrangements for this year's theoretical studies for cadres, leading cadres at and above county-level must, while going deep into reality, make efforts to restudy Comrade Mao Zedong's "On Practice," "On Contradiction," and "Where Does the People's Correct Thinking Come From?" Together with important party documents since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. They should integrate book study with conducting investigation and study to solve practical problems, and further strengthen their sense of principle, system, integration, and creativity in work.

6. In the future the leaders must personally write their own important speeches and reports. Leaders must personally put forward ideas and viewpoints for important documents of the leading organs, and personally preside over and guide the drafting of these documents. After the initial draft is completed, they should seek people's views within a suitable scope, organize democratic discussion, and pool people's knowledge and views. On this basis, the leaders should personally amend the draft for its final form.

7. To ensure that the leading cadres at all levels can devote their main efforts to investigating and studying and solving various practical problems, it is necessary to greatly reduce the number of meetings and documents.

BEIJING'S LI XIMING CALLS FOR LEARNING FROM MODEL WORKER

OW301206 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1805 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 28 Mar (XINHUA) -- Today Li Ximing, secretary of the Beijing Municipal CPC Committee, spoke at a report meeting on Zhang Jieshi's advanced deeds. Li Ximing called on the leading cadres at all levels in Beijing to learn from Zhang Jieshi, an outstanding communist who was bold in reform and honest in the discharge of his official duties. He urged the leading cadres to promote socialist modernization in the spirit of the Foolish Old Man who removed the mountains.

Zhang Jieshi was the manager of the Changcheng Raincoat Company in Beijing, a special-class model workers, and winner of the "1 May" Labor Medal. He died of illness on 22 March.

Before his death, leading comrades of the Ministry of Light Industry, the Beijing Municipal CPC Committee, the Beijing Municipal Government, and the All-China Federation of Trade Unions Yang Bo, Li Ximing, Jin Jian, and Zhang Fuyou visited him in the hospital. The leading party group of the Ministry of Light Industry recently made a decision on learning from Zhang Jieshi.

BEIJING PEOPLE'S COURT OFFICIAL ON ECONOMIC CRIMES

SK310706 Beijing BEIJING RIBAO in Chinese 17 Mar 86 p 2

[Text] Liu Yunfeng, acting president of the municipal Higher People's Court, delivered a report on seriously dealing blows to the economic criminal activities at the 27th Standing Committee meeting of the 8th Municipal People's Congress on 4 March.

He said: Last year we adopted legal means to firmly and heavily deal blows to the serious economic offenders in light of the spirit of strictly dealing blows to economic crimes. In the period from last August to September, the people's courts at all levels throughout the municipality heard, concluded, and held preliminary trials on 543 economic criminal cases, and sentened 623 criminals. Economic losses worth 940,000 yuan were retrieved for the state, a 12.7-fold increase over the first 7 months of last year.

Liu Yunfeng stressed: The stuggle against economic crimes is a long-term, arduous task. In order to further deal blows to economic criminal activities, we should grasp the following few tasks. First, leaders and judicial officers of the people's courts at all levels should understand the essence, importance, and urgency of the struggle against economic crimes; get rid of confused ideas, make a clear distinction between crimes and innocence; and adopt legal means to strictly punish serious economic criminal offenders. Second, we should organize more powerful forces to handle economic criminal cases only and to firmly hear and handle major and appalling cases. In handling cases, we should thoroughly grasp facts, gain completely reliable evidence, correctly determine the nature of the cases, appropriately mete out penalties, and go through legal procedures so as to ensure the equality of the work of handling cases. Third, we should hold rallies to overtly handle chosen typical cases.

We should adopt the methods of overtly hearing and judging cases to deal blows to and frighten criminals. Efforts should be made to disseminate knowledge of the legal system and educate the masses so as to promote the progress of the activities of dealing blows to economic crimes. Fourth, along with the progress of handling cases, some existing problems will be opposed, and relevant units should set up and perfect rules and regulations on strengthening the work of tackling problems in a comprehensive manner so as to reduce the occurrence of criminal cases. Fifth, in line with the new situation and problems of economic crimes, we should strengthen investigations and studies, and work closely in cooperation with relevant fields to determine the nature of crimes and mete out penalties in line with policies so as to give guidance to the implementation of the trial work.

NEI MONGGOL'S ZHANG SHUGUANG SPEAKS AT AGRICULTURE FORUM

SK310755 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 30 Mar 86

[Text] On the afternoon of 25 March, Zhang Shuguang, secretary of the regional CPC Committee, held discussions with the directors of agricultural, animal husbandry, and forestry departments of various leagues and cities, who were attending the regional work conference on agriculture, animal husbandry, and forestry. During the discussion he delivered a speech on the current and future work in this regard.

Attending the discussion were Bu He, deputy secretary of the regional CPC Committee and chairman of the regional people's government; Tian Congming, deputy secretary of the regional CPC Committee; and Bai Junqing, vice chairman of the regional people's government.

During the discussion, comrades including Zhang Shuguang inquired about their work situtations while carefully hearing the reports given by the directors of agricultural, animal husbandry, and forestry departments of various leagues and cities. They held discussions together when questions were encountered. This discussion was lively and harmonious.

In concluding the discussion, Comrade Zhang Shuguang delivered a speech in which he praised the comrades for their very harmonious discussions and [words indistinct], that were very helpful for him to understand the region and to discern the situation in the region. The undertakings of agriculture and animal husbandry constitute the region's foundation. Therefore, it is imperative to firmly grasp these undertakings, to spend funds chiefly on building production bases in this retard, and to strengthen science and technology. He urged various leagues and cities to do things in line with objective laws and their actual situation and to make a success of the work and to be responsible for the work. To this end, it is necessary for us to successfully deal with in a timely manner the problems that most concern the masses.

In the discussion, Comrade Zhang Shuguang also put forward issues concerning the future development of the region in order to solicit their opinions. The participating comrades also held discussions on the policy of enforcing the responsibility system in animal husbandry on a long-term basis and further [word indistinct] and improving the double contract system in raising animals and planting grass.

SHANXI'S LI LIGONG SPEAKS AT DISCIPINE INSPECTION MEETING

HK260201 Taiyuan Shanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Excerpts] The provincial discipline inspection work conference held a full session on 25 March. Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Li Ligong delivered a speech in which he first affirmed the achievements of the province in straightening out party style and correcting unhealthy trends since last winter.

He stressed that straightening out party style is not just a theoretical issue. The leading comrades at all levels must begin with themselves and set a good example. It is also necessary to do a good job in investigating and dealing with major and important cases, and produce results in this work.

On the relationship between correcting unhealthy trends and promoting economic reform, Comrade Li Ligong said that our aim is to apply party discipline and the legal system to ensure the smooth progress of reform of the economic structure and the implementation of the policy of opening up to the world and invigorating the domestic economy, so as to spur economic development. We must continue to crack down on illegal activities such as swindling, bribery, and corruption.

Comrade Li Ligong also stressed that, in investigating and handling cases, the discipline inspection departments must uphold the principle of seeking truth from facts and apply the policy of dealing with cases in discriminating says according to their seriousness.

Further on Meeting

HK280814 Taiyuan Shanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Excerpt] The 4-day provincial discipline inspection work conference was concluded on 26 March. Li Ligong, secretary of the Provincial CPC Committee; and Zhang Bangying, Provincial CPC Committee Standing Committee member and secretary of the Provincial Discipline Inspection Commission, attended the conference and made speeches. (Zhang Xindao), deputy secretary of the provincial discipline inspection commission, made further plans for this year's activities for improving party style.

The conference pointed out the tasks of this year's activities for party style. First, we should concentrate our efforts onhandling major cases and malpractices. Party committees and discipline inspection departments at all levels must concentrate their efforts on this activity. They should assign special staff to accomplish it within a specific time. In particular, they should promptly investigate and seriously handle those cases which have been frequently complained about by the masses, and which involve leadership at and above county department level or celebrities.

Second, we should really hit seriously at economic crimes, and act in the spirit of handling cases seriously and promptly. We should overcome obstructions and handle spots as yet untouched by previous work. We should tackle the problems and make judgements as the case may be, and should not treat it leniently. We should investigate and hit at economic crimes by cooperating with the departments concerned.

Third, we should further strengthen education on party spirit, style, and discipline. In addition, we should strickly enforce discipline. In coordination with the investigation results to educate the masses, so that the party members would draw lessons from these cases. Thus, the party's discipline concerning politics, personnel affairs, confidentiality, and propaganda will be improved.

Fourth, we should strengthen the building of the discipline inspection staff, and constantly improve their quality. Cadres in charge of discipline inspection must set examples for others, take a proper attitude, and have good methods.

The conference stressed: Party committees and discipline inspection departments at all levels must have a sense of urgency when improving party style. Party committees at all levels must strengthen their leadership. In particular, the principal and deputy leaders must set examples for others in two areas. First, they should take the lead in improving party style. Second, they should be bold in handling and struggling against unhealthy tendencies. They should resolutely oppose the unhealthy work style of only indulging in empty talk while doing no practical work.

HEILONGJIANG SECRETARY VIEWS TECHNICAL FINDINGS ON DISPLAY

SK290330 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Leading comrades, including Sun Weiben, Chen Yunlin, Liu Chengguo, Huang Feng, Wang Fei, Wang Zhao, and Lin Min, viewed the technical findings on display at the first provincial technical findings transaction meeting this afternoon. While viewing the technical findings on display, leading comrades, including Sun Weiben, talked with scientific and technological personnel, producers, and enterprise managerial personnel.

After viewing the exhibits, Comrade Sun Weiben said: We must not underestimate the scientific and technological level of Heilongjiang. Our technical findings are pretty good in both quantity and quality. How can we turn scientific research findings into functions for vitalizing Heilongjiang's economy? We must create conditions for popularizing and applying scientific and technical findings in order to achieve this work. From now on, we should sponsor more and more activities such as technical findings transaction meetings, to display, popularize, and study science and technology. This is a benign cycle and has many advantages for production.

DANDONG CITY BRINGS CADRES TO PUBLIC TRIAL

SK310245 Shenyang Liaoning Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] On the afternoon of 27 March, the Dandong City CPC Committee of the city People's Government held a rally on straightening out party style in order to consolidate organs. More than 1,000 cadres from the organs attended the rally.

At the rally, cases involving 16 cadres, including (Song Bin), former director of the general office under the city People's Government, who had seriously violated the law and discipline, were openly dealt with.

During the party rectification drive, (Song Bin), former director of the general office under the city People's Government, diverted 50,000 yuan of public funds to arrange for two houses for his children without the approval of the leadership and by taking advantage of his position and power. His case has exerted bad influence among the masses.

The Dandong City CPC Committee has decided to give him a strict disciplinary warning within the party, to dismiss him from his administrative post, and to force him to return one of the two houses.

In addition, by openly violating the state policy on the unified purchase and sale of grains, (Zhang Jinxiang), secretary of the party organization under the Dandong City material supply and trade center, and (Zhang Dongming), and (Wang Wenzhu), deputy managers of the trade center, illegally purchased and sold 450,000 jin of rice at negotiated prices and extorted grain coupons amounting to 400,000 jin. They then obtained 19,798 yuan of illegal income by selling the grain coupons, privately opened a treasury to shield the money, and finally shared out the income in the form of bonuses.

The party organization under the Dandong City Material Supply Bureau has decided to dismiss (Zhang Jinxiang) from the post of secretary of the party organization, to give (Wang Wenzhu) a strict disciplinary warning within the party, and to dismiss (Zhang Dongming) from the post of deputy manager and void his application for party membership.

Of 16 convicted cadres openly dealt with on 27 March, 5 are from the banking units, 1 is a public security cadre, and 1 is a policeman. All of them have been punished by receiving party or government disciplinary warnings. Some of them have also been booked by the judicial organs for further investigation.

SHAANXI'S BAI JINIAN SPEAKS AT TOURISM CONFERENCE

HK280921 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 23 Mar 86

[Excerpts] The provincial conference on tourism work concluded in Xian yesterday [23 March]. On the basis of discussing and studying the plan for developing the tourism work in our province during the Seventh 5-year Plan period, the conference put forward the target of struggle and main measures to invigorate the tourism work in our province. Bai Jinian, secretary of the provincial CPC committee, spoke at yesterday's conference.

The target of the development of the tourism work is the whole province during the Seventh 5-year Plan period is that after 5 years' hard work, by 1990, the province will be able to receive 600,000 tourists from abroad and 15 million domestic tourists, that the total income from tourism will reach 2.4 billion yuan, and that tourism will become one of the economic pillars of the whole province.

The main tasks of the construction of basic tourism facilities and of training qualified personnel are that the development and utilization of the cultural relics must be regarded as the main work and that Xian must be regarded as the center from which tourism work should develop in all directions. Nine different styles of tourist regions must be gradually set up. An airport must be built at Xianyang. An expressway from Xian to (Xirongguan) and a grade one road from Xian to Xianyang must be built. International communications facilities and long-distance telephone lines must be erected and 14 new hotels built. A number of qualified tourism personnel of high and middle grades must be trained so as to make the tourism work in the whole province attain the domestic advanced level during the Seventh 5-year Plan period. We must create conditions for building our province into an international tourist spot by the end of this century.

The representatives present at the conference carried out a full discussion, centered on the above-mentioned target and tasks.

Bai Jinian, secretary of the provincial CPC committee, talked about four aspects of work at the conference yesterday:

1. It is necessary to further strengthen the publicizing of tourism work and to arouse the enthusiasm of leading cadres at all levels and of all departments for developing tourism work.

2. It is essential to adhere to the principle of protection, development, and utilization and to give play to the advantages of the tourism resources of our province so as to to make them serve the four modernizations and benefit our future generations.

3. It is imperative to strengthen the building of the tourism forces and to work hard to train ranks of tourism workers whose ideology and work style is good and who are professionally competent.

4. It is necessary to really strengthen leadership over the tourism trade.

THIRD PLENUM OF KMT CENTRAL COMMITTEE OPENS

OW291025 Taipei CNA in English 0956 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Text] Taipei, March 29 (CNA) -- The Third Plenary Session of the 12th Kuomintang Central Committee and the third conference of its Central Advisory Committee opened here Saturday morning to review party works in the past two years and to map out policy guidelines for the future. President Chiang Ching-kuo, in his capacity as chairman of the party, presided over the opening ceremony of the three-day plenum. Nearly 900 ranking party officials, including members and alternate members of the Central Committee and members of the Central Advisory Committee, and KMT members holding senior government positions, took part in the session which will last through March 31. In his address entitled "China's Reunification and World Peace" to the opening ceremony, President Chiang said that China must be reunified, but only under the Three Principles of the People.

Immediately after the opening ceremony, a preparatory meeting was held to discuss and decide on the agenda for the three-day session, and the namelist of the Presidium. The meeting was presided over by Chairman Chiang. The 12 members of the Presidium are Yen Chia-kan, Li Teng-hui, Yu Kuo-hua, Huang Shao-ku, Ku Cheng-kang, Nieh Wen-ya, Wu Po-hsiung, Soong Chang-chih, Chiu Chuang-huan, Henry Hsu, Huang Tsun-chiu, and Wang Yah-chuan.

At noon, members of the Presidium, headed by former president Yen Chia-kan, visited Tzuhu, temporary mausoleum of the late President Chiang Kai-shek, to pay respects to the late national leader on behalf of all the participants of the plenary session. In the afternoon, participants heard a report on party affairs from Central Committee Secretary General Mah Soo-lay, and a mainland affairs report from Pai Wen-tsiang, director of the Department of Mainland Operation.

During the next two days, the plenary session will hear a report on government administration by Premier Yu Kuo-hua, in addition to reviewing written reports from the Legislative, Control, Examination and Judicial Yuans Sunday. It will also hear reports on military affairs and the international situation. Panel discussions are held in the evening to draft resolutions and recommendations. The Central Advisory Council will hold a separate meeting Monday morning while the Central Committee will re-elect new members of the Central Standing Council in the afternoon.

Premier Yu Reports

OW310329 Taipei CNA in English 0240 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Taipei, March 30 (CNA) -- Premier Yu Kuo-hua said Sunday that the successful implementation of the three principles of the people in the Republic of China has provided a model for the developing countries of the world to follow in their national development. Yu, in his capacity as a member of the Kuomintang's Central Standing Committee, made an administrative report to the Kuomintang's ongoing Third Session of the 12th Central Committee at the Chungshan building on Yangmingshan.

Under the brilliant leadership of President Chiang Ching-kuo and the joint efforts of the government and the people, the ROC has successfully overcome many difficulties the nation has faced since the second session on the party held in February of 1984, Yu said. "The nation is moving steadily toward implementing a constitutional democratic system, expanding economic growth on the basis of liberalization and internationalization and creating a open, harmonious and prosperous society", the premier said.

Commenting on the administration of the Executive Yuan over the past years, Yu said that nation has successfully deterred the Peiping regime's united front offensive aimed at isolating the nation from the international community. And its staunch anti-communist stand has won great admiration from many countries of the world. To assure the security of the national revival bastion on Taiwan and to pave the way for accomplishment of mainland recovery, stepping up efforts to develop a self-sufficient defense industry is necessary, Yu said.

Politically, the nation successfully conducted two local elections according to the principles of fairness, openness and justice late last year and early this year, laying a solid foundation for the constitutional democratic system, Yu pointed out. Furthermore, much emphasis has been put on social welfare programs such as social insurance and assistance programs for the needy, Yu said. Currently, 5.39 million, or 28 percent of the total population in the Taiwan area, are covered by the insurance programs for government employees, laborers and farmers, he said, adding that the government is actively promoting the establishment of group medical centers in rural areas to help assure public health.

Referring to economic development, Yu said that the rapid economic growth in the past has made the ROC a modern nation with per capita income reaching U.S. dollar 3,14 last year. The nation is now the world's 17th and the 10th largest nation in terms of the volume of two-way trade and exports respectively, he said. Outlining the major points of administration for the coming year, Yu said his Yuan will:

-- Expand friendly relations with foreign countries in accordance with the principles of maintaining the nation's dignity and interests;
-- Beef up national defense to assure the security of the nation;
-- Carry out the constitutional democratic system throughly;
-- Establish a stable and harmonious society with fair and equal opportunity for everyone; and
-- develop a prosperous economy featuring the equitable distribution of wealth.

Participants Confer

OW310333 Taipei CNA in English 0252 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Taipei, March 30 (CNA) -- Participants in the Kuomintang's Third Plenum of the 12th Central Committee have looked critically at the performances of the government's five branches, including the executive, legislative, judicial, examination and control yuans, over the past two years. They also urged Premier Yu Kuo-hua to make renewed efforts to move the nation toward forward-thining, new horizons. Members of the KMT Central Committee on Sunday morning listened to an oral report by Premier Yu on the government administration over the past years and then took part in a seminar presided over by Vice President Lee Teng-hui for discussion of what should be done by the government to cope with a new situation in the future. During the discussion, some participants suggested that the government improve communication with the opposition parties and non-partisans so as to broaden the KMT's popular base.

They also urged some political organizations which have refused to register with the government to reconsider their decision for the sake of social harmony, and not to misunderstand the government's tolerance of their existence as weakness. Some members suggested that the government step up its effort to eliminate criminal syndicates and work out more social welfare programs to help maintain the social order.

Referring to the government's attitude toward the nation's membership in the Asian Development Bank, most members expressed their support of the government's stand on not accepting the ADB's decision to change the nation's name in the bank, but they also suggested that the government take appropriate actions to resolve this problem. Some other members, however, suggested that the government improve its international public relations activities so as to help more countries in the world understand the political and economic progress in the country and continue to demonstrate the strength of the nation's armed forces. This, they said, would increase the people's confidence in the nation's future.

LOCALLY PRODUCED MISSILE LAUNCHED 26 MARCH

OW290155 Taipei Domestic Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Excerpts] President Chiang Ching-kuo has expressed gratification over the successful launching of a Tien Kung [Sky Bow] missile developed by the National Armed Forces [NAF]. He also hailed the NAF's scientists and technicians who took part in the development and launch of the missile. The Ministry of National Defense has announced that the NAF successfully launched an all purpose [Chuan Kung Neng] missile, the Tian Kung surface-to-air missile, on 26 March, saying that it accurately destroyed a drone. The surface-to-air missile, developed and manufactured by the Chinese people, was successfully launched for the first time last year, according to an announcement made by the Ministry of National Defense last July.

Meanwhile, Defense Minister Song Chang-chih has stressed that the government will continue to develop sophisticated weapons to replace the NAF's weaponry so that the NAF will continue to be an up-to-date revolutionary, anticommunist armed force capable of achieveing the sacred task of reunifying China under the three principles of the people.

DEFENSE SPOKESMAN ON U.S. ARMS SALES TO PRC

OW290200 Taipei CNA in English 1432 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Taipei, March 28 (CNA) -- Defense Ministry Spokesman Gen Chang Hui-yuan said that if the United States provides sophisticated arms and technology to the Chinese communists, it would threaten the security and stability of non-communist nations in the west Pacific area. Chang made the remarks while commenting on foreign wire service reports that 19 U.S. Republican congressmen have recently sent a letter to President Ronald Reagan, strongly opposing sales of advanced military equipment and technology to Communist China.

Chang pointed out at a press conference that the Chinese Communists have long been warmongers and have repeatedly talked about the possibility of taking over Taiwan by force. If democratic nations supply the communist regime with sophisticated military equipment and technology, Chang said, it may endanger the security of the Asian Pacific region. Chang indicated it is in the interest of the United States to maintain peace and stability in the west Pacific area and the Taiwan straits. He thus called on America not to sell state-of-the-art technology and arms to the Chinese Communists in order to maintain the military balance in the Taiwan Straits.

ARTISTS DISCUSS ATTITUDES TOWARD SEX, CRITICISM

HK300556 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 30 Mar 86 p 5

[By Terry Cheng]

[Text] Beijing: China should not be too sensitive about overseas reaction to its literary developments, said a noted writer in Beijing yesterday. Zhang Shenliang, one of the few contemporary Chinese writers who discusses sex in his novels, said literary works about sex, if written well, could be valuable. His novels on sexual psychology when China was in political turmoil have generated controversy in the country and aroused interest in Hong Kong and elsewhere. He said he did not intend his novels to be about sex. "I just wanted to reflect that period of China when the psychology of people was distorted," he said. He denied he came under pressure from the authorities over his works on sex.

Zhang, who is chairman of the Writers Association at Ningxia and a member of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference, talked to Hong Kong reporters and three CPPCC members who are literary people. They were Deng Youmei, Miss Zhang Ruifong and Miss Liu Changyu.

Author Deng, who is a member of the secretariat of the National Writers Association, said whether sex was discussed or not should not be a criterion on which to judge the literary value of a work. He said the traditional Chinese attitude towards sex was different to that of the West. He said books on sex published in Taiwan attracted less reaction from overseas countries than those published in mainland China. "Some people overseas stirred things up," which had little to do with the literary merit of the works themselves," he said. "They wanted to dwell on political issues." Deng said some overseas criticism was due to misunderstanding of the developments on the mainland. Other criticism was pertinent to real literary discussion, he said.

Zheng said he believed, however, that most criticism initiated abroad was made with good intentions. "We should not be too sensitive about overseas reaction," he said. He said there might be misunderstanding on the part of foreigners. But if literary developments continued smoothly, misunderstandings might vanish one day, he said.

Deng Youmei, when asked to comment on reports that Wang Meng, a writer and a vice-chairman of the National Writers' Association, would soon become the next minister of culture, replied: "Thank God it's not me!" He said if he were appointed minister of culture, he could not continue to be a writer at the same time. Deng said Mr Wang was an appropriate choice for the job. He was a young, cultured man who had new concepts.

Miss Zhang, a famous actress, said the number of movies produced each year fell short of demand for the people of China. She said films today were becoming more true to life, reflecting people's feelings. There were more young directors whose films tended to be more experimental. She said the social effects of films were considered more important than economic gain.

Miss Liu, who is a Beijing opera actress and played in eight "exemplary revolutionary operas" highly publicised during the Cultural Revolution, said she was pleased to be appointed a CPPCC member this year. It showed the Government placed faith in her which was an honour, she said. The eight so-called "exemplary operas" were not all bad, she said. Nor were they the sole accomplishment of Jiang Qing, widow of Mao Zedong. Many people were involved. Some of the eight operas were banned several years ago. However, late last year sections of the operas were broadcast on radio. The operas ran into opposition from people who objected to being reminded of the oppression suffered under the gang of four led by Jiang Qing.

Miss Liu said contemporary life is being portrayed in Beijing opera today. She favoured experimentation in opera, such as using electronic music and staging Shakespearean plays. However, she would rather portray things traditionally Chinese in her operas.

NEW ZEALAND'S LANGE COMMENTS ON PRC TRIP

HK300614 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 30 Mar 86 p 1

[Text] Chinese premier Deng Xiaoping hopes to live until the year 2,000, but he "would settle for five days after a certain date in 1997." The cigarette-smoking 81-year-old told Mr David Lange of his wish to see Hong Kong finally restored to China during the New Zealand Prime Minister's week-long visit to Beijing. Mr Lange talked of his meeting with the veteran leader when he stopped off in Hong Kong yesterday on his way to Manila to meet new Philippines president Mrs Cory Aquino.

He described Mr Deng's health as "fairly robust" and said: "He is certainly very physically active. He seemed very controlled and there is no question of any respiratory problems. He spoke vigorously." Mr Deng had been pleased when Mr Lange said his buoyant appearance would be good for the stock market.

Mr Lange spoke enthusiastically about his time in Beijing, even describing Communist Party chief Mr Hu Yaobang as being so "dynamic in his gestures" that he threatened to take off. His discussions with the Chinese leadership had "achieved more than he hoped for."

The New Zealand Prime Minister was fluent and quick off the mark as he faced a press conference at the Foreign Correspondents Club in Icehouse Street. But he was stopped in his tracks just once, when the SUNDAY MORNING POST put to him the possibility of a nuclear free zone in Hong Kong, of the type he favours for his own country and the surrounding South Pacific. Mr Lange said: "It is certainly novel because I had not considered it. I don't know who decides these things in Hong Kong." The British Royal Navy had decided not to make port calls to New Zealand during a Pacific tour because ships carrying nuclear capability had been banned. But he said: "This is not considered by New Zealand in any way a weakening of our security relations."

Mr Lange said that China had repeated its support of a nuclear free zone in the South Pacific. He had welcomed the announcement of the end of Chinese nuclear atmospheric tests and said he had made a plea for China to cease all nuclear testing.

When New Zealand recognised the Beijing Government in 1972 the two-way balance of payments between the two countries was US$1 million. Last year it was US$185 million. The two countries would be undertaking joint ventures in the textile and prawn industries and could offer a wealth of technology and expertise in animal husbandry, grassland management and forestry. New Zealand would import good quality manufactured goods from China, said Mr Lange. The two sides had agreed to negotiate agreements covering the avoidance of double taxation, investment protection and science and technology.

Mr Lange said that China's view of stability in the region and its relationship with the United States had moved from a "strong sentiment in 1981 that war was inevitable" to a stage where "they see themselves and the United States as practical partners." He said: "They can pursue economic goals and work together for the benefit of China and the region. China doesn't like to see any place becoming unstable even if the revolution is in the interests of socialism."

DANISH PRIME MINISTER REVIEWS FRC VISIT

HK300520 Hong Kong Commercial Radio in English 0430 GMT 30 Mar 86

[Text] Danish Prime Minister Poul Schluter has arrived in Hong Kong after a week-long visit to China. He told newsmen at Kai Tak Airport that he had useful and positive talks with the Chinese leaders during his stay there.

[Begin Schluter recording] Our political talks with the Chinese communists and Deng Xiaoping were very open, and both of them stressed to me that one should expect that the open-door policy is going to be continued. They stressed this very vigorously. And, as you can see in China today, this was also the message of the prime minister to the congress yesterday, where he, in a great speech, emphasized that, all right, there have been some minor problems involved in the open-door policy, but this is the line they will stick to. And I think this is very positive to the rest of the world. [end recording]

Mr Schluter added that senior statesman Deng Xiaoping was in good health, walking fast, and energetic. The prime minister will stay here for 2 days, and will held talks with political advisor John Boyd and Danish businessmen. He will also give a news conference before leaving tomorrow night.

CPC SPOKESMAN ON PARTY RELATIONS WITH CPSU, OTHERS

HK311552 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1440 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, 31 Mar (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Today, at a news briefing, Wu Xingtang, a spokesman for the CPC Central Committee's International Liaison Department, answered questions raised by Chinese and foreign reporters on the relations between CPC and the communist parties of other countries.

[Reporter] Have relations between the two parties been discussed in Beijing or Moscow?

[Wu] The problem to be solved by China and the Soviet Union now is the problem of eliminating the three major obstacles. The resumption of relations is still out of the question now.

[Reporter] Has China given thought to the problem of establishing relations with the communist parties of Eastern European countries?

[Wu] China has not resumed its relations with some communist parties. Our principle is that we are willing to resume relations with any communist party on the basis of the principle of independence and taking the initiative in one's own hands in interparty relations. We are pleased to see that in recent years, the political, economic, and cultural relations between China and some Eastern European countries have been developing significantly.

[Reporter] How about the relations between China and the Portuguese Communist Party?

[Wu] In mid-March, the Portuguese Communist Party sent a delegation to China. General Secretary Hu Yaobang met and held cordial talks with the delegation. The delegation was the first one sent by the Portuguese Communist Party to China over the past 20 years or so. The delegation came to pay a return visit to the CPC, which sent a delegation to visit Portugal last year. The CPC and the Portuguese Communist Party respect each other's domestic and foreign policies. We believe that, in the future, we will strengthen contacts and exchanges in order to give impetus to the development of the relations between the two parties.

[Reporter] What is the present state of the relations between the CPC and the Communist Party of the Philippines [CPP]? Can you say something on which CPP policies and goals are acceptable to the CPC?

[Wu] Like the relations between the CPC and other communist parties, the relations between the CPC and the CPP are moral ones. China will not comment on CPP internal policies because this is their own affair.

[Reporter] Has the CPC been in contact with the Korean Party and Kim Il-song of late? Does the CPC plan to this year?

[Wu] There are close relations between the CPC and the KWP. The leaders of the two parties frequently contact each other and discuss international issues and matters of common concern. However, the timing of future meetings and contacts will depend on the circumstances.

PRC UN DELEGATE SCORES U.S ACTION AGAINST LIBYA

OW281128 Beijing XINHUA in English 0706 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] United Nations, March 27 (XINHUA) -- Representatives of more than 20 countries spoke today in the U.N. Security Council as it entered the second day of deliberations on the situation in the southern Mediterranean.

The council first met yesterday at the request of Malta, the Soviet Union and the Arab group on the tense situation in the Gulf of Sidra off the Libyan coast where the U.S. Naval forces fired on Libyan vessels and territory earlier this week.

Ambassador Li Luye, China's permanent representative to the United Nations, addressed the council this afternoon. He noted that since the beginning of this year, the U.S. Navy had conducted frequent military maneuvers in the waters near Libya, subjecting the country to military threat and aggravating the tension in the Mediterranean. "The Chinese Government is deeply concerned over these developments," he stated. "The recent attack by the United States on the territory of Libya, a sovereign state, constitutes a violation of the norms governing international relations." He said that it is the consistent position of the Chinese Government to oppose and condemn all acts that violate the norms guiding international relations and encroach upon the territorial sovereignty of other countries.

In this regard, he reminded the council that peaceful settlement of international disputes is a universally recognized principle in modern international law, and one of the important principles of the U.N. Charter. "It is therefore the common obligation of all countries to strictly abide by this principle in handling international relations and not to resort to force or threat of force," he said. Proceeding from this principle, he said, "We call on the United States to cease forthwith its military threat against Libya so as to alleviate the tension in the Mediterranean and restore peace and stability in the region." He also called on both sides to resolve their differences peacefully in accordance with the means and procedures as provided in the U.N. Charter. He further emphasized that the Mediterranean countries, particularly those non-aligned countries, have, in recent years, been actively working for and promoting peace, security and cooperation in the region. He urged all countries to respect the aspirations and efforts of these countries and people.

Among the other speakers this afternoon was the Charge d'Affaires of Libya, Rajae A. Azzarouk. [name as received] He told the council that in this month alone, the U.S. had already conducted four military exercises off the Libyan coast and, since 1981, 18 such exercises. He said that small states in the Mediterranean region were confronted with the choice of either being subjected to the hegemonistic designs of the United States or standing up to the U.S. aggression. The presence of the U.S. 6th Fleet in the Gulf of Sidra should be condemned, he said. "Let us condemn hegemony," he said, adding that all actions contrary to the rule of law should be condemned.

The council will meet again on Monday, March 31. The parties concerned will work through the weekend on draft resolutions. At the moment, three drafts are being considered by Malta, the non-aligned countries and the Soviet Union respectively.

PUBLISHER CITES DENG ON THREE GORGES PROJECT

HK311204 Hong Kong AFP in English 1201 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 31 (AFP) -- Top Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping said that a controversial giant dam on the Yangtze River would have more advantages than disadvantages, a Chinese-American publisher who met with Mr Deng said Monday. "He said the final decision had yet to be made, but taken to togetherthere were more advantages than disadvantages" publisher Fu Chao-chu told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE after a meeting with Mr Deng.

Mr Fu, a publisher of Chinese-language newspapers in the United States, Canada and Hong Kong, said Mr Deng had told him during the 45-minute meeting that China would solve all problems concerning the dam before proceeding. "Our newspapers have published many reports about the dam and urged the Chinese Government not to decide about it too lightly. He wanted to reassure me that China was considering the question very carefully indeed," Mr Fu said.

The huge project, which would be built on the Yangtze River's scenic Three Gorges, has drawn criticism within China and abroad for its high projected cost, anticipated problems with silting, and the large number of people -- an estimated 10 million -- that would need to be resettled.

Mr Fu quoted Mr Deng as saying that problems of silting and resettlement would be solved before the project was allowed to proceed.

Mr Deng also spoke about his health, repeating, as he recently said to visiting leaders from Denmark and New Zealand, that he had deliberately avoided making public appearances during three months this winter to show that China's policies did not depend on him alone, Mr Fu said. "He likes to joke," said Mr Fu, who quoted Deng as saying "I think I can probably live a few more years. Medical science is very developed now, it's not so easy for a person to die."

Also participating in the meeting was Yang Shangkun, vice chairman of the powerful party Military Commission headed by Mr Deng, who inquired about Mr Fu's stay in China but did not otherwise join in the conversation, Mr Fu said. The general had hosted Mr Fu at a banquet during a previous visit and sat in on Monday's meeting as a friend, Mr Fu said.

Mr Fu's Chung newspapers, which have a circulation of 70,000 in the United States, are considered relatively neutral in their reporting of Chinese news events, analysts said.

The U.S.-based publisher, who arrived here March 12 for a tour of China that included the Three Gorges, was previously received twice by Mr Deng, once on his first visit in 1981 and once last year.

U.S. OIL COMPANY EXPLORATORY WELL PRODUCING

OW311946 Beijing XINHUA in English 1849 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Guangzhou, March 31 (XINHUA) -- An exploratory well drilled by the Occidental Eastern Oil Company of the United States in the eastern part of the basin off the Pearl River mouth is producing oil, the Nanhai (South China Sea) Eastern Petroleum Corporation announced here today. The well spouted 2,100 bbl during a trial operation last Friday. Some 370 km southeast of this capital of Guangdong Province, it is the first oil-producing well drilled by the U.S. firm in the basin and the sixth in the Huizhou depression, where large amounts of oil and gas are believed to be deposited.

KIM IL-SONG REPORTEDLY VISITED PRC IN DECEMBER

OW010008 Tokyo KYODO in English 0002 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Tokyo, April 1 Kyodo -- North Korean President Kim Il-song visited China in December for talks with Chinese leaders, the Japanese newspaper ASAHI SHIMBUN said Tuesday.

The South Korean-U.S. joint military exercise "Team Spirit '86" and dialogue between North and South Korea were major topics of his discussion with Chinese leaders including party General Secretary Hu Yaobang, the mass circulation daily quoted an expert on international affairs as saying. In a dispatch from Beijing, ASAHI said Kim's China visit coincided with a trip to Moscow by North Korean Premier Kang Song-san, a move intended to maintain Pyongyang's "equal distance" with both China and the Soviet Union. There have been indications that North Korea has been moving closer to the Soviet Union.

Quoting a reliable Chinese source, the daily also said Beijing authorities earlier this year imposed a press blackout on the 1986 Asian games and 1988 Olympics, both to be held in Seoul. The action was taken so as not to upset North Korea, ASAHI added.

North Korea says it will boycott the 1988 Olympics if South Korea does not accept its porposal that the games be sponsored jointly by the two Koreas.

PRC Denies Report

OW010838 Tokyo KYODO in English 0833 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 1 Kyodo -- A foreign ministry spokesman Tuesday denied a report that North Korea's President Kim Il-song had visited China for talks with communist party general Secretary Hu Yaobang at the beginning of last December. The spokesman described the report as "groundless." He added that the ministry had denied the rumors when they first surfaced in late December. East European diplomatic sources here also discounted the report.

JAPANESE COURT VERDICT ON PRC 'PROPERTY' PROTESTED

OW311844 Beijing XINHUA in English 1830 GMT 31 Mar 86

["Chinese Residents' Leader in Japan Protests Court Verdict on PRC Property" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Tokyo, March 31 (XINHUA) -- Chairman of the Tokyo Association of Chinese Residents Chen Kunwang said here today that the Kyoto local court's verdict on a Chinese students residence in Tokyo goes completely against the principles of the China-Japan Peace and Friendship Treaty. The Kyoto local court on February 4 adjudged the Chinese student residence named "Kokatyo" in Tokyo, a lawful property of the People's Republic of China (PRC), to the Taiwan authorities.

The student residence was at first rented by the Kyoto University from a joint venture to house overseas Chinese students there. In 1961 the residence was bought by the Taiwan authorities and registered in the name of "the Republic of China." Chen Kunwang, in an interview with XINHUA, pointed out that all properties in Japan, including the student residence, registered in the name of "the Republic of China" should automatically belong to the People's Republic of China following the establishment of diplomatic relations between Japan and China.

The local court of Kyoto, he added, flagrantly interfered in China's internal affairs and made clear its intention to creat "two Chinas" in passing the verdict by claiming that the inheritance of the People's Republic of China is "incomplete" since the "Government of the Republic of China still rules Taiwan and its surrounding islands." He said the unjustifiable judgement has caused widespread indignation and concern among the Chinese residents and also Japanese friendly personages and organisations. He pointed out that Taiwan is in inalienable part of the People's Republic of China and the Government of the People's Republic of China is the sole legal government of China.

Japanese courts, too, should unexceptionally abide by the principles of the joint statement and the peace and friendship treaty signed by the two countries. He expressed the hope that Japan should realize that under no circumstances and in no form can the so-called "Republic of China" be regarded as existent, and that the authority concerned handles the student residence issue fairly and properly. It is learnt that the Chinese side is making representations to Japan through diplomatic channels.

VICE PREMIER YAO YILIN MEETS JAPANESE DELEGATION

OW311639 Beijing XINHUA in English 1448 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 31 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Vice-Premier Yao Yilin met with a delegation from Kyushu, Japan, here this afternoon at the Great Hall of the People. The delegation is led by Saburo Nagakura, president of the Economic Federation of Kyushu Yamaguchi and chairman of the West-Japan and China Cultural Exchange Association.

At the meeting, Yao answered questions about China's economic development and bilateral trade and economic cooperation between the two countries. Present at the meeting was Liu Seqing, director of China Institute of Contemporary International Relations.

The Japanese visitors arrived in Beijing March 28 as guests of the institute on a study tour of China's economy. They have exchanged views with departments concerned on strengthening exchanges between the two sides in the fields of economy, trade, culture, science, technology and education.

DPRK REJECTS SOUTH'S CALL FOR TALKS RESUMPTION

OW311728 Beijing XINHUA in English 1655 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Pyongyang, March 31 (XINHUA) -- The Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) Monday dismissed as "not worthy of consideration" South Korea's proposal for resumption of the North-South parliamentary contacts. According to the KOREAN CENTRAL NEWS AGENCY, Chon Kun-chol, head of the DPRK delegation to the North-South parliamentary talks, said in a telephone message to his South Korean counterpart, Kwong Chong-tal, that Seoul "is not entitled at all to talk about the dialogue."

South Korea last Wednesday proposed to resume the third round of North-South preliminary parliamentary talks on May 14. The talks, originally scheduled for February 18, were suspended after the South Korea-U.S. joint military exercises began. The DPRK has insisted that South Korea is responsible for breaking the North-South contacts. Pyongyang has repeatedly charged Seoul for organizing the joint military exercise with the United States, despite the DPRK urging military maneuvers on both sides be stopped.

"It cannot be said that to talk about the resumption of the contact sounds reasonable to anyone at a time when the 'Team Spirit 86' joint military exercises have not yet been brought to an end," Chon said.

QIAO SHI MEETS DPRK PROCURATORATE DELEGATION

OW311404 Beijing XINHUA in English 1324 MT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 31 (XINHUA) -- Qiao Shi, Political Bureau and Secretariat member of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, met here today a delegation from the central procurator's office of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea led by Han Sang-kyu, procurator general of the office.

Qiao told the visitors that China had done a lot to strengthen its legal system in recent years, thus having ensured smooth development of its economic restructuring and maintenance of a political situation characterised by stability and unity.

Both Qiao and Han expressed the wish to strengthen exchanges between the procuratorates and judicial workers of the two countries. Yang Yichen, procurator-general of China's Supreme People's Procuratorate, and Sin In-ha, Korean ambassador to China, were present on the occasion.

NAKASONE CAUTIOUS ON JAPAN'S SDI PARTICIPATION

OW311100 Beijing XINHUA in English 1035 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Tokyo, March 31 (XINHUA) -- Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone has decided not to clarify Japan's position on participating in the Strategic Defense Initiative program, during his coming April meeting with U.S. President Ronald Reagan. According to reports carried in the Japanese press today, Nakasone will only express Japan's willingness to take part in the SDI program in a "tacit", or implied way, and will not spell out exactly what form his country's participation may take.

The prime minister's cautious attitude is said to result from the fact that controversy about whether Japan should play a role in the "star wars" program still exists within the Japanese Government and ruling Liberal Democratic Party.

Nakasone expressed the hope that his coming meeting with President Reagan, slated to take place April 13 and 14 will concentrate on the theme of the forthcoming Tokyo Summit Conference of the seven major industrialized countries, U.S.-Japanese economic problems and other outstranding questions that exist between the two countries.

HU YAOBANG MEETS AUSTRALIANS; HU QILI PRESENT

OW010950 Beijing XINHUA in English 0940 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 1 (XINHUA) -- Chinese party leader Hu Yaobang, in a meeting today with a visiting Australian delegation, said that he hoped for a continued expansion of trade between the two countries. Hu, general secretary of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, made this remark to John Charges Bannon, premier of the state of South Australia. Hu visited the state last April.

Hu was concerned about the trade between China and Australia, which amounted to over one billion U.S. dollars last year, an increase of three percent over 1984. "The increase is too small," Hu said. He is hopeful that the trade volume can be doubled during the seventh five-year period (1986-90).

Bannon hopes to establish links between his state and China's Shandong Province. The aim is to "not only develop cultural interflow between the two places, but also to expand economic cooperation between the two sides."

After the meeting, Hu and the Australian visitors took a walk along Chongnanhai lake. Present on the occasion were Hu Qili, member of the Political Bureau, and member of the Secretariat of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, and Ross Garnaut, Australian ambassador to China. The Australian visitors arrived here March 30 and will leave here April 2 for a visit to Shandong Province.

PHILIPPINE SECRETARY REFUTES MARCOS PRESIDENCY

OW311949 Beijing XINHUA in English 1859 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Manila, March 31 (XINHUA) -- Philippine Executive Secretary Joker Arroyo here today refuted Ferdinand Marcos' allegation that he still considers himself the president. Reacting on the remarks of Marcos in Honolulu that Mrs. Aquino's government is a dictatorship and that he still considers himself the president, Arroyo said "he is still daydreaming. He has not yet waked up to the reality." He said the downfall of Marcos indicated that he had lost popular support and that he should step down. President Aquino will step down from the presidency should she lose popular support, Arroyo said.

PHILIPPINE CIVILIAN HOME DEFENSE FORCE DISMANTLED

OW312034 Beijing XINHUA in English 1837 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Manila, March 31 (XINHUA) -- 40,000-strong Civilian Home Defense Force (CHDF) all over the Philippines was dismantled today on order of Executive Secretary Joker Arroyo, presidential palace sources said. The CHDF was created in the 70's by then President Marcos with an aim to help the military in the counter-insurgent movement in the villages. Later, some of its members had reportedly become private armies of political warlords. Office of the Armed Forces Chief of Staff General Fidel Ramos did not confirm the news but the appointments of all CHDF members were terminated today, the sources said.

Early last year, 58 opposition party members (now the ruling party) filed a resolution for the abolition of the CHDF at the National Assembly, but it was voted down by the then ruling New Society Movement (KBL). The resolution was revived again when the CHDF figured in the killing of Italian Priest Fr. Tullio Favali and the massacre of 21 protesters in Escalante, Negros Occidential Province.

IAEA LAUDS PAKISTAN'S USE OF NUCLEAR ENERGY

OW312040 Beijing XINHUA in English 1923 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Islamabad, March 31 (XINHUA) -- Emeritus Director General of International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) Sigvard Eklund today lauded Pakistan's efforts and progress in the peaceful use of nuclear energy. Addressing a news conference at the airport before his departure for India, he said, "We will contribute in further development of nuclear energy in Pakistan, especially for use in power generation." He noted that in medical centers in Lahore and Peshawar a large number of patients were being diagnosed and provided with nuclear medical treatment.

Sigvard arrived in Pakistan on March 27. He visited facilities for peaceful use of nuclear energy in Pakistan, including power generation station, agricultural research institute and medical centers. He was received by President Ziaul Haq earlier today.

AFGHAN GUERRILLAS ATTACK SOVIET-KARMAL TROOPS

OW311320 Beijing XINHUA in English 1239 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Islamabad, March 31 (XINHUA) -- Dozens of Soviet-Karmal troops were killed in a number of raids carried out by the Afghan guerrillas this month, AGENCY AFGHAN PRESS reported today. On March 21, guerrillas in eastern Paktia Province destroyed three long-range BM-13 guns and military installations at the Jaji front. On March 19, the guerrilla forces in eastern Paktia Province shot down a Soviet transport plane carrying ammunition for the besieged troops in Jaji district and Khost cantonment. The plane crashed near Khost town with the Soviet pilot and the crew killed on the spot.

On March 18, during a missile attack on Jalalabad airport in Ningarhar Province, the guerrillas damaged two helicopters on the runway and inflicted several casualties upon the Karmal troops. On March 17 the guerrillas in the western province of Farah ambushed a military convoy which was moving towards the provincial capital, killing six Soviet-Karmal troops and destroying one tank and one truck. On March 7, 37 Soviet-Karmal troops were killed and 26 others injured when Afghan guerrillas stormed into the subdivisional town of Chah Ab in the northern Afghan Province of Takhar bordering the Soviet Union.

Some 250 muslim guerrillas took part in the eight-hour fierce fighting, during which they captured 16 Kalashnikov automatic rifles. The remnant Soviet-Karmal troops fled towards Taloqan, the provincial capital. Ten guerrilla fighters lost their lives in the fighting.

CPC DELEGATION TO ATTEND ITALIAN CP CONGRESS

HK010716 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1444 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, 31 Mar (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- A CPC delegation headed by Qiao Shi, a member of the Political Bureau and Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, will attend the 17th National Congress of the Italian Communist Party to be held 9 - 13 April in Florence.

This was announced by Wu Xingtang, a spokesman for the International Liaison Department of the CPC Central Committee, at a news briefing here earlier today. Wu said that the delegation will attend the congress at the invitation of the Italian Communist Party. The members of the delegation include Li Shuzheng, an alternate member of the CPC Central Committee and deputy head of the International Liaison Department, and Zhu Dacheng, head of the International Liaison Department.

At the invitation of the CPC, Wu Xingtang announced at the news briefing, a 4-member delegation of the African National Congress of South Africa led by Secretary General Alfred Nzo will arrive in Beijing today for a friendly visit to China. During their stay here, China will hold a mass rally to express the just stand of the CPC and the Chinese people in resolutely supporting the struggles of the South African people against racial discrimination and segregation and for racial equality and emancipation.

DANISH PRIME MINISTER WELCOMES PRC OPEN POLICY

OW311930 Beijing XINHUA in English 1911 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Hong Kong, March 31 (XINHUA) -- Danish Prime Minister Poul Schluter said here today that he felt convinced that China will continue its open policy, and the economic reform in China will proceed as planned. After a one-week visit to China, during which he met Chinese leaders Deng Xiaoping and Zhao Ziyang, Schluter made a short stopover here. He told a press conference that the Chinese leaders stressed that the reforms, though with minor problems, will go on. He added that this is a positive sign for countries all over the world.

Schluter said that the trade volume between Denmark and China has increased tenfold since 1978. The business delegations with him on his visit wanted to develop contacts with China's mainland and Hong Kong. He said a number of young Chinese are working in Denmark as trainees. His delegation invited Chinese provincial representatives to visit Denmark. Danish businessmen have confidence in Hong Kong's future, and in the coming decade Hong Kong will no doubt play an important role in linking the mainland with other parts of the world, the prime minister added. Schluter was to leave for home tonight.

FRG-GDR JOINT CONTRIBUTION TO ARMS TALKS URGED

OW010322 Beijing XINHUA in English 0240 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Bonn, March 31 (XINHUA) -- Federal German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has called for joint contributions by the two Germanies to future disarmament talks. In an article issued by the Foreign Ministry today, Gensched said the two Germanies were more concerned than any other country about the prevention of war in Europe, including a conventional war. He said the two countries should cooperate as closely as possible to work out a joint proposal in the Vienna follow-up conference on European security and cooperation in November.

On the road mapped out by the European security conference the two Germanies should actively cooperate instead of confrontation, he stressed. The security of each country should be equal, he said, and only by cutting conventional and chemical weapons and destroying nuclear arms at the same time can greater stability be brought about, Genscher said.

THATCHER SUGGESTED AS NUCLEAR TEST BAN MEDIATOR

OW311828 Beijing XINHUA in English 1615 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] London, March 31 (XINHUA) -- David Owen, leader of Britain's opposition Social Democratic Party (SDP), has urged the Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher to act as an honest broker between the Soviet Union and the United States in order to get an agreement on a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty. According to today's TIMES newspaper, Owen said yesterday the conservative prime minister should write privately to the leaders of the Soviet Union and the United States suggesting a resumption of trilateral talks.

Owen's remarks came after U.S. President Ronald Ronald Reagan's immediate rejection of Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's weekend proposal to meet in any European capital to negotiate such a ban. "After all, a comprehensive test ban treaty is the only negotiation where Britain is directly involved with the Soviet Union and the United States," he said. Owen said, "The danger is that if nothing is done to bridge the gap between Gorbachev and Reagan the spirit of the fireside chat of the U.S.-Soviet summit in November will go up in smoke." Owen, who was foreign secretary from 1977-1979, said President Reagan was wrong to dismiss Gorbachev's latest offer of summit talks.

WAN LI MEETS ROMANIAN DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

OW290754 Beijing XINHUA in English 0742 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 29 (XINHUA) -- Vice-Premier Wan Li met Ion Dinca, first deputy prime minister of Romania, here today to exchange views on economic cooperation and trade between the two countries. During the meeting, Wan said that China and Romania as well as the communist parties of the two countries have maintained sound relations.

"China is willing to develop trade with Romania on the basis of equality and mutual benefit and in the spirit of mutual understanding and accommodation," he added. Dinca expressed satisfaction with the development of trade between the two countries since they signed a long-term trade agreement during Romanian President Nicolae Ceausescu's visit to China last October. He hoped that the two countries will make further efforts to boost their trade. They also briefed each other on the economic development of their respective country.

Wan gave a luncheon for Dinca and his party after the meeting. Dinca and his party arrived here yesterday after visiting the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. They will leave here tomorrow for home.

SFRY OFFICIAL ON SUPERPOWERS IN MEDITERRANEAN

OW010203 Beijing XINHUA in English 0149 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Damascus, March 31 (XINHUA) -- "Yugoslavia will not allow the military presence of any big power in the Mediterranean nor any military action in the region, which may jeopardize the security of the Mediterrean countries," declared Dimce Belovski, secretary of the presidum of the Central Committee of the League of the Communists of Yugoslavia (LCY), here today. The LCY secretary made the remark to newsmen upon his arrival at the Damascus airport at the head of a LCY delegation on an official visit at the invitation of the Syrian Arab Ba'th Socialist Party.

Referring to the situation in the Mediterranean, he said that "Yugoslavia is firmly opposed to solving disputes by force and retaliation" in the region. He said that Yugoslavia and Syria have friendly relations and they are now working for social progress, the development of international relations and the promotion of the non-aligned movement.

During the visit, the delegation will hold talks with the Arab Ba'th Socialist party and leading members of the Syrian Government on bilateral relations between the two countries and the international situation.

MOROCCAN PARLIAMENTARIANS ARRIVE FOR VISIT

NPC Welcome Banquet

OW311925 Beijing XINHUA in English 1851 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 31 (XINHUA) -- Leaders of the Chinese National People's Congress and the Moroccan Parliament agreed here today to strengthen ties between the two countries. Speaking at a banquet welcoming a delegation from the Moroccan Chamber of Representatives led by President Ahmed Osman, Zhou Gucheng, vice-chairman of China's National People's Congress Standing Committee, spoke highly of Morocco's domestic achievements and foreign policy.

He said that Morocco supports the just struggles of the peoples of Palestine and southern Africa, and has contributed to the unity of the Arab and Islamic countries, safeguarding the national rights of the Palestinian people and supporting a just and peaceful solution of the Middle East question. He reiterated that the Chinese people are willing to work together with peoples of other countries for easing world tension, maintaining world peace and achieving common prosperity. He expressed the belief that the visit of the delegation will play an important role in futhering relations between the two countries, the peoples of which have maintained traditional friendship.

Osman said that Morocco and China, though separated by a long distance, have been strengthening their ties all the time. Their cooperation in various fields is exemplary. He told his hosts that Morocco is willing to contribute to world peace and stability as well as to people's happiness. He praised China for its consistent efforts in supporting the African people in their struggle against racial discrimination, opposing exploitation of the resources of the Third World, supporting South-South cooperation, and relaxing world tension.

The delegation arrived here today for a friendship visit at the invitation of China's National People's Congress Standing Committee.

Meet With Peng Zhen

OW011104 Beijing XINHUA in English 1046 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 1 (XINHUA) -- Peng Zhen, chairman of the National People's Congress (NPC) Standing Committee, today described the economic reform as the key to China's development: "It is imperative to carry out the reform in order to build socialism with Chinese characteristics."

These remarks were made at a meeting with the visiting Moroccan parliament delegation headed by President Ahmed Osman in the Great Hall of the People.

Peng called the reform a revolution and a historical trend in China's socialist economic development. It enjoys support from the great majority of the Chinese people, he said. Without such a reform, he stressed, it is impossible for China to bring into full play the superiorities of its socialist system and speed up its socialist modernization As the reform is a hard and complicated task, Peng said, difficulties and problems in China's development can only be resolved in the spirit of seeking truth from facts. He said the party and the nation are confident they will solve these problems and keep the reform moving forward.

Briefing the guests on the on-going session of the National People's Congress, he said the draft for the Seventh Five-year Plan made by Premier Zhao Ziyang stressed the development of the economy, social development, and construction of a material and spiritual civilization. Opening to the outside world is part of the reform, he added.

Osman said Morocco is very concerned about China's on-going economic reform and open policy, believing China will overcome all difficulities and problems in its reform.

Speaking of bilateral relations, Peng said China and Morocco are friendly countries which have no conflict of interests but share desires in safeguarding world peace, developing their economies and improving the living standards of their peoples. Peng said the two countries should meet each other's needs and learn from each other's strong points so as to further their cooperation in all fields.

Osman agreed that the two countries have identical views on bilateral relations and issues of international importance. Morocco hopes to expand its exchange with China and economic cooperation in particular.

Peng was assisted at the meeting by Zhou Gucheng, Wang Hanbin and Song Chengzhi, vice-chairman, secretary-general and member of the NPC Standing Committee.

This morning Zhou Gucheng and Osman held talks. They briefed each other on their respective parliamentary work, the political and economic situation and the foreign policies of their countries.

On behalf of the NPC Standing Committee, Zhou invited Osman and his party to visit the NCP session tomorrow morning.

Talk With Yao Yilin

OW011152 Beijing XINHUA in English 1148 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 1 (XINHUA) -- Vice-Premier Yao Yilin met a delegation from the Moroccan chamber of representatives led by President Ahmed Osman, here today. Yao said China and Morocco are friendly countries, hoping that their friendly, cooperative relations will continue to expand.

Osman noted that the visit by his delegation is the continuation of the contacts between the two governments. His parliament supports any efforts and plan aimed to strengthen cooperation with China, he added. They also exchanged views on the prospects of bilateral economic cooperation and trade.

XI ZHONGXUN ADDRESSES CPC BANQUET FOR ANC GROUP

OW311632 Beijing XINHUA in English 1559 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 31 (XINHUA) -- A senior Communist Party of China (CPC) official reiterated China's support for the black people of South Africa in their struggle against racism, at a banquet welcoming a delegation from the African National Congress (ANC) of South Africa here today.

The delegation led by Alfred Nzo, general secretary of the ANC, arrived here today at the invitation of the CPC.

Speaking at the banquet, Xi Zhongxun, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee, said that the black people in South Africa, who have further awakened, are attacking South Africa's racist system forcefully despite violent suppression by the apartheid regime. He said that their struggle has won sympathy and support from the colored people of South Africa and quite a number of white people, and the international community as a whole. "This has bogged the South African racist regime down in an unprecedented dilemma," he added.

He said that China has always sympathized with and supported the struggle of the ANC against apartheid and racial discrimination, and for basic human rights and racial equality.

He condemned the atrocious apartheid policies of the South African authorities, their cruel suppression of the South African people, their invasion and harassment of neighboring countires, and their obstruction of the independence of Namibia. He expressed the belief that the visit by General Secretary Nzo will promote the mutual understanding, trust and friendship between the CPC and ANC.

In his reply, Nzo said that the racist regime of South Africa is now getting into an unprecedented crisis. He said that conditions are now becoming ripe for the victory of the South African people, with the growth of international solidarity movements supporting them.

Zhu Liang, head of the International Liaison Department of CPC Central Committee, was among those attending the banquet.

During its stay here, the delegation is expected to exchange views with CPC officials on the situation in southern Africa, as well as on other issues of common concern.

A solidarity rally is also planned to express the support of the CPC and the Chinese people for the South African people's struggle against racial discrimination and apartheid, and for racial equality and emancipation.

STATE COUNCIL REGULATIONS ON LATERAL ECONOMIC TIES

OW310818 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0750 GMT 23 Mar 86

[State Council Regulations Governing Several Questions on Further Promoting Lateral Economic Ties (promulgated on 23 March 1986]

[Text] Beijing, 23 Mar (XINHUA) -- Following the implementation of the policy of enlivening the domestic economy and opening to the outside world since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, regions and departments started to remove divisive barriers, and all types of lateral economic ties have been developing rapidly in production, distribution, science, and technology spheres. On the basis of delegating enterprises greater decision-making authority, various types of lateral economic ties have appeared between enterprises. This new development in our country's economic life has already demonstrated its great superiority and powerful vitality.

An important part of economic reform, lateral economic ties are essential for developing social productivity. They have enhanced the development of resources and the rational use of capital, promoted the circulation of commodities and the formation of a centralized socialist market, expedited technological development and the rational flow of personnel, and acclerated the rationalization of the economic structure and regional distribution. Lateral economic ties, which are an objective requirement for developing the socialist commodity economy, an inevitable course toward large-scale socialized production, and a powerful rebuff to the barriers between departments and regions, are of far-reaching significance in expediting the restructuring of the entire economic system as well as socialist modernization.

To further promote the healthy development of lateral economic ties, the following regulations are hereby prescribed for the relevant issues.

Principles and Objectives of Lateral Economic Ties

1. Associations between enterprises are the basic form of lateral economic ties and the focal point of development. On the basis of voluntary participation, and guided by the principles of "diversity, reciprocity, common growth, and making the best use of the advantages and bypassing the disadvantages," lateral economic ties between enterprises should not be restricted by regional, departmental, and professional differences, or by differences in ownership. Positive efforts should be made to promote ties between production of raw and semifinished materials and processing enterprises, between production enterprises and research units (including universities and colleges), between civilian and military enterprises, and between industrial, agricultural, commercial, and trading enterprises, as well as joint operations among railway, highway, shipping, and civil aviation enterprises. The ties in these areas may be cooperation between specialized departments or cooperation in terms of personnel, resources, capital, technical expertise, and procurement and marketing of commodities. By means of lateral economic ties between enterprises, a new type of economic association and a number of conglomerates or enterprise groups should be established.

2. Preferably, economic ties between enterprises should be organized in a way that large and medium-sized enterprises are the mainstay, and that quality brand-name goods should be the lead products. The ties can be closely, semiclosely, or loosely organized. They may take the form of joint venture, cooperative production, processing on order, or various alternatives. All types of economic ties should be based on contracts or agreements.

3. The development of economic ties should be centered around the following objectives and requirements: 1) They should be conducive to fully tapping enterprises' potentials so that they can increase the output of quality goods, achieve quick technological progress, and yield high economic returns with limited investment; 2) they should be conducive to expediting the rationalization of enterprises' organizational structure, production structure, and regional distribution; 3) they should be conducive to the formation and development of the commodity market, the money market and the technological market; 4) they should be conducive to removing regional and departmental barriers, separating responsibilities between government and enterprises, streamlining administration, delegating enterprises greater decision-making power, and separating ownership and the rights of operation.

4. Developing lateral economic ties is an important strategic managerial decision for enterprises. It is necessary to study the feasibility of forming lateral economic associations in light of the requirements of the country's macroeconomic development. It is necessary to pay attention to their economic and technological appropriateness. One must not rush headlong into action.

Safeguard Enterprises' Decision-making Power in Forming Lateral Economic Associations

5. It is necessary to safeguard the decision-making power of enterprises in forming lateral economic associations and to allow enterprises to form or withdraw from such associations on a voluntary basis. An association's structure and its management mode should be decided by the parties through consultation.

6. Relevant departments under the State Council and governments at all levels should further implement the State Council regulations governing the expansion of the enterprise's decision-making power, actively push and guide enterprises to develop all kinds of economic associations, especially those that cross the regional, departmental, and trade boundaries. They should not try to interfere in their own departmental interests. It is necessary to guard against the previous practice of using administrative measures to lump groups together that are economic associations only in name. It is necessary to seriously study the various malpractices in management that appear in economic association and some of the policies and regulations that hamper economic association. It is necessary to take active measures to stop the malpractices and readjust or reform policies and regulations.

7. A lateral economic association formed by enterprises is an enterprise in nature. It should not become an administrative body. Adding an administrative corporation on top of the economic association or changing the name of an existing administrative corporation and calling it economic association is not allowed. Administrative corporations are not allowed to interfere in the economic association of enterprises.

Improved Planned Management and Statistical Methods

8. In developing lateral economic ties, it is necessary to avoid acting blindly. It is necessary to encourage joint efforts in developing energy resources, increasing the production of raw and semifinished materials, and comprehensively using natural resources. It is necessary to encourage joint endeavors to develop communications and to increase the production of market goods in short supply. It is particularly necessary to encourage industry and agriculture to cooperate with commerce and increase the production of goods for export and import substitution, thereby creating and saving more foreign exchange for the state. At the same time, it is necessary to restrict the production of goods in excessive supply and the development of products that are technologically backward, qualitatively inferior, and which require large expenditures.

9. Developing lateral economic ties is an important path to controlling the scale of investment in fixed assets, improving the investment structure, and raising investment returns. There is no need to start a new project if a certain demand can be satisfied in quantity, quality, and variety through the establishment of lateral economic association. Priority should be given to cooperation projects undertaken by enterprises to carry out technological transformation through technology import or otherwise that will bring quick returns with minimum investment.

10. The state, departments, and regions should reserve a portion of the investment in fixed assets approved by the state for enterprises' use in developing energy resources, communications, and raw and semifinished materials in cooperation with each other. Capital construction and technological transformation projects jointly undertaken by enterprises should go through a review and approval process as required by the state. When enterprises or units invest their existing factory buildings, equipment, technology, patent rights, and trademarks in the economic association at market prices, the invested amount will not be counted toward the approved total investment.

11. Enterprises forming lateral economic associations must ensure the fulfillment of the state mandatory plans and strictly abide by their contracts. The responsible department or the regional authorities may assign mandatory production tasks to the economic association through member enterprises, using the existing channels of communication. They may also do so by informing the association directly. The quotas of materials to be distributed to the association under the unified distribution plan shall be relayed along with production or construction plans. Production or construction tasks and the distributed materials are trnasferrable within the association.

12. All economic and technical information regarding economic associations' production, construction, labor, materials, financial affairs, and costs are subject to computation by the state either as statistics of associations subjected to centralized accounting, or as statistics of basic-level enterprises authorized to conduct independent accounting. These economic associations should collect the statistics of their affiliated enterprises and report them to their responsible departments and local statistical departments to be used as statistics of "localities where these associations are located" or "localities to which these associations belong." Statistical departments should analyze the statistics of these economic associations' economic activities and should compile the relevant information at regular intervals.

Promote Lateral Circulation of Commodities

13. Departments in charge of materials management should promote lateral economic ties. All localities should gradually broaden and develop the market of production materials, and central cities should sponsor materials trade centers and encourage production, materials, commercial, and foreign trade enterprises to take part in their activities so as to promote cooperation in materials trade and enliven materials circulation. Units providing storage, transportation, and loading and unloading services should also strive to socialize their operation and operate like enterprises through carrying out lateral economic ties so as to improve their operation and achieve better economic returns.

14. Enterprises may market the additional products produced through carrying out lateral economic ties, with the exception of those specially prescribed by state regulations, as long as those products are not produced with state investment or raw and semifinished materials provided by the state according to plan. Materials departments should not reduce the enterprises' supply of energy and raw and semifinished materials on the basis that these enterprises have acquired additional goods and conserved energy and raw and semifinished materials through carrying out economic ties.

When the production of goods with high energy consumption has been relocated to energy-rich areas, energy supply for the original areas should not be reduced.

15. With regard to raw and semifinished materials subject to state distribution produced by enterprises of these economic associations for their own consumption, the responsible departments or the regions where these enterprises are located should reassess the supply of these materials. After the materials ordering departments have made overall arrangements, the materials may be directly allocated among the enterprises. In case the quantity of materials needed by economic corporation is huge, departments concerned should make overall planning and incorporate them into transport plan.

Sttengthen Integration of Production and Science and Technology

16. Effective measures should be adopted to promote close integration of production and science and technology, and association between production enterprises and research units. This association may be sponsored by research units with production enterprises as partners; it may also be sponsored by production enterprises with research units as partners. In both cases they should have active and positive support from the responsible departments.

17. To expand their capacity for technological development, economic associations may recruit research units as research organs to serve their technological development. These research units should also be permitted to serve other enterprises and units. As members of the associations, research units should continue to enjoy preferential tax treatment as independent research units, and their operations budgets will not be affected.

18. Active support should be given to production enterprises and research units in carrying out intermediate experiments. Responsible departments should make arrangements in their plans, and banks should draw up incentive credit measures. Those who have difficulty paying taxes may apply to departments for tax deductions or exemptions.

19. Technical achievements accomplished with economic associations' investment belong to the associations and will be enjoyed by their members. Achievements accomplished by individual members belong to them. Achievements accomplished through the mutual commission of partners belong to the investors and the technology developers. The distribution of benefits should be clearly set forth in contracts or agreements according terms governing financial and intellectual investment.

Promoting Lateral Circulation of Capital

20. In accordance with regulations governing the division of services and the opening of bank accounts, all specialized banks should accept the accounts of economic associations which have registered with industrial and commercial administrative departments.

21. Within the limits of investment in fixed assets and the limits of credit stipulated by the state, specialized banks may extend loans to economic associations of all trades and in all regions. Specialized banks of different trades an in different regions may also organize themselves into bank groups to provide credit services. The banks' decision-making authority in this regard should not be violated. Economic associations, or enterprises and units taking part in various forms of cooperation, may invest their bank loans for fixed asset investment on fixed assets among themselves. Economic associations may extend the circulating funds they have borrowed from banks in a collective manner.

Member enterprises of an association may borrow money individually and extend it, and the enterprise which borrows the money shall be responsible for repaying it. However, the money may not be invested in fixed assets or shared as profits.

22. All specialized banks and other banking organs may support economic association by means of various types of credits. The holder of a commercial bill signed by an economic association, after having been endorsed by a paying enterprise or a bank, may apply for a discount payment from any banking facility in any region.

23. In accordance with the relevant regulations of the People's Bank of China and after having been approved, an economic association may issue bonds to its staff members as well as people in society through banks and other banking facilities.

Readjusting Taxation Measures

24. Double taxation on the economic associations must be avoided. Goods exchanged between members of an economic association subject to centralized accounting and produced through cooperation among the members are tax-free. While goods marketed outside the association should be taxed, tax rates should be computed according to the percentage of the taxes various units paid prior to their cooperation in external sales. Except for such high tax products as cigarettes, wines, and cosmetics, value-added taxes may be collected from products produced by economic associations not subject to centralized accounting. Measures for collecting the value-added tax will be tentatively drawn up by departments concerned of taxation bureaus of various provinces, autonomous regions, municipalities directly under the central government, and selected cities, and reported to the General Taxation Bureau of the Ministry of Finance for the record. Taxes may be deducted or exempted for goods produced through cooperation, from which the value-added tax cannot be collected, according to the regulations of the General Taxation Bureau.

25. When an economic association repays, by installments, the capital and equipment of a client with products by means of compensatory trade, it should, upon handing over the products, pay a product tax (value-added tax) and a resource tax locally on the basis of the revenue from actual sales.

26. Economic associations and enterprises participating in all types of association should pay product tax (value-added tax) and business tax locally according to law. The partners of the association then, in accordance with the principle "distribution first, tax second," should distribute profits according to their agreement, and pay their income tax locally. State-owned enterprises need not pay a regulatory tax for their profits acquired from economic association, but they must continue to pay regulatory tax on their other profits.

27. Income taxes on profits earned by enterprises or units as a result of their investment in the energy and communications sectors and in the old revolutionary base areas, minority regions, border regions, and poverty-stricken areas may be reduced by half for 5 years. Income taxes may be exempted entirely if the investing enterprises or units reinvest the profits earned from their joint undertaking in the sectors or areas mentioned above. Product taxes on additional electricity generated by power plants (excluding diesel power plants) set up by enterprises or units with joint investment may be exempt for a given period. The product tax (value-added tax) on new products developed by economic associations may be reduced or exempted in accordance with the relevant tax regulations. The reduced or exempted amount of tax shall be used solely for technological development.

Income taxes on revenues received by enterprises from technology transfer may be exempted for the time being, provided that the revenues are less than 300,000 yuan for the whole year. Income taxes shall be paid on the portion of revenue exceeding 300,000 yuan in accordance with the law.

Safeguard the Legitimate Rights of Economic Associations

28. Economic associations shall register with the industry and commerce administration in accordance with the relevant regulations once they are approved by the authorized local government department. Economic associations must observe state law and the relevant policies and regulations. Their legitimate rights and interests, such as capital, interest, profit, products, and retained foreign exchange, shall be protected by state law.

29. The charter of an economic association is its fundamental code. It shall be drawn up by participating units and equally observed by them. The charter shall specifically stipulate the rights and obligations of each party, the distribution of benefits and the assumption of risks, the procedures for joining the association and for withdrawing from it, the formation of its leading body, and the terms of the leading personnel.

30. If a party to the association does not abide by the charter and does not carry out the contract or agreement accordingly, or if disputes arise in implementing the contract or agreement, the responsible local department shall help resolve the disputes if they involve administrative and managerial matters. If the responsible local department cannot resolve the disputes, they should be resolved by the relevant provincial departments if the parties are from the same province, or by the relevant departments of the State Council if the parties are from different provinces or sectors. The disputes may be arbitrated by the State Industry and Commerce Administration if they are related to an economic contract. They may also be brought to the court for legal action.

These regulations will take effect upon their promulgation. Provinces, autonomous regions, municipalities, and special economic districts may draw up specific implementation measures on the basis of these regulations.

PLANT DIRECTOR RESPONSIBILITY SYSTEM CONSIDERED

HK281315 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 17 Mar 86 p 5

[Article by Xiao Liang: "Implementing the Plant Director Responsibility System Is a Major Reform in the Leadership System of Enterprises"]

[Text] China's industrial and communications departments are now implementing the plant director responsibility system step by step under guidance. It may be appropriate to say something about the necessity of implementing the system at this time.

The Plant Director Responsibility System Was Formulated After Summing Up Our Past Experiences and Lessons

Since the founding of the PRC, many types of leadership systems have been practiced in China's enterprises. The earliest one was the system of plant administrative committee and the workers' representative assembly. Being the unified leading administrative organ in an enterprise, the administrative committee, with the plant director as its chairman, had to discuss and decide all major problems concerning the enterprise's production and management, and its decisions were promulgated and put into effect in the form of an order of the plant director (or manager).

Later, a "system of one-man leadership," or the plant director responsibility system, was adopted by the state-owned enterprises in some areas, under which the plant director was the supreme authority in charge of enterprise activities. He was responsible for the production and management of his enterprise. These two systems played a positive role in rehabilitating and developing our national economy and in our socialist construction. Of course, they also had some defects. However, after the "leftist" guiding ideology gained ground, the "system of one-man leadership" was inappropriately held to be negating the party leadership.

For this reason, since 1956, the system of responsibility of plant director under the leadership of the party committee has been widely adopted by enterprises throughout the country. Once in this period, a system of unified leadership of the revolutionary committee was also adopted. Since the system of responsibility of plant direct under the leadership of the party committee has been practiced for a long time, it has the greatest influence on cadres. This system also played a good role under specific conditions in the past. Now when we look back into that period, we find that we had no other choice at that time but to adopt this system.

However, through past practices, especially since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, as a result of mental emancipation, many comrades have gradually found that this system has the following defects: 1) as the party's political leadership is mixed with, and regarded as a part of, the administrative organ, it naturally leads to the phenomena of making no distinction between party leadership and enterprise administration and substituting the former for the latter; 2) although in name the plant director is responsible for routine work under the collective leadership of the party committee, in fact everything has to be decided by the secretary of the party committee personally. As a result, nobody is nor can possibly be, really responsible for the enterprise's administrative work, the decisions of the enterprise are usually made slowly, and efficiency is low; 3) as a result of the party monopoly for administrative affairs, the trend of the party not running party business is widely prevalent in enterprises, thus weakening the party's ideological and political work and party building. In the final analysis, these defects, which are difficult to avoid under the system of plant director responsibility under the leadership of the party committee, have made enterprises unable to suit the needs of modern production. Along with the smooth progress of economic structural reform in our country, it is also imperative to carry out a reform of this system.

In order to reform this leadership system, as early as in 1980, not long after the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, a central leading comrade proposed that the system of plant director responsibility under the leadership of the party committee be replaced by the plant director responsibility system placing the party committee in a position of guarantor and supervisor in the enterprise. However, under the influence of traditional habit, some comrades misconceived it as an attempt to weaken party leadership in the enterprises and found it difficult to accept. Thus, an interim measure was adopted a few years ago, combining "the collective leadership of the party committee, the democratic management of the workers, and the administrative command of the plant director" and separating the plant director's power in commanding production and management from the leadership of the party committee. Meanwhile, experiments have been made in an active manner to substitute the system of responsibility of the plant director under the leadership of the party committee with the plant director responsibility system (various experiments were also carried out on other systems, such as the system of plant director responsibility under the leadership of the plant management committee and the system of plant director responsibility under the leadership of the workers' representative assembly, in order to compare them).

Now, through the experiments and impelled by reform of the economic structure, more and more people have accepted the plant director responsibility system.

Even in those units where no experiments have been made, marked progress has also been achieved in separating party leadership and enterprise administration. People have already seen that in all those enterprises which have realized centralized and unified command in production and management and which have selected, through consolidation, entrepreneurs adept at blazing new trails as their plant directors and managers, labor discipline has been enhanced, management improved, and both the labor productivity and economic returns increased. It was under such circumstances that the "decision of the CPC Central Committee on reform of the economic structure," adopted by the 3d Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee, clearly proposed the implementation of the plant director responsibility system. This was not just necessary but imperative. It is appropriate to say that this system was formulated in light of China's current situation on the basis of summing up our experiences and lessons in many past years and after long-term deliberations and consultations. Therefore, the implementation of this system will certainly become an important content in reform of the entire economic structure in the cities and an important link in reinforcing the vitality of enterprises.

The Plant Director Responsibility System Conforms to the Needs of Modern Production

The purpose of replacing the system of plant director responsibility under the leadership of the party committee with the plant director responsibility system is to overcome the defects of the original leadership systems, enhance the centralized and unified leadership power of the plant director, enhance the sense of organization and discipline in the enterprises, and raise labor efficiency, so as to suit the needs of modern production and the development of the socialist commodity economy. Just as the "decision" points out: "Modern enterprises have a minute division of labor, a high degree of continuity in production, strict technological requirements, and complex relations of cooperation. It is therefore necessary to establish a unified, authoritative and highly efficient system to direct production and conduct operations and management. This calls for a system with the plant director (or manager) assuming full responsibility. "But for a long time we did not have a clear understanding of this. This perhaps has something to do with the fact that China was originally a country in which small producers occupied a dominant position and that many comrades have scant knowledge of modern production. Therefore, while implementing the plant director responsibility system, we must tell our cadres and workers: In order to raise labor efficiency and ensure the unified command in production and operation, it Is necessary to implement this system.

Judging from the situation in many experimental units, the plant director responsibility system has many advantages: 1) It can help harmonize relations between the party committee, the plant director in charge of administrative affairs, the workers' representative assembly, and the trade union within the enterprise and draw a clear line of demarcation between their obligations and power so that they can better discharge the obligations of their specific posts and do a better job in various fields. 2) As unified leadership over production, operation, and management has been realized, with the plant director assuming full responsibility, and the responsibility system has been implemented in the leading body, production has been directed in a more flexible way and decisions have been made more quickly, resulting in the increase of both work efficiency and economic returns. 3) The CPC committees of the enterprises, which have been freed from merely grasping routine work, are able to concentrate their strength on implementing the party's line, policies, and principles, and on strengthening party building and ideological and political work. 4) By practicing the plant director responsibility system and reorganizing leading bodies at various levels, conditions have been created for further streamlining the administrative structure, using talented people capable of blazing new trails, and training a contingent of new-type enterprise administrative cadres.

All this has helped improve the quality of enterprises and enhanced their vitality. Judging from a long-term point of view, the practice of the plant director's responsibility system is of far-reaching significance in quickening the pace of reform in enterprises and blazing a new trail to establish a system of Chinese-style socialist enterprise administration.

Efforts Should Be Made To Do a Good Job in Ideological and Political Work and To Strenghten Democratic Management While Adopting the Plant Director Responsibility System

The purpose of adopting the plant director responsibility system is to enable the plant director to exercise unified control over enterprise production and management. It is aimed at improving, rather than weakening, party leadership. In the enterprises, party leadership is not expressed by issuing orders to the masses or directly guiding administrative work at various levels throgh party organizations, but by using the exemplary role of the party members to influence and educate the masses. The main task for the party organizations in enterprises is to ensure and supervise the implementation of various policies and principles of the party and the state, to strengthen the party ideologically and organizationally in the enterprises, and to carry out ideological and political work among staff and workers. Comrade Deng Xiaoping has made many remarks on this question. He said: "The CPC committee of a factory should ensure the fulfillment of production plans in terms of quantity, quality, and costs of its products; ensure the adoption of advanced technology and administrative methods and the management in a democratic way; ensure that all administrative personnel have the power to work efficiently and with good discipline; ensure that all staff and workers enjoy democratic rights and reasonable conditions for their work, life, and study; and ensure that all outstanding and competent people, either party members or non-party members, will be trained, selected, and promoted and that their roles be brought into full play. If all this is ensured, party leadership is efficient and competent." ("Selected Works of Deng Xiaoping," p 235) Thus, to give play to the role of guarantee and supervision is a way to strengthen and improve party leadership, and to take over everything, to substitute party leadership for enterprise administration, and to mix up the two are actually acts to weaken party leadership in the enterprises.

While implementing the plant director responsibility system, it is also necessary to perfect the system of the workers' representative assembly and the system of democratic management in the enterprises. Of course, in implementing the plant director responsibility system, it is necessary to enhance the prestige of the plant director and give full play to his role. However, the plant director must also pay attention to relying on the party and the masses in his work and conscientiously accept the latter's supervision. On major problems concerning the operation and management of the enterprise, the plant director has the duty to report to the party organization and the workers' representative assembly and listen to their opinions. Under the socialist system, the masses of workers are the masters of the country and the enterprises. This should also be reflected by the leadership system of our enterprises, that is, by the system of the workers' representative assembly and the system of democratic management. The workers' representative assembly is an organization for the workers to exercise their right in democratic management. Strengthening democratic management does not contradict the plant director responsibility system. On the contrary, they supplement each other. In many enterprises where the plant director responsibility system has been adopted, in order to strengthen democratic management, a method of combining the workers' representative assembly with certain trade union organizations has been tried, according to which some trade union organizations have taken charge of the routine work of the workers' representative assembly. Thus, a system of democratic management, with the workers' representative assembly as the basic form and the trade union organization as the main body, and with responsibility combined with authority, has been established in these enterprises. This method should be affirmed.

The Plant Director Responsibility System Should Be Gradually Perfected in Practice

Every system needs to be further perfected after it is established, and the plant director responsibility system is no exception. This is because it has only been a short while since we began to adopt this system; there will certainly be some problems which need to be resolved through our practice, and because the plant director responsibility system is only a basic system of the entire leadership system, which needs to be supplemented and coordinated by a series of other systems. All these systems have yet to be gradually established and perfected in our practice. Particularly, since China is a large country, and the situation of various enterprises varies in thousands of ways, the problems the have encountered in implementing the plant director responsibility system will also vary from place to place. Thus, it is necessary to proceed from reality. According to the experiences of some enterprises both at home and abroad, since modern production is very complicated and the market situation is intricate and volatile, a plant director or a manager, however capable he may be, is unable to know everything and be an expert in every field.

Thus, it is very necessary to establish an advisory or consultative organization, such as a brain trust, as it is often called, after the plant director or manager becomes the policymaker and director in production, operation, and administration, to ensure correct policy decisions and to combine the personal ideas of the factory leader with collective wisdom. Organizations set up for this purpose may be different from enterprise to enterprise, and there are also a series of problems to study how to establish such organizations. Moreover, after adopting the plant director responsibility system, other problems, such as the necessity to set a tenure of office for the plant director, to establish a system of rewards and punishments, and so forth, also need to be further discussed and solved. The purpose of studying these problems is to further perfect the plant director responsibility system and give fuller play to its role, rather than taking the road back. On the question of leadership system of the enterprises, to persist in the reform means to firmly carry out the plant director responsibility system.

TRADE UNION PARTICIPATION IN GOVERNMENT EXPLORED

HK300830 Beijing GONGREN RIBAO in Chinese 27 Feb 86 p 4

[Article by Tong Chengmin: "A Discussion on Questions Concerning Urban Trade Unions Participating In and Discussing Government Administration"]

[Text] The restructuring of the whole national economy with an urban focus is being conducted on a wide scale. This has not only set new demands, but also given an unprecedentedly good opportunity to the workers movement and trade unions. Here I would like to discuss my views on the questions concerning urban trade unions participating in and discussing government administration.

1. Why Should Trade Unions Participate In and Discuss Government Administration?

First, from the viewpoint of the theory concerning trade unions, the practice of trade unions participating in the discussing government administration is an important component of Marxist trade union theory. A hundred years or more ago, when dealing with the future nature, role, and functions of the trade unions at the early stage of the workers movement, Marx said: "Trade unions, no matter what their objective at the most preliminary stage was, must now learn to willingly carry out their activities as the center of the working class organization and regard the thorough emancipation of the working class as their own great mission. They must support all social and political movements in this connection."

They must "demonstrate in concrete deeds that they represent the working class as a whole and fight for its interests." In other words, as the representative of the working class, trade unions must participate in all social and political activities so that they can bring the role of the working class into better play and safeguard its interests.

Following the victories of the October revolution, in his article entitled "The Role and Function of Trade Unions," Lenin pointed out: The relationship betwen trade unions and the government of the proletarian state is that all the Soviet government's "political and economic activities are guided by the class-conscious vanguard of the working class -- the Communist Party. Trade unions must collaborate closely and constantly with the government." Lenin also formulated four tasks for the trade unions' role in government activities: trade unions should help staff business and administrative bodies connected with economics and nominate candidates for them; they should promote and train factory managers from among the workers and the masses of the working class in general; they should take a far greater part in the activities of all planning bodies of the state and in drawing up economic plans and programs for production and expenditures of stocks of material supplies for the workers; and they should draw up the wage and supply scales. Lenin maintained that the trade unions must "also, on an increasing scale, enlist the working class and the masses of the working people in general for all branches of the work of building up the state economy through these activities" and "give the workers and all working people practical training in the art of managing the economy of the whole country." This is "the key to the development of the national economy and the consolidation of the Soviet government bodies."

The CPC has persistently attached importance to the status of trade unions in the state's political life. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the party Central Committee has stressed that trade unions should participate in managing government and social affairs, urging trade unions at various levels to give powerful backing to and collaborate closely with the administrative departments of the party, the government, and the enterprises and to play a greater part in carrying out the socialist modernization program.

Judging from the nature of our country, the practice of trade unions participating in and discussing government administration is determined by the status of the working class and the role trade unions play in the political system of the proletariat. In our country, the working class is the representative of the advanced productive forces and advanced relations of production, the leading class of the state, and the main force for the modernization program. Trade unions are the prominent representative of the working class and serve as a bridge between the party and the masses of workers. The practice of trade unions participating in and discussing government administration will enable the party to promptly hear the voices of the masses of the workers and to maintain regular and close ties with the working class, helping to combine the top-to-bottom administration of the government with the bottom-to-top participation of the vast numbers of staff members and workers in government administration. The practice of the communist movement has proven that to complete its own historical mission, the working class must adhere to the proletarian dictatorship (called the people's democratic dictatorship in China), which is the comprehensive political system of a socialist state, a system composed of the party of working class, the government under its leadership, and such mass organizations as trade unions. Under the system, the trade unions, which play a very important role, are the pillar of the state government.

In terms of the needs of the development of the situation, the practice of trade unions participating in and discussing government administration is also the objective demand of the urban economic structural reform.

A modern city is not only an important industrial production base, but also the hub of commodity interflow and the commercial, trade, information, financial, scientific, technological, cultural, educational, and political center of a certain region. The aim of urban economic structural reform is to reform links and aspects of the relations of production and of the superstructure, which are incongruous with the development of productive forces, and to bring the role of key cities into full play. Who should we rely on in accomplishing such an extensive and profound change? We should rely without question on the working class. How to conduct economic restructuring in a city depends on the enthusiasm and initiative of the masses of staff members and workers to a great extent. Representing the aspirations and demands of the masses of staff and workers, the federation of trade unions in a city participates in discussing the city's work of overall importance and in the state's political, economic, and social life. This will help turn party principles and policies into willing action by the masses of staff members and workers and proceed to ensure the smooth execution of reform. In particular, urban economic structural reform will surely involve the urban economic and social development plan, the reform of the price, wage, and enterprise leadership systems, and the revision and enactment of related principles, policies, laws, and regulations. The practice of trade unions participating in and discussing government administration will enable trade unions to safeguard the long-term and immediate interests of the working class and to protect their legitimate rights and interests.

II. Aspects on Which the Federation of Trade Unions in a City Should Focus in Participating In and Discussing Government Administration

The practice of urban trade unions participating in and discussing government administration covers a wide range. In my opinion, this is mainly as follows:

First, trade unions should participate in the discussion of major problems facing the state and social life and make proposals for the national economic plan and social development of cities and the development plans for the local economy, construction of cultural and public facilities, enterprises, and institutions. Government departments concerned should maintain regular ties with trade unions and keep the urban federation of trade unions or industrial trade unions informed of the latest developments, and they should create conditions for trade unions to participate in such activites. In the meantime, the federation of trade unions should energetically organize staff members and workers of the whole city to carry out various effective mass production activities under the economic contract responsibility system so as to ensure the completion of the national economic plan and various social development plans. To make things easier for trade unions to participate in and discuss government administration, it is good to use the experiences of some socialist countries in Eastern Europe for reference to initiate a system under which trade unions and the government may hold joint meetings.

Second, trade unions should participate in the whole process of the government departments enacting related local laws and regulations. They should, in particular, take a direct part in the drafting of laws, decrees, and regulations which have a bearing on the immediate interests of staff members and workers. The trade unions should participate in the study, drafting, and implementation of all major and specific principles concerning urban and enterprise economic reforms. Trade union cadres should be included in the commissions (offices) for restructuring the urban economic system both as leaders and working personnel so that they can more directly make proposals for urban economic structural reform. Meticulous guidance should be given to grass-roots trade unions so that they can participate in, through the staff and workers congress, making major policy decisions for the enterprises.

This should include matters ranging from the production, operation, and development plan, the plan for technological transformation and technological progress, the distribution of income from labor, such as wages and bonuses, and welfare services.

Third, trade unions should supervise the implementation of the regulations, contracts, and agreements which concern the interests of working people. Government departments concerned and enterprises have a responsibility to help trade unions in this respect. Trade unions are entitled to directly ask enterprises to brief them on related developments and to investigate and affix the responsibility for those concerned if necessary. If enterprise leaders fail to correct their mistakes promptly, trade unions are entitled to ask the departments concerned at the higher level to take relevant steps against them or to appeal to judicial departments. The trade unions must be particularly empowered to supervise the matters of enterprises such as safety production, labor protection, wage rewards, and labor insurance. When violations of work regulations occur which seriously endanger the health of staff members and workers of their safety, trade unions have the right to organize staff members and workers to quit or not to work in dangerous production posts. Without the trade unions' approval, the already checked new, reconstruction, expansion, or technological transformation projects of enterprises should not be put into production.

Fourth, trade unions should safeguard the status and legitimate rights and interests of staff members and workers as the masters of the country. They should accept and hear the appeals of masses of staff members and workers and participate in the investigation and handling as well as arbitration of labor disputes by hiring legal consultants. They should promptly reflect the views and demands of the masses of staff members and workers through lecturing on special topics and distributing information bulletins, and they should conscientiously correct the erroneous practices of encroaching on staff members' and workers' interests on the basis of investigations and studies. The departments concerned should seriously answer and handle proposals or suggestions raised by the trade unions in this regard. Trade unions in citics should have a considerable say in matters concerning staff members and workers, such as wage rewards, labor protection, labor insurance, safety production, and punishment of workers.

UNIONS ENCOURAGED TO ENHANCE, PROMOTE POLICY

[Article by Xiao Tuo: "Inherent Attributes of Trade Unions and Their Participation in and Discussion of Government Administration"]

[Text] Under socialist conditions, why should a trade union participate in and discuss government administration? This is, in the final analysis, determined by a trade union's inherent attributes. Only by fully defining a trade union's inherent attributes can we strengthen its consciousness, activism, and initiate in government administration and relevant discussions.

A trade union is a class organization and a mass organization of the working class, a mass organization of workers willingly joining together, and a mass organization of the working class. This scientific summation points not only to a trade union's class nature but also to its mass character. This carries great theoretical and realistic significance in giving full play to a trade union's positive role in state and social life. But this is not the end of our understanding of a trade union. Only by revealing the inherent attributes of a trade union as the sociopolitical organization of the working class an our understanding of it be complete. And only in this way can we further uncover underlying social factors behind the need for trade union involvement in government administration and relevant discussions and a proper theoretical basis.

Trade unions are products of class struggle and the workers' movement under capitalist conditions. Especially since the integration of Marxism and the workers' movement, under the guidance of Marxism and the leadership of the political party of the relevant class, trade unions, "with the thorough emancipation of the working class as their own great task," have further strengthened the unity of the working class, raised its consciousness, and started and organized and well-led struggle to seize state power, overthrow the capitalist system and bring socialism into being. As mass organizations of the working class, trade unions have thus fully demonstrated the inherent attributes of sociopolitical organizations.

With the working class seizure of state power, the trade unions' position, role, and tasks have of course undergone fundamental changes. But as the class organization and mass organization of the working class, the trade union still retains the inherent attributes of a sociopolitical organization. Lenin pointed out: "As the most wide-ranging proletarian organization in the world of classes, it is exactly now and especially after the proletarian seizure of state power through political revolution that trade unions should produce a particularly great effect, should occupy a most important position politically, and should become political organs with a certain degree of imporrance." Here Lenin treated the trade union as a mass organization and sociopolitical organization "with a very special role" in the system of proletarian dictatorship.

Trade unions in China were born in semicolonial and semifeudal old China. Their birth and development have always beem linked to the process of our national democratic revolution. Since they first appeared on the stage of political history, China's trade unions, as an independent political force, have always consciously accepted the leadership of the vanguard of the relevant class -- the CPC. Under the leadership of the CPC, China's trade unions organized and educated the working class, waged an arduous and remarkable protracted struggle against imperialism, feudalism, and bureaucratic capitalism, and made major contributions in the struggle to establish New China. In the period of socialist revolution and construction, China's trade unions played an increasingly important role in domestic and international affairs as the most important mass and sociopolitical organizations in the state's political system. In the period of socialist modernization and economic reform, China's trade unions are not only builders of material civilization but also of spiritual civilization. They take an active part in the management of state and social affairs and in the democratic management of enterprises and institutions. They play a positive role in various aspects of the state's political, economic, cultural, and social life.

Our party has always attached importance to and supported trade union participation in government administration and relevant discussions. Not long ago, the CPC Central Committee Secretariat and the State Council further created the necessary conditions for the State Council further created the necessary conditions for the trade union organizations to play a still better role in the state's political and social life and in economic reforms. In line with the request of the party group of the All-China federation of Trade Unions, the following was agreed: 1) If there is anything concerning the personal interests of workers in the study and formulation of plans on the state's economic and social development and important guidelines or general and specific policies by the CPC Central Committee, the State Council, and relevant ministries and commissions, notice will be sent to the All-China Federation of Trade Unions about participation in the necessary meetings or relevant work; 2) trade unions will be encouraged to participate in leadership organs responsible for various major reforms involving the workers' interests; 3) various industrial departments and localities should also refer to the above-mentioned principles and encourage industry-related trade unions and local trade unions to particpate in relevant work and activities. In line with the above spirit, urban trade union councils and industry-related trade unions must actively participate in urban reform, concentrating especially on leadership organs responsible for various major reforms involving workers' interests and their relevant activites.

Through various channels, such as the people's congress, the CPPCC, and so forth, they must constantly reflect the workers' wishes and demands. In examining or discussing plans, programs, policies, and laws and regulations, they must propose views and suggestions. This fully shows that the CPC Central Committee recognizes the trade unions' important role in the state's political, economic, cultural, and social life and shows keen support for continuously increasing their capacity to participate in government administration and relevant discussions. This important measure from the CPC Central Committee Secretariat and the State Council shows that, in the scope and role of our trade union participation in government administration and relevant discussions, a new trend of high-level development marked with cooperation from top to bottom and systematic exploration -- a trend from involvement in taking good care of the lower levels and stimulating enterprises to involvement in research and in urban reform and construction as a whole -- has begun.

Simultaneous with a continuous effort to strengthen basic-level democratic management, trade unions are strengthening research at the top and are actively participating in government administration and relevant discussions where the highest decisions on matters of policy are concerned. Thus, they can better strengthen basic guidance, pave the way for basic involvement in stimulating things, and play a still greater role in urban construction and urban economic reform as a whole and even in the life of the whole state and of society. They can also better represent and support the democratic rights and material interests of the masses of workers and more effectively speak and act for the workers, thus further cementing ties between the party and the government on one hand and the masses of workers on the other, giving fuller play to the role of the trade union as a link, as a pillar of society, and as a communist control school. In this way, the inherent attributes of our country's trade unions as the sociopolitical organization of the working class will have added glamor and benefit from further enrichment and development. The working class position in the state's political, economic, cultural, and social life will be further elevated. The spirit of the working class as the master of the state will also definitely be increasingly enhanced.

Trade unions as mass sociopolitical organizations of the working class can thereby more consciously and fully exercise their special social functions on the extremely wide-ranging sociopolitical stage of our country's socialist modernization and urban economic reform.

DIRECTION OF MARXIST THEORETICAL STUDIES SEEN

HK310417 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 21 Mar 86 p 5

[Article by Liu Yiyun: "Thoughts Related to Theoretical Studies"]

[Text] I

Some comrades made an investigation and said that quite a few people were not interested in theory and show no concern about politics. I do not agree with this view. I think that through the study of the four basic principles and the historical experience gained since the founding of the PRC, the discussion on negating the "Great Cultural Revolution," the discussion and practice of the rural production responsibility system; and the current economic structural reform, the vast number of cadres' and people's understanding of Marxist theory and thoughts has been greatly, rather than generally, improved, compared with the past.

In particular, in the process of bringing order out of chaos and at the turning point of the new situation, new task, and new historical period, new things are emerging in turn.

People always hove lots of ideas about these new things. Some of them doubt, make speculative forecasts, worry about, favor, or oppose these new things. They talked about these new things everywhere. I think that this is a good phenomenon. However, some of our comrades think that this situation shows that people's minds are confused and that wrong, or at least what they call muddled, ideas have surfaced in people's minds. They only see the negative side and the surface trends of people's thoughts, but what they see is not the essence of people's thoughts. Deeper, under the so-called muddled ides, there lies the people's concern about politics and their demand for clearly reasoned theoretical answers to these questions. Are we, therefore, not justified in saying that the masses have an urgent interest in politics and theory? If you judge the people's interest in theory by the number of workers and peasants who urgently want to read the works of Marx and Lenin and textbooks on Marxist-Leninism, you will, perhaps, never realize the tremendous interest of the masses in theory. We should understand that when people are all talking about something, it provides a very good chance for us to carry out education in Marxist theory among our cadres and people, continually improving their understanding of Marxism through practice. Such chances often emerge, but we often fail to seize them. I want to ask, with indignation, of those who believe that the masses of people are not interested in theory: Does this show that people are not interested in theory and have no concern about politics, or that some of our cadres, in particular those in charge of leadership or propaganda work, do not know what it means to be interested in theory and to have concern about politics, and do not know by what means we can foster and heighten the whole nation and all our people's interest in theory?

II

Currently, we are studying reform in Marxist theoretical courses taught in our universities and colleges. This is very important and good. I have not studied this issue. However, I have reviewed the process whereby people of my generation (those who became cadres during the war of resistance against Japan) became followers of Marxism. We can learn something from this historical experience.

When we were young, out interest in and good impression of Marxism was not taught by the CPC. At that time, we had not met any party members and knew only very little about the party via reactionary propaganda in newspapers and magazines. It was in the first place the KMT who "trained" us to have contact with and choose Marxism. We studied for more than 10 years in schools under KMT rule and almost everyday, the counterfeit three principles of the people, idealism, and the political ideas that combine these theories with practice, such as the idea that "civil disorder must first be overcome before foreign aggression is resisted" were forced upon us. Compared with the situation at that time, when we were faced with the choice between resisting Japan and fighting for the survival of our country or becoming slaves without a country, these theories of counterfeit three principles of the people and idealism roused increasingly greater doubt, disgust and even indignation. THerefore, we wondered whether there was any other theory that could satisfy our demands for resisting Japan and national salvation. So we ran around on Sundays to look for what we wanted in second-hand bookstalls and libraries, among dust-covered and moth-eaten books. To our surprise, we found some. Later, books and magazines such as Ai Siqi's "Dazhong Zhexue" ["Popular Philosophy"] became available. We read these books stealthily in our classrooms or in our beds at home with great interest. Though we read some of them with little understanding, we finally found some light before our eyes and could not help but exclaim: "So, truth is in these old books." We then took the risk of recommending these books to our intimate classmates.

"Do not worry about now knowing much about the goods; just compare and you will see which is better." It was through our own brains, over a fairly long period of comparison and consideration, and through our own choice, that we became familiar with Marxism.

Because it was a choice made after conscientious and serious consideration, we had amazing courage at the very beginning. We did not fear being scolded or expelled from our schools, and we even formed groups to argue with the groups formed by our schoolmates who believed in the counterfeit three principles of the people. Later, we simply left our homes and mothers and went far away to Yanan where we could study Marxism publicly and where we devoted ourselves to the revolution. I always think that it will not do if we merely rely on forcing Marxism down our students' throats to make them choose Marxism. We should have confidence in the force of Marxist theory as a truth, and believe that it is the trend of the times and the desire of the people that at present we should regard the four modernizations as a general task related to the whole situation, make our country prosperous and our people rich, and strive for world peace. In order to achieve these goals, we can only rely on the application of basic Marxist principles; no other principles can help us. My opinion is that we should let the students face the world and brave the storm in studying theory. Only by applying the dialectical methods of Marxism can we learn Marxism satisfactorily. In addition to making the students particularly study books about Marxism, we should also encourage them to read representative books that are not Marxist and that oppose Marxism, and guide students into considering and comparing them on their own. As long as they are patriotic and as long as they pursue truth, I am confident that most of them will choose Marxism and quite a few of them will become firm Marxists.

III

A man always has many interests and interest in theory is a kind of high-class interest. It is an interest to probe into the laws that govern the development of man, nature and society. No matter what kind of work one is engaged in, as long as one has this kind of high-class interest, one will certainly be conscious in studying Marxist theory. We, the Communist Party, rely on the principle of integrating theory with practice in developing our undertakings. If we satisfactorily integrate theory with practice, we will win great victories, but if we do not, we will commit serious mistakes and suffer great losses. This is an important historical experience and lesson that we all bitterly remember. Therefore, it is particularly important for our party committees at all levels, in particular, those at and above provincial and municipal level, to be interested in theory. Some party committees at and above provincial and municipal levels seldom put discussion of theoretical issues on their agenda and even less seldom take the initiative in discussing these issues. As they seldom discuss the issues, they fail to make sufficient theoretical and mental preparations and rely only on "books" and "instructions from upper levels." If they cannot find an answer in their "books," they can rely on "instructions from upper levels." When the central authorities say something, they become nervous and are at a loss what to do because they are not prepared. We should consciously maintain political identity with the CPC Central Committee and correctly implement its line, principles and policies. It is not easy to do so if our cadres, in particular the leading cadres at various levels, fail to have the necessary level of understanding of Marxist theory. I hope that by mentioning these problems, I will urge the leading comrades of our provincial and municipal CPC committees to think deeply, and thus improve and intensify the party's leadership over the work of studying and publicizing Marxist theory.

MARXIST WRITER AI SIQI, WORKS REMEMBERED

HK310138 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 21 Mar 86 p 5

[Article by Wang Huide and Jia Chunfeng: "Commemorating the 50th Anniversary of the Publication of 'Dazhong Zhuxue' [Popular Philosophy]"]

[Text] The year 1986 marks the 20th anniversary of the death of Comrade Ai Siqi, China's well-known Marxist philosopher.

It is also the 50th anniversary of the publication of his book "Dazhong Zhexue," which has attracted numerous readers and tugged at the heartstrings of thousands upon thousands of young readers throughout the years.

Comrade Ai Siqi was only 56 when he died. In pursuit of truth, he had fought unremittingly to spread Marxism since his youth, and dedicated his whole life to the theoretical study of Marxism, theoretical propaganda, and theoretical education. Ai was a loyal communist fighter who worked diligently all his life in the direction indicated by the party and who scored outstanding accomplishments in ideological and theoretical fields.

The journal DUSHU [STUDY], a Shanghai publication, carried "Zhexue Jianghua" [Talks on Philosophy] written by Comrade Ai Siqi between November 1934 and October 1935. When the talks were first printed in book form in 1936, the title was changed to "Dazhong Zhexue." Since then, the book has been closely linked with Ai Siqi and spread all over China. This is how the author came to be called "philosopher of the masses." "Dazhong Zhexue" had 32 reprints between 1936 and 1948. It was a rare accomplishment in China's philosophy circles to have so many reprints of a single book by a philosopher in a short span of a little more than a decade. In this book, the author linked the daily life of the people with the basic tenets of dialectical materialism, explaining the profound in simple terms. The author was not satisfied with the accomplishments of the first edition of the book. He revised it on several occasions with the development of practice and his own understanding. The last revision was in 1950. The book available today in Xinhua Bookstore, published by the Joint Publishing Company in 1978, was typeset according to the last revised manuscript. When "Dazhong Zhexue" first appeared, it exerted a profound influence on young people and the intellectual circles. In their spiritual famine, many young people obtained their long-awaited spiritual bread with this book and saw the light of hope in their spiritual depression. Many young students and intellectuals became interested in Marxist theory because of this book and eventually dedicated themselves to the revolution. Some young people devoured this book when they were thrown into the enemy's prison. Others carried it in their fieldpacks on their way to Yanan and other revolutionary base areas.

The fate of philosophy and theory is always determined by the extent to which they satisfy the needs of the times, social practice, and the peopele. It was not by chance that "Dazhong Zhexue" became a best-seller among young people and the intellectual cricles at the critical juncture of our national crisis on the eve of the outbreak of the war of resistance against Japan as well as during the years of the war of resistance against Japan and the war of liberation. Comrade Ai Siqi said that the objective reasons for this book to have become a bestseller on the eve of the war of resistance against Japan were: 1) the political line for the party's united front at that time was correct; 2) the victories of the Long March and the northern expedition in resistance against Japan; and 3) the theoretical and practical needs of educated young people in the national salvation movement. It was precisely for the above reasons that people's interest in the new philosophy (Marxist philosophy) was stimulated. In addition, he said that without a revolutionary situation in the movement of resistance against Japan and national salvation, there would not have been so many young readers who were in urgent need of revolutionary theory. True, the success of "Dazhong Zhexue" is precisely owed to the efforts of the author. It was the explanation and discussion of Marxist theory in simple terms that met the needs of practice in struggle and the needs of the readers and the intellectual circles, particularly a young generation in the movement of resistance against Japan and the national salvation, and their pursuit of emancipation and truth. Just as Comrade Mao Zedong puts it, "Dazhong Zhexue" is a book "written in simple terms, but it is valuable."

It is no easy job to communicate with a generation of young people about Marxist philosophy, allowing theory to exert an influence over them and urging them to forge ahead courageously.

In Li Gongpu's preface written for the book before the war of resistance against Japan, he said: "Philosophy exists in people's lives, and everyone has his own philosophy. There is really nothing mysterious about this. But many philosophers have dealt with philosophy in sophisticated language, which confuses ordinary people, who think philosophy too difficult to grasp and beyond them. Such an erroneous concept has actually been caused by those who talked about philosophy in the past." He believed that Ai's book on philosophy was one to be grasped by laymen, not kept in the expert's private study. Then he went on to express his doubt that "popular philosophical works might lead to vulgarism," and Ai's book has provided supporting evidence. Writing correct theory in simple terms will by no means lead to vulgarism so long as the theory is not distorted and correct. Ai's work has served well as evidence to prove this point. Self-styled highbrows may disdain the book, but if philosophy is to be accepted by the masses, it has to be written in their terms. Li Gongpu's suggestion that philosophical works be written in simple terms while refraining from vulgarism is reasonable. It requires great effort to make philosophical theory popular. Just as Comrade Ai Siqi wrote in "How I Wrote 'Dazhong Zhexue,'" a popular work should be written specifically and easily, linked closely to the realities of life. This demands our grasping the sentiments of the masses, understanding the logical way of life in its development, and starting from the experiences of the people in their life, in order to get the truth to the masses and affect them in a form they will accept.

In the half century since the publication of "Dazhong Zhexue," earthshaking changes have taken place in China. Marxist philosophy has been widely spread, popularized, greatly enriched, and developed. With the advance in the practice of revolution and contruction, Comrade Ai Siqi made unremitting efforts to propagating and explaining such important philosophical works as "On Practice," and "On Contradictions" by Comrade Mao Zedong, and in pushing forward research and education in Marxist philosophy.

Any genuine philosophy is the quintessence of the spirit of the times. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, China has entered a new stage of historical development with socialist modernization as its center. It was at this session that Comrade Deng Xiaoping evaluated the discussion of the criterion for testing truth. He said: "In fact, the current debate about whether practice is the sole criterion for testing truth is also a debate about whether people's minds need to be emancipated. Everybody recognizes that this debate is about what is important and necessary. The importance of the issue is becoming clearer all the time. When everything has to be done by the book, when thinking turns rigid and blind faith is the fashion, it is impossible for a party or a nation to make progress. Its life will cease and that party or nation will perish. Comrade Mao Zedong said this time and again during the rectification movements. Only if we emancipate our minds, seek truth from facts, proceed from reality in everything, and integrate theory with practice can we carry out our socialist modernization program smoothly, and only then can our party further develop Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought. In this sense, the debate about the criterion for testing truth is really a debate about ideological line and about the future and the destiny of our party and nation."

Comrade Deng Xiaoping dealt with the discussion of the criterion for testing truth from the realistic practice and the future and fate of the party and the nation, which was a very incisive and enlightened view. Now we have come to see more clearly that the profound and widespread social influence of the discussion has really demonstrated the historical demand for bringing order out of chaos since the fall of the "gang of four," and people's strong aspirations for breaking the bonds of dogmatism and the personality cult, as well as the basic trends of correcting the "leftist" error of taking class struggle as the key link and realizing historical change.

At present reforms and the four modernizations have advanced a series of topics for the study and propaganda of Marxist philosophy. Philosophy, in turn, needs to absorb ideological nutrients from such vigorous socialist practice with originality and be enriched and developed. Regarding philosphy and theory both specialized academic works and popular philosophical readers are needed. The social function of philosophy lies in providing people with a scientific world outlook and methodology to improve people's capability in theoretical thought, so that people may obtain a scientific means of understanding the numerous and complicated social phenomena and the practical activities of creating a new life. Popular philosophy readers should bring into play such a function more effectively. This requires those who work on the forefront of reforms and the four modernizations to go more often into the new realities of life, be good at capturing the new things emerging everywhere in the practice of the masses, and link philosophy with life and the minds of young people in lively and vigorous forms.

One book after another of new popular philosophy, popular economics, popular politics, popular legal science, popular ethics, popular psychology, popular sociology, and popular aesthestics, with new essences and new ideas in new language guided by Marxism and directed at new practice, to be presented to people who are exerting their efforts in reforms and construction, especially the young generation bent on invigorating the Chinese nation and dedicating themselves to socialist modernization -- this should be the lofty social responsibility of our theoretical workers and the practical action and important aspect when implementing the principle of making theory serve socialist modernization. Let us learn from Comrade Ai Siqi his praiseworthy spirit in writing "Dazhong Zhexue!" We should make new efforts worthy of these great times and the great practice of today!

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON SIXTH NPC MEETING

Huang Hua on Foreign Policy

OW010829 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1238 GMT 31 Mar 86

[By reporter Ji Naifu]

[Text] Beijing, 31 Mar (XINHUA) -- Huang Hua, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, spoke in his capacity as NPC deputy at an NPC group discussion of the Hebei delegation today. He pointed out: In his report on the draft Seventh 5-Year Plan, Premier Zhao put forward a very scientific Marxist thesis, "China's domestic and foreign policies are an organic entity." This thesis is of great significance for the accomplishment of the Seventh 5-Year Plan and the strengthening and defense of world peace.

Huang Hua said that in recent years our party and government have readjusted our foreign policy in accordance with the development and transformation of the international situation and the needs of our domestic economic construction. He said: Firmly pursuing an independent foreign policy for peace and persistently opening itself to the outside world, our country has stepped up its economic and technological exchanges and cooperation with other countries on the basis of equality and mutual benefit. At present we have more friends, and our country has been enjoying increasingly higher international status and prestige, establishing diplomatic relations with 133 countries. These facts fully show that our foreign policy is absolutely correct. China is playing a more and more important role in the current struggle to defend world peace and promote common development.

After expounding his views, Huang Hua added: An important reason for the tremendous achievements made by our country in foreign affairs during the Sixth 5-Year Plan was our great success in restructuring the economy, which promoted steady economic development and provided powerful backing for our foreign affairs. He said: In his report to the NPC, Premier Zhao expounded China's foreign policy in a more systematic and comprehensive way, and pointed out the main contents and basic principles in 10 aspects. This will further promote our foreign affairs. We should seriously implement these principles and join the countries of the Third World and other peace-loving countries in making joint efforts to strive for a long peaceful international environment.

Xu Jiatun Speaks

OW311034 Beijing in Mandarin to Taiwan 1500 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Text] Xu Jiatun, NPC deputy and director of the Hong Kong Branch of the XINHUA NEWS AGENCY, joined Hong Kong and Macao deputies of the Guangdong delegation on the afternoon of 28 March in examining and discussing Premier Zhao's report. Xu Jiatun said during the discussion: At a symposium on Hong Kong's economic problems in Taiwan recently, some economists expressed a pessimistic view with regard to Hong Kong's future. They also said that China's reform of its economic structure and its policy of opening to the outside world were failures. Premier Zhao's report has wisely refuted this pessimistic view.

Xu Jiatun said: Premier Zhao's report contains sufficient data regarding China's achievements in reform and opening to the outside world. The report reflects a breakthrough in summing up how to learn from and use the experience of developed capitalist countries. It shows that in a situation of one country and two systems there can be not only peaceful coexistence but also peaceful competition and peaceful development.

Xu Jiatun said: Our country's economic construction has been in its best form since the birth of New China. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan, China's socialist construction began a favorable cycle as a result of our bold reforms made in light of actual conditions. All views at home and abroad that express doubt about or negate our reforms are unfounded.

Ideo-Political Work Stressed

OW310824 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1313 GMT 30 Mar 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 30 Mar (XINHUA) -- In studying Premier Zhao Ziyang's report, NPC deputies attending the Fourth Session of the Sixth National People's Congress emphatically pointed out: The focus of the Seventh 5-Year Plan is economic construction. However, ideological and political work constitutes an important guarantee for economic construction. The deputies pointed out: While strengthening socialist material civilization, it is necessary to vigorously strengthen socialist spiritual civilization.

Geng Biao, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, said: In his report, Premier Zhao Ziyang attached great importance to ideological and political work. We completely agree. He said: During the past few years, ideological and political work and the spirit of self-reliance and arduous struggle have been less emphasized. In addition, propaganda work has often been carried out onesidedly. Some people, particularly some young people, are quite confused in their minds. Some localities have solved their problems fairly well after strengthening ideological and political work. The reports on the heroes of the Laoshan front in particular have had a wide-ranging impact among young people.

He said: In developing the four modernizations program, we must advocate Marxism and adhere to the socialist orientation. We must not relax ideological and political work while paying full attention to socialist spiritual civilization.

NPC deputy Song Lin of the Qinghai delegation said: The "Seventh 5-Year Plan" advocates the simultaneous development of material and spiritual civilization. He said: The on-going reform in our country is a great but arduous task. It will certainly bring profound changes in our economic and social life, work methods, and mental outlook. All this demands that, while carrying out economic construction, we must strengthen ideological and political work and persistently develop material and spiritual civilization at the same time.

NPC deputy Ye Ganyun of the Jiangsu delegation said: Over the past few years, unhealthy tendencies have begun to prevail in some localities where spiritual civilization has not been developed well. Recently things have begun to improve, because efforts have been made to vigorously promote spiritual civilization. He called for efforts to continue paying attention to spiritual civilization and give widespread publicity to advanced individuals in all fields of endeavor.

NPC deputy Tian Jingqi of the Sichuan delegation said: Right now there are some issues that should not be ignored by workers. Some workers do not regard themselves as masters of their own affairs, while others tend to attach importance to making money. Some of them believe that all people, be they advanced or backward, work because they must make a living and support themselves; they are not interested in politics. Others only crave diplomas, saying "life is important, but a diploma is even more important." Still others fail to understand the significance of implementing the policy of opening to the outside world, the wage policy, and the policy on contract workers. He said: In view of this situation, we should vigorously strengthen ideological and political work among workers and staff and bring into full play the role of workers congresses in this respect.

NPC deputy Yang Mo, who is also a writer, completely agrees that while developing material civilization, it is also necessary to strengthen efforts to promote spiritual civilization. She said: Literary and art works of all types can greatly affect people's minds, particularly those of young people.

NPC deputy Guan Shanfu of the Jilin delegation said: Our newspapers, magazines, and books should be oriented to serving socialist spiritual civilization. Influenced by the thinking of attaching great importance to making money, some publishing houses allow a number of filthy books and journals to flood the market in order to make money, while people cannot afford to buy good books because they are too expensive. All this will directly influence the development of socialist spiritual civilization. He suggested the restoration of traditional measures to subsidize the publishing of educational books and journals with educational funds and the publishing of literary books with cultural funds in order to reduce the prices of books, newspapers, and journals.

'Law for Public Servants' Urged

OW311224 Beijing XINHUA in English 1146 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 31 (XINHUA) -- National People's Congress deputies from the Taiwan delegation suggested that a "law for public servants" be formulated to facilitate a better examination, use, and monitoring of state officials.

During the panel discussion of the Seventh Five-Year Plan, the deputies expressed their support for Premier Zhao Ziyang's recommendation that China's legal system be strengthened and that government officials at all levels serve the people wholeheartedly.

Li Caiping, associate research fellow of the Zijinshan observatory in Nanjing, said th the appointment of government officials should be based on state requirements, nc the impressions of a few individuals. Liu pointed an accusing finger at the wa ting of money by state officials and questioned why grafting of 10,000 yuan is a crime, but wasting 10 million yuan is not. "It is unreasonable," he said.

Ma Liesun, a Moslem deputy from the Ningxia Hui Autonomous Region, held that there should be a benchmark for what is considered wasteful. He asked if "the badly planned projects, indiscriminate use of foreign exchange for importing, poor quality goods, and other symptoms of bureaucracy" are demonstrations of wastefulness. "A law should be formulated to punish those who waste money," he urged.

NPC deputies from other parts of the country also noted what Premier Zhao said in his report that serious corruptions exist in some places. They said that the central and local governments should take forceful measures to stop such practices.

Wang Enmao at Dance

OW291432 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 0200 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Excerpts] On 26 March NPC deputies from Xinjiang and Gansu attending the Fourth Session of the Sixth National People's Congress held a get-together with local staff members at the regional office of Xinjiang and Gansu in Beijing to celebrate the convocation of the session.

Wang Enmao, NPC deputy and chairman of the Advisory Commission of the Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region, 70 years old, danced happily with the other deputies. Our station reporter (Hu Zhijian) interviewed him there, and asked Comrade Wang Enmao to give his impression of the session.

Comrade Wang Enmao said: The Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC marks the end of the Sixth 5-Year Plan and the beginning of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Under the leadership of the party Central Committee, we have successfully fulfilled the Sixth 5-Year Plan, thanks to the joint efforts of the people of all nationalities throughout the country. The Sixth 5-Year Plan period was the best in promoting the nation's social and economic developments. We believe we will definitely score even greater achievements in promoting economic and social developments during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period. We NPC deputies from Xinjiang are elated at the nation's tremendous achievements. We are happy to gather here today to celebrate the convocation of the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC.

The reporter thanked Comrade Wang Enmao for his remarks.

Hong Kong, Macao Deputies Feted

OW290221 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1504 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, 26 Mar (XINHUA) -- The China Democratic National Construction Association and the All-China Federation of Industry and Commerce gave a dinner at a Beijing restaurant this evening for NPC deputies and members of the CPPCC National Committee from Hong Kong and Macao who had come to Beijing to attend the fourth sessions of the Sixth NPC and the Sixth CPPCC National committee. In his toast, Hu Ziang, chairman of the Federation of Industry and Commerce, praised the industrial and commercial circles in Hong Kong for their work in promoting stability and prosperity in Hong Kong since the signing of the Sino-British joint statement on Hong Kong.

He urged industrial and commercial circles in inland China and Hong Kong to step up cooperation and contribute to the revitalization of the Chinese nation. Attending the dinner were Vice Chairman of the NPC Standing Committee Rong Yiren, Vice Chairmen of the CPPCC National Committee Yang Jingren, Liu Lantao, Wang Guangying and Liu Jingji, and Director of the United Front Work Department of the CPC Central Committee Yan Mingfu, as well as Ping Jiesan, Li Hou, and Lu Ping.

REFORM OF SUPPLY, MARKETING COOPERATIVES VIEWED

[Commentator's article: "Semi-Official and Semi-Private Supply and Marketing Cooperatives Should Also Be Reformed"]

[Text] Under the guidance of Central Documents No 1, issued in past few years, supply and marketing cooperatives in rural areas have been carrying on reform and have done a great deal of work achieving good results in serving peasants. "The 1986 rural work arrangements by the CPC Central Committee and the State Council" point out: Supply and marketing cooperatives shoulder arduous tasks for purchasing large quantities of farm produce and supply producer and consumer goods. In order to meet the nees of the peasants in developing the commodity economy, they should speed the pace of reform and thoroughly turn themselves into cooperative commercial enterprises owned by the peasant masses. This shows that it is now necessary to further advance the reform of supply and marketing cooperatives.

In the final analysis, reform of the supply and marketing cooperatives should completely restore their nature of being run by local people. Since 1982, through such measures as expanding shares and delegating power to cooperatives, supply and marketing cooperatives have improved their relations with local peasants and have strengthened their position of being run by local people. However, they are still far from being thoroughly turned back into cooperative commercial enterprises run by local peasants for themselves. Many supply and marketing cooperatives remain in the state of being run half by the state and half by local people. This state of affairs is not in line with the requirements of the development of the rural commodity economy. At present we are reforming the system of state monopoly over farm produce purchases. The purchases of grain, cotton, and other major farm products have been based on a contract system. The marketing of most farm products has been decontrolled. With the rise in agricultural productivity and the increase in the quantity of marketable farm produce, peasants, as independent commodity producers, will require more and more supply and marketing services. In order to expand their operational scale, stabilize relations between production and marketing, and ensure various social services, the peasants need an economic organization of their own which can provide timely services for themselves and can deal with economic relations with state institutions on their behalf. Supply and marketing cooperatives should be such peasant economic organizations. If they are not thoroughly turned into peasants cooperative commercial enterprises, they will not be able to satisfy the peasants requirements. Some people fear that once supply and marketing cooperatives are completely run by local people, their social status will be lowered and the scope of their functions will be narrowed. On the other hand, if supply and marketing cooperatives in the whole country become a huge cooperative economic group of the 800 million peasants, they will certainly bring great vigor to the socialist rural commodity economy and will hold bright prospects for development.

At present, more and more comrades have come to realize the importance and necessity of turning supply and marketing cooperatives into cooperative commercial enterprises run by local people and have become more conscious in advancing reform in this regard.

However, our task of thoroughly restoring the supply-marketing cooperatives nature of being run by local people is still arduous. We have yet to overcome the old conventions and old ideas and to remove the old obstacles caused by vested departmental interests. At present, the primary task for cadres and workers in the system of supply and marketing cooperatives is to deeply understand the spirit of the instructions of the party central leadership and the State Council, bring their thoughts into line with the requirements of economic reform, take initiative in providing necessary services, and promote the development of horizontal economic combinations so as to help supply and marketing cooperatives change into commercial enterprises completely run by local people. This represents the desire of the 800 million peasants.

STATE COUNCIL CIRCULAR ON ELECTRONICS INDUSTRY

OW290533 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0809 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Excerpt] Beijing, 24 Mar (XINHUA) -- On 8 March, the State Council approved and distributed a report submitted by the Ministry of Electronics Industry on reforming the management system in the electronics industry. In a circular attached to the report, the State Council pointed out: In reforming economic management in industries, we must adhere to the principle of separating government functions from business management, of achieving a simpler, decentralized administration, and carry out reforms with emphasis on enhancing the enterprises' vitality. The idea of the Ministry of Electronics Industry in reforming the economic management system in electronics industry conforms with the guidelines laid down in the "decision of the CPC Central Committee on reform of the economic structure." It has followed a correct orientation, and its method, steps, and measures are feasible.

The circular also pointed out: The Ministry of Electronics Industry is a department which plays the role of making overall plans and managing the entire electronics industry in the country. The State Council entrusts the ministry with the necessary authority and regulatory means. After transferring the enterprises directly under this administration to a lower administrative level, the Ministry of Electronics Industry must gradually orient itself toward serving the whole industry and earnestly strengthen its management in the electronics field. Management departments at all levels in the electronics industry must also change their role from departments in charge of the enterprises into government organs in charge of electronics trade in the local district. People's governments at all levels must give full support to and coordinate with the various departments concerned in reforming the management system in the electronics industry and take due actions in carrying out this work on a solid basis.

In its report, the Ministry of Electronics Industry said: The basic task in reforming the electronics industry is to form and economic management system in the electronics industry -- a system full of vitality -- so as to promote even greater developments in the industry, meet the requirements in developing new technologies, attain even greater social and economic benefits, and ensure that the electronic industry will serve the four modernizations drive and the people even better. It is for this reason that the report put forward the following four tasks in carrying reforms for 1986 and 1987:

1. Achieve a simpler, decentralized administration and revitalize enterprises.

2. Separate government administration from enterprise management and put enterprises under a lower administrative level.

3. Promote enterprise integration and reorganization and change the structure of enterprises. Enterprises may be put under a lower administrative level after being integrated. They may become integrated while they are being placed or after they have been placed under a lower administrative level.

4. Change the role of the ministry and manage the industry well. After separating government administration from enterprise management, the Ministry of Electronics Industry, as a department under the State Council, is responsible for making overall plans and managing the entire electronics industry in the country. Administrative departments at all levels in the electronics industry must strengthen macrocontrol while continuing to improve microflexibility. They must make full use of economic and legal means, gradually employ less administrative measures, vigorously strengthen their indirect control over various economic activities, and step by step improve the system and methods in exercising such indirect control.

The report of the electronics industry also suggested that the state support the major projects in the overall plans in the electronics industry as well as the key enterprises in the industry by encouraging investments, extending loans, and reducing the regulatory tax.

STATE COUNCIL CIRCULAR ON FOREST FIRE PREVENTION

OW310728 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1215 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 29 Mar (XINHUA) -- The State Council recently issued an "emergency circular concerning effective and intensified efforts in forest fire prevention." The circular calls on all provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions to strengthen leadership over forest fire prevention work for ensure the safety of forested areas.

The circular said: Some provinces and autonomous regions in the south, where rain and snow were scarce last winter and dry weather has prevailed since this spring, are still in the fire prevention season, while the north, where it seldom snowed last winter, has already entered the spring forest fire prevention season. In this connection, the emergency circular urged all localities to pay attention to the following matters:

1. People's governments at all levels should effectively step up work in spring forest fire prevention. It is necessary to conduct a general inspection of fire prevention. It is necessary to conduct a general inspection of fire prevention work, take effective measures to deal with existing problems, and assign a leading comrade to take personal charge of the work.

2. It is necessary to strictly abide by regulations concerning the use of fire in open fields and to tightly control sources of fire.

3. It is necessary to unfold extensive publicity and education on preventing forest fires.

4. It is necessary to organize and increase the number of full-time fire fighters in areas prone to forest fires.

5. In accordance with the "Forest Law," it is necessary to strengthen organizations for forest protection and fire prevention and staff them with full-time personnel to take charge of extinguishing forest fires.

STATE COUNCIL CIRCULAR ON PRODUCTION SAFETY

OW291416 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1318 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 26 Mar (XINHUA) -- In transmitting the national production safety committee's "opinion concerning attaching great importance to production safety and checking the increase in accidents involving deaths and injuries," the General Office of the State Council recently issued a circular, which said: Last year, there was relatively big increase in accidents resulting in deaths and injuries to workers in the country, including some very serious ones. Leaders at all levels should attach great importance to production safety and adopt effective measures to ensure safety and to eliminate such an undesirable phenomenon as quickly as possible.

The national production safety committee's "opinion concerning attaching great importance to production safety and checking the increase in accidents involving deaths and injuries" said: For a few years following the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, production safety was relatively good, and the number of deaths decreased by a big margin for 3 consecutive years, averaging 10.5 percent annually. However, the decrease has slowed down since 1983, and the number of accidents picked up again in 1985. We must pay close attention to production safety and take effective measures to check the rise in accidents and get rid of such an undesirable trend in order to ensure smooth progress of the modernization drive.

The "opinion" said: Causes for the serious increase can be attributed to the following: Some leading comrades still lopsidedly pursued a high output quota, while neglecting quality and safety in production; in introducing the contract economic responsibility system, quite a few units listed only economic and technical targets and excluded production safety, or just had safety slogans without concrete measures to ensure it in the contract; production safety was not observed and violations of regulations and operations by those in authority took place in some units; and some other units failed to keep up with training for cadres and safety education for workers during the transitional period between new and old leading bodies and the reform of labor system, which resulted in a drastic increase in the number of negotiated workers and shift workers and a relative decline in the quality of workers.

The "opinion" said: As this year is the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we must strive to achieve a good start in production safety. The general goals of safety work should be to basically check major accidents involving deaths and injuries, greatly reduce the number of general accidents involving deaths and injuries, and markedly increase the rate of those who have passed the test allowing maximum density of dust and poisonous elements. Mines and transportation, as well as fire, dust, and poison prevention should remain the focus of this year's safety work.

The "opinion" pointed out: To accomplish the goals of production safety this year, it is necessary to resolutely carry out the following measures:

First, leaders at all levels should earnestly implement the principle of "putting safety above anything else and focusing on prevention.

Second, safety measures should be reinforced in production.

Third, factories, mines, and enterprises should step up the construction of safety facilities.

Fourth, safety management should be intensified, and violations of regulations and operations by those in authority should be strictly forbidden.

Fifth, safety education and technical training for new workers and those who have changed jobs should be conducted according to the regulation.

Sixth, it is necessary to organize an effective investigation team to duly handle a number of grave accidents to arouse the attention of various quarters and educate cadres and people.

ZHANG JINGFU ADDRESSES PRODUCTION SAFETY MEETING

OW290207 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1525 GMT 26 Mar 86

[By reporter Zhang Jinsheng]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 26 Mar (XINHUA) -- According to an announcement of the fifth enlarged plenary session of the national production safety committee, to ensure a good beginning in the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, effectively lower the number of casualties in production and reduce occupational hazards, the national production safety committee will dispatch six inspection groups to inspect production safety in some regions at the end of this month.

The enlarged session, which opened today, pointed out: Thanks to the impetus of economic reform, the situation of the nation's economic development has been good. Authorities concerned, however, should pay great attention to the situation of production safety, which is highly incongruous with the current new situation. Statistics show that the number of people injured or killed in accidents in the industrial, communications, and construction sectors in 1985 was higher than that in 1984, and major accidents were frequent. Occurrences of occupational diseases also increase. The situation in the first quarter of this year is also unsatisfactory.

Zhang Jingfu, state councillor and chairman of the national production safety committee, addressed the meeting, which he also chaired. He said: The party Central Committee and the State Council have always attached great importance to production safety. We must realize the importance of production safety, improve the safety system, and implement the safety measures. The inspection of production safety is an important measure for changing the inert situation in that area. We must seriously investigate the causes of accidents and see whether safety measures are included in production plans, and whether precautionary measures against hazards are specified in economic and technical policies. All regions and departments must also take similar measures to improve production safety.

WANG YUZHAO BACKS ANHUI AUDITING PRACTICE

OW290447 Hefei Anhui Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Excerpts] The Organization Department of the Anhui Provincial CPC Committee, the provincial economic commission, the provincial personnel bureau, and the provincial auditing bureau recently issued a joint circular calling on the auditing bureaus in all parts of Anhui Province to audit the books of large and medium-sized state enterprises before any principal responsible administrative persons of the enterprises are transferred from their posts.

The pre-transfer auditing practice is a useful experiment that has been affirmed by the leading comrades of the State Council, the Auditing Administration, and the Organization Department of the CPC Central Committee.

In his speech at an Anhui provincial auditing work meeting, Governor Wang Yuzhao also urged all localities to popularize the practice.

FUJIAN TO STEP UP STRUGGLE AGAINST CRIME

OW311142 Fuzhou Fujian Provincial Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Excerpts] The Fujian provincial meeting on the work of the public security, the procuratorate, and the judiciary was held in Fuzhou from 25 to 29 March. The meeting conveyed the guidelines of the national meeting on the work of the public security, the procuratorate, and the judiciary and studied and made arrangements for such work in our province in 1986.

The meeting said that the guidelines and the general requirement of the work of the public security, the procuratorate, and the judiciary in our province this year were to strike a severe blow at the serious criminal and economic offenses, resolutely prohibit and stop the various ugly practices that harm the social ethics, and fully implement the various measures for the comprehensive treatment of social order in order to render even better service to the economic restructuring and the building of two civilizations.

The meeting held that social order in our province has taken a marked turn for the better since we began the campaign to strike severe blows against criminal activities. However, we are currently facing new problems in social order. In the course of economic restructuring, opening to the outside world, and invigoration of the domestic economy, economic crime soared, cases of violent crime increased, and repugnant social phenomena resurfaced.

The meeting proposed that for these reasons, the struggle to strike severe blows at criminal offenses must be continued this year. The quickest and heaviest possible punishment must be meted out according to law to serious criminals who endanger the people's lives and disrupt the social order such as murders, arsonists, people who bomb, rapists, robbers, and hoodlums. All repugnant phenomena that seriously pollute the social atmosphere must be resolutely banned and stopped.

Regarding the struggle against economic crimes, the meeting said: Party committees and governments at all levels must strengthen their leadership. Public security organs, procuratorates, courts, and judicial departments at all levels must closely coordinate and cooperate with and support each other. Anyone involved in economic offenses must be investigated and punished regardless who he is.

Jia Qinglin, deputy secretary of the Fujian Provincial CPC Committee, spoke to the meeting.

He stressed that strengthening socialist democracy and the legal system is the fundamental guarantee for perfecting the socialist system, promoting spiritual and material civilization, and bringing about long-lasting peace and stability in our country.

HAN PEIXIN ADDRESSES JIANGSU ECONOMIC FORUM

OW290443 Nanjing Jiangsu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Excerpts] A provisional conference on planned economic work successfully concluded today after 7 days in session. The conference asked the whole province to get mobilized and work in concert to ensure stable economic growth this year.

In his summing up report to the conference, Secretary Han Peixin of the provincial party committee dialectically and realistically analyzed the current economic situation. He said: The question of speed needs to be brought up in analyzing the current situation. We should correctly realize that our industrial growth in both January and February was slow. The main objective causes were shortages of electric power, funds, and raw materials, big market fluctuations, and the stockpiling of certain products. The subjective causes were the lack of a comprehensive understanding of speed and our inadequate efforts. We must not take these causes lightly and continue to act carelessly. Neither should we become panic-stricken and blame subordinates. Still less should we return to our past one-sided approach of pursuing only output. We must try to achieve growth while raising the social and economic benefits and maintaining the current level of capital investment, loans and credit, foreign exchange, and consumption funds.

Comrade Han Peixin pointed out: To carry out our economic tasks, we must continue our reform, earnestly strengthen ideological-political work, push forward party rectification, and arouse the initiative of all quarters.

Governor Gu Xiulian also spoke at the closing session. She urged all localities to work out measures suitable to the local conditions and realistically carry out the guidelines of the conference in practical work.

JIANGXI'S WAN SHAOFEN ON JOBS FOR GRADUATES

OW290451 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Excerpts] The provincial party committee and the provincial people's government dispatched 7 work teams led by cadres at the department or bureau level to visit students from Jiangxi Province studying at 139 institutes of higher learning in 22 provinces and municipalities and to invite them to come back to work in Jiangxi after completing their studies.

After hearing briefings by the work teams on 1 March, Comrade Wan Shaofen, secretary of the provincial party committee, summoned responsible comrades of the provincial party committee's office and organization and propaganda departments, the provincial government's office, the planning commission, the scientific and technological commission, the education department, the labor and personnel department, and the Nanchang City party committee to study concrete measures together regarding this matter.

Comrade Wang Shaofen called on all localities and departments to attach great importance to employing talented personnel. Leading comrades should take personal charge in attracting, employing, and utilizating talented personnel and strive to invite more college graduates from Jiangxi to come back to their hometowns to join in construction.

SICHUAN TAKES MEASURES TO SOLVE PETROLEUM SHORTAGE

HK290643 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] According to XINXI BAO [INFORMATION JOURNAL], the provincial government has recently decided to adopt emergency measures for solving the shortage of petroleum. It urged all localities and departments to seriously implement them.

Any place which has access to natural gas must greatly develop these energy resources for back up purposes. These places should try their best to cut back their demand for petroleum.

Provided that the conditions are available, public vehicles and buses running on short-distance routes should quickly switch their source of energy to natural gas. All localities should give priority to automobiles when supplying natural gas. Other localities should try to create conditions for supplying natural gas, alcohol and formaldehyde as back-up energy resources. We must give diesel fuel priority to the peasants for the purposes of irrigation and transporting necessary goods. Whenever the conditions permit, we should try to transport goods to distant places by rail and water. Also, if possible, we should transport goods to nearby places by man or animal power rather than automobiles.

In connection with the nature of their tasks and the annual assigned quota of petroleum, all localities and departments should make appropriate arrangements for the use of petroleum and introduce a responsibility system in this respect. We should properly control the use of petroleum by taxis. We should strengthen market supervision and strictly ban the speculation in petroleum. The automobile management offices at all levels must coordinate with the transport and petroleum departments. They should scrap old gas-guzzling automobiles.

YANG RUDAI ADDRESSES SICHUAN PUBLISHING UNITS

HK281051 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Yesterday [25 March], Yang Rudai, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, said to some 100 comrades of news publishing units and of publications of literature theory: Unhealthy trends must be resolutely curbed and the production and exchange of commodities normally carried out. When some places and departments are correcting party style, they dare not engage in the production and circulation of commodities. This is wrong.

Comrade Yang Rudai said: In the course of correcting party style, we must grasp the problems generally existing; solve the problem of liberalism in the sphere of politics, of individualism in ideology, and the problems of bureaucratism in work; and arouse our enthusiasm. Leading cadres must go down, find, study, and solve problems vigorously and on their own initiative; and strive to develop the excellent situation.

Comrade Rudai also stated his views on how our province can do well in grasping the work in the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan and on the current situation in production and reform.

XIZANG'S WU JINGHUA SPEAKS AT TOURISM MEETING

HK261601 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Excerpts] The regional meeting on tourism work opened in Lhasa on 25 March. Some 100 representatives are attending this meeting. Leading comrades of the regional party and government, including Wu Jinghua and Doje Cering, attended the opening ceremony. Doje Cering and Wu Jinghua delivered important speeches one after the other.

In his speech, Comrade Doje Cering said: This meeting on tourism work held by the regional people's government is the first meeting as well as a regionwide meeting, to completely study and solve the problems of tourism work in Xizang. He said: To do a good job in tourism, it is necessary to first solve the problem of understanding. Xizang abounds in tourism resources. Leading comrades of the central authorities have given instructions on many occasions on developing tourism work in Xizang. Therefore, we must clearly understand the status and role of Xizang's tourism work, understand its strategic role, and create a new situation in developing tourism in Xizang.

Comrade Doje Cering said: The enlarged meeting held by the regional CPC Committee Standing Committee last year put forward the target of struggle -- going further in negating the Cultural Revoluation, in eliminating leftist ideological influence, and in straightening out the ideological line, and basing everything on Xizang's realities, doing everything to develop the productive foces, and doing everything for the well-being of the people of Xizang. Xizang's tourism work is a pillar of its economic development. When tourism work is done well, we can promote the development of the communications, transport, and food processing trades, commerce, and the nationality handicraft industry. Therefore, we must lay a good foundation this year and, at the same time, do well in grasping other work related to tourism work, as well as reception work, so that Xizang's tourism work will undergo relatively great development.

In his speech, Comrade Wu Jinghua laid stress on the problem of understanding. He said: We must further deepen our understanding of tourism work, as well as Xizang work. Comrade Wu Jinghua said: If we want to promote Xizang's economy, we must regard tourism work as the central work. It can then be said that we proceed from Xizang's realities. When tourism work is done well, we can not only bring along other economic work but also open our region, which was in a closed or semiclosed state over a long period of time, and promote cultural exchanges and scientific and technological contacts between Xizang and the interior and the peoples of all countries in the world. Therefore, we must unify our thinking and understanding and try in every possible way to grasp Xizang's tourism work in a down-to-earth manner and to the end.

Representatives of the Economic Advisory Group of the State Council, China International Travel Service, China Travel Service, and China Youth Travel Service are also attending the meeting.

At the meeting, (Li Guangbi), assistant chief manager of the regional tourism corporation, also conveyed the spirit of the national conference on tourism work.

BEIJING OFFICIALS GET JAIL SENTENCES FOR CORRUPTION

HK310416 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 31 Mar 86 p 3

[Text] Seven Beijing cadres, including the former head of the city's Public Utility Bureau and five officials of the Beijing Gas Company, have been sentenced to jail terms ranging from three to 15 years by the Beijing Intermediate People's Court 15 years on corruption charges.

More than 400 people attended the open trial on Saturday afternoon held at the Beijing court in the East City District.

Ma Shuiliang, former director of the Public Utility Bureau, was charged with taking bribes totalling 6,300 yuan ($2,000), pocketing a colour TV set and an electronic organ -- which he bought in Japan with public funds -- and dereliction of duty that caused the State to lose more than four million yuan ($1.25 million). He received a six-year jail term.

Huang Yuqian, former party secretary of the Beijing Gas Company's pipeline agency, was charged with pocketing more than 23,000 yuan ($7,200) of public funds and taking bribes of more than 2,000 yuan. He was jailed for 15 years.

The former manager of the Beijing Gas Company, Zhang Shengyuan, was jailed for 11 years on charges of embezzling 4,000 yuan ($1,200), illegally securing a colour TV set and an electronic organ, taking bribes totalling more than 10,000 yuan ($3,100) and dereliction of duty.

Liang Guoan, the gas company's pipeline agency director, was jailed for 10 years on charges of embezzling 18,000 yuan ($5,300) and taking a bribe of 1,200 yuan ($370).

Tian Wenbo, the gas pipeline agency's operation chief, was jailed for 12 years for embezzling and taking bribes totalling 20,000 yuan ($6,200). Zhao Yuhai, the agency's Party official, got a 11-year jail term for taking bribes totalling more than 30,000 yuan ($9,000).

The last of the seven jailed, Guo Shengfu, agency's deputy operation chief, got the shortest sentence -- three years on similar charges involving 8,000 yuan ($2,300) in ill-gotten funds.

Zhang Guobin, an eighth person in the case, was released by the court for "good behavior and cooperation with the judicial authorities", according to BEIJING DAILY. Zhang had already returned the embezzled 9,200 yuan ($2,800), the court said.

BEIJING OFFICIAL ON HANDLING ECONOMIC CRIMES

SK310856 Beijing BEIJING RIBAO in Chinese 17 Mar 86 p 2

[Text] In his report on the situation of work to seriously deal blows to economic crimes to the 27th Standing Committee meeting of the 8th municipal People's Congress on 4 March, He Fangbo, acting chief procurator of the municipal People's Procuratorate, called for efforts to firmly crush the arrogance of economic criminals in the coming year or so.

He said. While never ignoring the work of dealing blows to criminal offenses, procuratorial organs at all levels have regarded the work of dealing blows to economic crimes as a major task and have vigorously strengthened the investigations into economic crimes.

The 1985 figure for economic criminal cases which were placed on file for investigation showed an increase of 220 percent over that of 1984. Of this, the number of major and appalling cases was 11 times the 1984 figure. Economic losses worth more than 25 million yuan were retrieved for the state and the collectives. In view of the situation of the units and individuals involved in these cases, we found that progress was made in both the range and quality of the struggle against serious economic crimes.

He said: The characteristics of the current economic criminal activities are as follows: First, some state organs, mass organizations, and state-owned and collectively-owned enterprises and establishments flaunted the banner of "carrying out reform" and "enlivening the economy" to indulge in illegal business for the interests of small groups -- in reality, for private ends. Some turned state property into collective property and then privately divided it among themselves under all sorts of pretexts. Some responsible persons and persons involved in these activities lined their pockets by doing so. Second, some "companies" and "centers" without funds, sources of goods, fixed employees, working places, equipment, or financial and management systems engaged in speculation and profiteering by making fake contracts or not honoring contracts. Third, some persons from different trades and from different areas ganged up together, some even acting in collaboration with foreign businessmen, to engage in criminal activities. Fourth, some persons with bad or previous criminal records were placed in important positions for being mistaken for "able persons" and "the god of wealth." Thus, they rampantly engaged in economic criminal activities. Fifth, cadres engaged in economic criminal activities. More and more cadres committed economic crimes.

BEIJING RADIO ON EXTRAVAGANT WINING, DINING

SK310938 Beijing City Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 17 Mar 86

[Text] Fellow listeners: The CPC Central Committee has issued repeated injunctions strictly banning the practice of using public funds to give banquets and gifts and to indulge in extravagant wining and dining. Some units and some leading comrades, however, have turned a deaf ear to the repeated injunctions of the central authorities, and have stuck to their old way of doing things. We must strictly investigate and deal with those acts in defiance of the organization and discipline.

Such acts as indulging in extravagance and waste and giving banquets and gifts run counter to socialist spiritual civilization. They not only cause losses to the state and the people, but also seriously damage the reputation of the party, as well as party style and social conduct. Such corrosive acts have been bitterly hated by the large number of the masses. Why do these acts continue to take place after the issuance of the repeated injunctions of the central authorities? There are many reasons. A very important reason is that some cadres have lacked an understanding of the seriousness and harmfulness of such acts. They have erroneously maintained that extravagant wining and dining is a minor matter which should not be regarded as a mistake; and without giving banquets and gifts, things cannot be done well. They do not understand that indulging in extravagant wining and dining and giving banquets and gifts are an expression of a corrosive bourgeois work style, nor do they know that extravagant wining and dining will unconsciously destroy the fine tradition of our party and the flesh-and-blood ties between the party and the masses.

To eliminate such corrosive situations, we must conscientiously implement the relevant stipulations of the central authorities and mobilize the whole party to conduct supervision over the practice of arbitrarily using public funds to give banquets and gifts.

Once inappropriate actions come to light, they should be corrected immediately without any tolerance.

TIANJIN MEETING ON STRUGGLE AGAINST ECONOMIC CRIMES

SK310948 Tianjin TIANJIN RIBAO in Chinese 19 Mar 86 p 1

[Text] On the morning of 18 March, the municipal Discipline Inspection Commission and the municipal Commission on Political Science and Law held a conference with the participation of responsible persons from the districts, counties, bureaus, companies, and key plants. The conference made concrete arrangements for further dealing blows to serious economic crimes.

At present a good trend in struggle against serious economic crimes throughout the municipality has taken shape by actively launching an attack and making a breakthrough in succession with major or serious cases. However, activities violating the law are still serious. This has shown that our municipality has not achieved even development in the struggle against serious economic crimes, and that in some departments and localities the phenomena still exists in which the work of investigating and dealing with serious economic cases has not been grasped firmly and the attack on them has not been carried out effectively.

The conference urged leading personnel of party and government organs at all levels to unswervingly implement the guideline issued by the CPC Central Committee with regard to "grasping construction on the one hand and legal systems on the other hand," to adopt resolute measures, and to vigorously make up their mind in dealing strict blows to serious economic crimes in order to strive to puncture the arrogance of economic crimes within 1 or 2 years.

Lu Xuezheng, vice mayor of the municipality, attended the conference and delivered a speech. He pointed out: At present efforts should be made to regard the task of dealing strict blows to economic crimes as an important work item, to firmly conduct investigations and deal with major and serious cases, to thoroughly deal with the cases involving huge sums of illegal gains and profits and with serious offenses, to thoroughly conduct investigations into the cases no matter how complicated they are and what organs and which cadres are involved in them, and to deal with them seriously in line with the law. More efforts should be made to firmly investigate and deal with the cases involving more children of leading cadres and the cases that have involved more leading cadres and noted figures. We should persistently follow the principle of dealing sure, accurate, and relentless blows to these crimes, give priority to dealing "accurate" blows to them, and should integrate the task of dealing blows to them with the work of conducting criminal prevention and with that of publicizing the legal system. Efforts should be made to make use of positive and negative typical cases in conducting education on the "four haves" among cadres, staff members, and workers in order to upgrade their ability to consciously resist the influence of bourgeois ideology. We should discover leading personnel who are to blame for the cases in which units have ineffective leadership and have refused to conduct investigation and examination, and should strictly deal with those who have sought private gain by violating the law and have harbored or shielded criminal elements.

Attending the conference were responsible persons from the municipal CPC Committee and the municipal people's government.

TIANJIN BRINGS CONVICTS TO PUBLIC TRIAL

SK010721 Tianjin TIANJIN RIBAO in Chinese 19 Mar 86 p 1

[Text] On 18 March, 13 convicts who had committed serious economic crimes or had neglected their duties were escorted onto the trial platform for an open trial held by the municipal Intermediate People's Court.

Wang Cunshan, president of the municipal Intermediate People's Court, presided over the open trial. In line with the law, the court sentenced Zhang Zhixin, former chief of the general section of the administrative department under the electric machinery equipment company of the municipal Material Supply Bureau, and Xie Dalai, deputy chief of the general section, to 1 and 1/2 years in prison on charges of receiving bribes by taking advantage of their power. The court sentenced He Zhike, former manager of the Baihua Department Store, to 3 and 1/2 years in prison; Li Xinqiu, clerk of the store, to 5 years in prison; and Qiao Qiusheng, clerk of the store, to 10 years in prison; on charges of illegally obtaining and embezzling a huge sum of money. The court sentenced Mu Ping, former clerk of the municipal branch of the China National Machinery Import and Export Corporation, to life in prison on charges of seeking bribes from foreign businessmen by taking advantage of his power and bringing serious losses to the state economy. In line with the law, the court sentenced Lu Youquan, former worker of the electric machinery and installation company, to 13 years in prison; and Liu Yougong, peasant of Taiping village in Wuqing County, to 5 years in prison; on charges of embezzling a huge sum of public funds by illegally selling public goods and collaborating with outside units. The court sentenced Yu Peilin (jobless) and Zheng Fuxiang to 2 years in prison on charges of swindling and speculation and profiteering by operating an agency involved in selling products in short supply and reselling motor vehicles. The court sentenced Li Enjiang, former deputy manager of the third sales section under the first friendship department store, to 1 year in prison term; and Cai Lijun, member of the plant public security team, to 3 years in prison; on charges of causing a 60,000 yuan loss to state property by neglecting their duty and giving an opportunity to criminals.

At the open trial, the court announced its first-trial decision on the cases involving 12 persons. If the defendants do not admit that they are guilty, they can appeal to the municipal higher People's Court within 10 days of the written decision.

At the open trial, the court also announced its final decision of capital punishment on robber convict Sun Xiangjun, who was immediately executed on 18 March (whose case on stealing expensive and important goods and articles from the first friendship department store was published by TIANJIN RIBAO).

NINGXIA WRITER DEFENDS CONTROVERSIAL NOVEL

OW271029 Beijing XINHUA in English 0909 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] Yinchuan, March 27 (XINHUA) -- Zhang Xianliang, who has written a controversial novel, said here today that there are no restrictions at all on what he wants to write.

"Of course, writers must be responsible for the social effects of their works and must not have pernicious works published," said Zhang, 50, who is the president of the writers association of the Ningxia Hui Autonomous Region. "I'm going to start writing a new novel about China's reforms in the second half of this year," said Zhang. He said that he planned to write a novel about the work and life of intellectuals every two years.

Senior Chinese Communist Party leader Hu Qili has told the party and government to guarantee writers' freedom of literary creation and freedom of literary criticism.

Zhang's controversial novel entitled, "A Woman Is Half of a Man", published in October, last year, tells how a college graduate persecuted during the 1966-76 "Cultural Revolution" falls in love with a rural woman, cohabits with her and finally leaves her.

The work provoked a storm of controversy when it appeared. Letters from readers, carried in the "BEIJING DAILY", criticized the novel for "having committed a grave mistake in literature" and "having produced adverse social effects". They agreed that the novel's sexual descriptions only suited vulgar tastes. "As a woman, I can't tolerate the descriptions of sex in the novel," said writer Wei Junyi in an article in the "LITERARY GAZETTE". She is of the opinion that the novel describes women only as sex symbols, which poses an insult to human beings.

Meanwhile, other readers aired the view in newspapers that the novel exposes the damage done to human nature by the remnants of feudal attitudes during the "Cultural Revolution".

Zhang Xianliang, who himself was persecuted during the "Cultural Revolution", said, "literary criticism is normal because it reflects the vigor of literary creation and writers' creative freedom. Different views on literary works will promote literature and social progress," he added. "In my opinion, it is not a good thing when a work provokes no response from society after it is published," said Zhang, three of whose have won top national prizes since 1980. He said he welcomed all sorts of criticism, adding, "I was serious in writing the novel and I believe my novel can stand the test of the times and history."

YIN KESHENG SPEAKS AT QINGHAI ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

HK280159 Xining Qinghai Provincial Service in Mandarin 2330 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Excerpts] The provincial economic work conference has called on the party and government departments to persevere in reform, do their work in a practical way, and spur the sustained and steady development of the urban and rural economy.

This conference, jointly convened by the provincial CPC Committee and government, conveyed and implemented the spirit of relevant central meetings and the spirit of the fifth enlarged plenary session of the sixth provincial CPC Committee. It made arrangements for economic and rural work this year and studied and readjusted a number of economic policies, methods, and measures.

Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Yin Kesheng and Deputy Secretaries Song Ruixiang and Liu Feng attended the conference and made speeches.

Comrade Yin Kesheng said: As a result of the fifth enlarged plenary session of the sixth provoncial CPC Committee and this provincial economic work conference, the whole party has a clearer idea of the importance of grasping economic work, and the tasks and measures have been made more explicit. The current problem is that we must unify our thinking, do our work in a practical way, and truly implement the spirit of the conference well, so as to create a new situation in economic work in Qinghai.

Comrade Yin Kesheng pointed out that the most fundamental thing in unifying people's thinking is to bring the thinking of the cadres and masses into line with the CPC Central Committee's line, principles, and policies. As far as doing work in a thoroughly practical way is concerned, we require that the cadres at all levels, especially the leading cadres, have the spirit of uttering less empty talks and doing more practical things. They must have the spirit of facing the grass roots and providing good service.

Comrade Yin Kesheng gave the following views: 1) We must rely on policies to invigorate the economy. 2) We must rely on good economic results to lay the foundation for economic development. 3) We must rely on service work to stimulate economic development. 4) We must rely on ideological and political work to ensure the correct orientation of economic construction.

Comrade Yin Kesheng pointed out that it is a fact that at present certain cadres, staff, and workers look for money in everything instead of stressing the overall situation and comparing each other's contributions. This idea has even penetrated into their business activities. Some areas, departments, and units are often stretching out their hands for assistance and doing little to rely on their own efforts. They indulge in bargaining and haggling when they are assigned tasks, simply laying stress on the difficulties. We must pay attention to guarding against and correcting these abnormalities.

Through carrying out effective ideological and political work, we should fully mobilize the positive factors of all sectors and stimulate the cadres and masses to display the spirit of struggling hard amid difficulties.

SHAANXI OFFICIAL JAILED FOR FALSE ACCUSATION

HK280337 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Excerpts] (Di Bingcheng), former deputy section head in the fire-fighting office of the provincial public security department, made false accusations against and framed others, causing serious consequences. Under the personal concern and urging of a responsible comrade of the provincial CPC Committee, the departments concerned have unearthed the facts of (Di Bingcheng's) crime. On 10 March, the people's court of Lianhu District in Xian City sentenced (Di) to 3 years in jail for the crime of making a false accusation. Two others with responsibility in the case have been disciplined by the party and government.

The provincial CPC Committee issued a notice to all party organizations on 27 March, demanding that the party-member cadres and the political and legal cadres and policemen regard the case as an example of education by negative example, seriously sum up its experiences and lessons, and resolutely curb the malpractice of laying false charges against others.

In 1982, a dispute developed between (Di Bingcheng) and (Yang Dongyun), manager of the Xian Beiguan District battery plant, over problems of environmental pollution at the plant. To attain his personal aims, (Di Bingcheng) started in November 1983 to lay false charges against (Yang Dongyun) and to frame him. In March 1984, (Di) personally compiled some exposure material fabricating charges against (Yang Dongyun). (Di) said that the evidence against (Yang) was ironclad, there was plenty of circumstantial evidence also. He demanded that the public security organs severely punish (Yang Dongyun).

(Di) also took advantage of his standing as a public security cadre and made use of improper relationships to instruct the people's police to keep (Yang's) movements under surveillance.

Due to the false case fabricated by (Di Bingcheng), plus serious bureaucratism and extreme lack of responsibility in work in the departments concerned, distinctions between [words indistinct] were blurred, and (Yang Dongyun) was sentenced to 3 years' education through labor in August 1984.

In July 1985, when the principal responsible comrade of the provincial CPC Committee received a letter of appeal from (Yang Dongyun), he demanded that the departments concerned clarify the proceedings and the whys and wherefores of the case. The provincial and city political and legal departments organized a work group to carry out a serious reexamination of the case. In the end (Yang Dongyun) was rehabilitated and the verdict on him corrected. (Di Bingcheng), who had made false accusations, was punished as he deserved.

SHAANXI READJUSTS GRAIN PROCUREMENT POLICIES

HK280241 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Excerpts] Shaanxi is readjusting the grain purchase and sales policies this year in order to further perfect the grain contract purchase system. The main aspects of the readjustment are that the contract purchase quota is reduced and the amount to be purchased at negotiated prices is to be increased, contractual management methods are to be instituted for grain purchase, sales, and allocation, handling charges are to be increased for grain shipments, and grain is to linked to chemical fertilizer.

Following the readjustment, the province's grain contract purchase quota for the year is to be reduced compared with last year, while the amount of grain to be purchased at negotiated prices by agencies commissioned by the state is to be increased.

As a result of this policy readjustment, the enthusiasm of the peasants for producing and selling grain can be protected and encouraged.

Beginning this year, the provincial authorities will institute contractual management for all prefectures and cities for grain purchase, sales, and shipments. Grain purchase and sales quotas are to be firmed up for all prefectures, cities, and counties, and decision-making powers are to be delegated to the prefectures and cities.

Prefectures, cities, and counties can gain more economic income for purchasing grain in excess of the contract and negotiated price purchase quotas.

To ensure that areas shipping grain elsewhere do not suffer loss, beginning this year the state is increasing handling charges for grain shipments. This will be done in a unified way.

The state will award high-quality chemical fertilizer at par to peasant households and agricultural production units that sign grain purchase contracts, and will also give them priority in agricultural loans.

XINJIANG COMMENTARY ON IMPROVING PARTY STYLE

HK270839 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 23 Mar 86

[Station commentary; "Dare To Tackle Tough Problems in Improving Party Style"]

[Excerpt] The importance of improving party style has been discussed frequently over the years. Now, the cadres and masses urgently require party organizations at all levels to fulfill their worlds. They should dare to tackle tough problems and really handle cases where people have engaged in malpractices and violated the law and discipline.

Following the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our party style has really undergone a great change. However, unhealthy tendencies and corrupt practices, which have been complained about frequently by the masses, still exist. Why is it that some people turn a deaf ear to the repeated injunctions of the central authorities? Why is it that some unhealthy tendencies become more, instead of less, serious.

There are many reasons for this situation when judged from the objective viewpoint. It is just as the CPC Central Committee pointed out, however. Over a long period of time some of our leading organs and leading cadres did not dare handle problems concerning unhealthy tendencies. Second, they spoke a lot about it but did little practical work. Therefore, unhealthy tendencies could easily spread.

This has exposed the crux of the problem. Facts have shown that it is impossible to quickly promote a fundamental change for the better in party style: If we only chant the slogan of improving party style but do little work or are not brave enough to tackle tough problems; if we are not determined to deal with the people and cases that involve unhealthy tendencies and violations of law and discipline; and if we do not educate the cadres and people who engage in malpractices.

At present, the CPC Central Committee is determined to carry out this work and, in addition, it promptly implemented it. Following a recent rally held in Beijing, the CPC Central Committee handled a number of cases immediately, and punished some cadres at the middle and senior ranks. This shows that the party takes a serious attitude toward party style and advocates practical work. Under these circumstances, leading cadres at all levels must dispel their worries and be bold in tackling tough problems, so as to make their proper contributions to improving party style.

APPEALS FOR CHANGE REPORTED AT KMT MEETING

HK310721 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0358 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Commentary by reporter Wang Jie: "A Wave of Appeals For Change Surges High on the Eve of the 3d Plenary Session of the 12th KMT Central Committee"]

[Text] Beijing, 27 Mar (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- The 3d Plenary Session of the 12th KMT Central Committee will be held in Taibei on 29 March. Over the past 6 months or so public opinion inside and outside the island has urged the KMT to change over to new ways. This has now gained impetus. Members of the legislative branch jointly addressed inquiries, scholars held meetings, and newspapers and periodicals published relevant articles. They have voiced opinions one after another. The most powerful voice they have raised is to urge the authorities to change their policy toward the mainland.

Public opinion in Taiwan has maintained that the KMT's "3d Plenary Session" will be held under "unprecedentedly difficult conditions." The political situation is "dangerous and very difficult," economic development is "fluctuating," and public order in society has "increasingly deteriorated." Diplomatically, Taiwan is "increasingly isolated." Under such circumstances, men of insight, inside and outside the island, have given forthright admonitions one after another, and earnestly hope that the KMT will discuss "matters of primary importance on reforms" at the session, so that Taiwan can "extricate itself from a difficult position, and open up a new path." Just as Taiwan's CHUNG-KUO SHIH-PAO [CHINA TIMES] has pointed out, people hope that the KMT will "truly review what happened in the past, correct mistakes, overcome defects, work out major plans for the future, gain instant results, and put the plans into effect."

The appeal for changes presented by the masses has involved a wide series of important questions, including key political guiding principles, specific policies, or even certain conservative and outmoded "concepts." Taiwan's MING-CHUNG JIH-PAO has repeatedly published editorials, putting forward proposals to the third plenary session for "four changes" in policy toward the mainland. These four changes include a change in implementing "policy" toward the mainland, a change in the method of "study;" a change in the island's propaganda and "education" concerning the mainland; and a change in "attitude" toward the mainland. While expounding the necessity of change, the editorials point out that after the implementation of the policy of opening to the outside world, "everything is changing" on the mainland, and Taiwan is the first to be "affected" by such "changes." The editorials emphasize: "If we stand still and refuse to make progress, or think that we can remain the same despite all the changes, the consequences will be too ghastly to contemplate." They also maintain that with regard to our "methods" of studying the mainland, we should change previous measures of "paying too much attention to the inside of things," so that we can avoid overestimating ourselves and underestimating the mainland. Otherwise, there will be "a great deviation in our policy decisions." Besides, we should overcome the previous "morbid fear of communism." We should "allow our people to visit the mainland," and "never fear what happens on the mainland."

We are now in an era of development and change. The mainland is changing, and so is the situation in the straits, and the common aspiration of the people on the island. The policy of opening to the outside world implemented by the mainland has produced great influence across the world. Some international figures maintain that "thanks to the policy of opening to the outside world, the mainland has become enlightened and progressive, and is full of vitality." This has substantially promoted its economy, trade, cultural exchanges, and tourism. There's no denying the fact that the policy of opening to the outside world has also exerted influence over Taiwan, and attracted Taiwan's industrialists and businessmen.

Some scholars are optimistic about the economic structural reform on the mainland, and believe that the "mainland will become systemized and stable" as a result of reform, and that reform will "bring about the development of production and construction, and the enhancement of people's living standards." They also believe that if the present situation continues to develop over a long period of time, "both sides of the straits will gradually trust each other, and narrow their gaps," and that "this will produce the practical result of scoring successes when conditions are ripe with regard to the problem of peaceful reunification." Some other scholars have pointed out practically that the reform on the mainland has constituted a "severe test of peaceful reunification" to the Taiwan authorities.

With regard to foreign relations, Taiwan is also facing the same severe test. Latin American countries which were formerly in the "diplomatic stronghold," have abandoned Taiwan one after another, and some partners in Asia are also intending to "drift away." Even some "old friends" in the United States are changing their attitud People throughout the island show their concern for and are sensitive to this matter. Official circles are in constant fear, whereas scholars discuss the issue one after another. Some people think that "vitally important changes" have taken place in U.S. policy toward Taiwan. Instead of "hating the CPC," the United States is "becoming friendly to it." It has regarded Taiwan as a "stumbling block" rather than an "ally." Some other people point out that it is "not easy for Taiwan to maintain its present relations with the United States," unless it changes its "basic policy." Therefore, people urge the Taiwan authorities to "work out a rational policy toward the mainland."

In the face of an ever changing reality, the Taiwan authorities have still persisted in their rigid policy. Recently, some concerned leaders have reiterated that the policy of "three-nots" will remain unchanged. Furthermore, they put forward the "principle of four no-changes." That is, the "nationalist system" and "opposing communism" will remain unchanged, and there will be no compromise with the CPC, and so on. Their purpose in doing so is perhaps to set the tone for the "third plenary session," or to blot out the voices appealing for change, which have become increasingly loud.

Nevertheless, people do not neglect some facts which have happened on the island. For example, they know about the "pattern of Olympic Games," and "non-interference in entrepot trade" and so on. In addition, the authorities seem to turn a blind eye to certain contacts between relatives from both sides of the straits. Of course, such insignificant flexibility does not conform with what the situation and popular feelings have demanded. However, one point is, at least, clear: In such a changing situation, the KMT cannot but readjust its steps.

Nothing in the world remains unchanged. There are various kinds of things in the world. Change is absolute, whereas no change is relative. Society, life, and nature are always changing. It is only the KMT which sings the song of "no change," and states that it will "stand still despite all changes." The main theme of the "third plenary session" this time is to "inherit the past and usher in the future, and open up a bright future for the state." At present, things in the world are changing, and people do desire a change. If everything "remains unchanged," how will Taiwan open up its "bright future?" If everything "remains unchanged," how can the KMT protect itself and retain its position? A doctor of philosophy in Taiwan told the KMT: "History has repeatedly proven that in the face of a changing situation, only by blazing new trails can one find a way out. Sticking to the old ways only means bottling ourselves up." His remarks afford food for thought. The KMT should think about this seriously.

KMT CENTRAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE HOLDS SESSION

OW311247 Taipei CNA in English 0940 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Taipei, March 21 (CNA) -- The 12th Central Advisory Committee of the Kuomintang held its third conference Monday morning with Gen. Ho Ying-chin acting as chairman. The committee, consisting of 147 party leaders headed by Madame Chiang Kai-shek, discussed 17 subjects ranging from the modernization of traditional Chinese medicine to the Three Principles of the People. In the afternoon, the party's Central Committee will resume discussions on the party's work programs and hear reports on the various aspects of governmental affairs. The party meeting will adjourn late Monday afternoon after the election of a new Central Standing Committee. Most of the 31 incumbents are expects to remain in the policy-making arm of the ruling party. The few who will be replaced are likely to be those who no longer hold important government posts.

President Chiang Ching-kuo will preside over the closing ceremony of the meeting.

CHIANG CHING-KUO ADDRESSES KMT CLOSING SESSION

OW010309 Taipei CNA in English 0235 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Taipei, March 31 (CNA) -- President Chiang Ching-kuo, in his capacity as chairman of the ruling Kuomintang, has called on all party members to break through adversities ahead and work out concrete measures to promote national development. Chiang made the call while presiding over the closing ceremony of the third plenum of the Kuomintang's 12th Central Committee at the Chungshan Building on Yangmingshan in suburban Taipei. Speaking to some 900 participants in the third plenum, the largest Kuomintang gathering in two years, Chiang said he hopes that Kuomintang members will do their best to pool together the strength of the Chinese people at home and abroad to jointly fight for the goal of reunifying China under the three principles of the people.

Later, Chiang asked Mah Soo-lay to read a message on his behalf. In this message entitled "A New Milestone to Victory," Chiang said first of all, he would like to express his sincere gratitude to all members of the Central Committee and the Central Advisory Committee for providing many valuable suggestions to improve the Kuomintang's operations during the three-day meeting. He urged all party members to understand more about the problems at the grassroots levels and work out solutions to those problems so as to push ahead the national development.

Ideologically, Chiang said all party members should consolidate their belief that the three principles of the people, which were conceived by Dr. Sun Yat-sen based on benevolence, are superior to communism and are the best buidelines for building China into an advanced nation of the people, by the people and for the people. At last, the ruling party chairman said he hopes all party members will become more determined to follow Dr. Sun's and the late president Chiang Kai-shek's directives on national recovery and to search inside themselves for the courage to carry out all difficult tasks while the nation is striving to achieve higher goals.

Resolution Passed

OW010543 Taipei CNA in English 0241 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Taipei, March 31 (CNA) -- After three days of heated discussion, the Third Plenary session of the Kuomintang's [KMT] 12th Central Committee and the Central Advisory Committee ended successfully Monday. The session opened last Saturday at the Chungshan Building on Yangminshan in suburban Taipei with the participation of nearly 900 ranking KMT officials.

Besides electing new members to the Central Standing Committee, a resolution with the theme of "reviwing the past and planning for the future to create a promising tomorrow for this nation" was approved during the three-day session. Besides praising the KMT Central Committee and the five yuans of the central government respectively for the achievements they have made in promoting party affairs and national development over the past years, the resolution also mapped out guidelines for the renovation of party affairs and government administration in the future. It emphasized that the ruling party is determined to pursue an overall renovation to help create a new vista for this nation.

The session also approved 28 proposals submitted by members of the Central Committee and Central Advisory Committee. These proposals are mostly related to the national policy on the economy and culture, education, social affairs and promotion of Chinese herbal medicine.

SPOKESMAN RULES OUT NUCLEAR ARMS DEVELOPMENT

[Text] According to a 28 March CHUNWEN SHE [MILITARY NEWS AGENCY] dispatch from Taipei, Ministry of National Defense military spokesman Major General Chang Hui-yuan has reiterated that the Sky Bow [tian gong 1131 1712] all-purpose defense missile, which was successfully launched recently, can be used in real combat. Chang Hui-yuan also emphatically pointed out: In accordance with our country's established national defense policy, we will never develop or manufacture nuclear weapons. Maj. Gen. Chang Hui-yuan solemnly made the above remarks at a military press conference today when answering questions raised by reporters concerning the Sky Bow missile and the development of nuclear weapons.

U.S. CAUTIONED AGAINST WRONG APPROACH TO ROK

OW301244 Taipei International Service in English 0200 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Station commentary]

[Text] White House spokesman Larry Speakes said Monday: The United States has urged the South Koreans to find a solution to their political problems without resorting to violence.

Commenting on reports from Seoul that some 20,000 people staged the largest antigovernment demonstration in 6 years in Pusan to press their demand for democratic reform, Speakes said: The United States has always urged reconciliation and dialogues. He added here, and we quote: We are glad the Government of Korea had allowed the meeting to take place by opponents. We certainly propose a peaceful resolution to anything and condemn violence, unquote.

The White House statement sounded like interference in the internal affairs of a sovereign state. It may also be interpreted as a warning to the government and the opposition in South Korea not to resort to violence. Whether one likes it or not, the United States cannot stay completely out of the internal politics of its free world allies because American interests are often inseparably intertwined with theirs. Therefore, the question is not whether the United States should be hands-off about the domestic affairs of its allies. Rather, it is a question of whether Washington exercises its influence judiciously.

International politics being what it is, there is no way for the United States to strictly observe the (?nicety) of non-interference. History shows that America uses its clout quite often to influence the internal politics of other nations. But, more often than not, the United States uses the wrong approach, which resulted in the great harm to the American nation as well as the countries involved.

The most notable American failure in this respect is the fall of the Chinese mainland. If Washington had not been taken in by the Chinese Communists as their fellow travelers during the 1st years of the Second World War and the immediate postwar years, and had given full support to the government of President Chiang Kai-shek, the Chinese mainland would have remained a loyal member of the democratic camp, and the threat from the Soviet Union would have been more containable.

Probably the United States has learned a lesson from its past failure. It seems to be acting more cautiously in dealing with political disputes of its allies. In the Korean case, the Chon Tu-hwan government is not certainly a paragon of democracy. But nobody can deny the fact that Seoul is fully justified to take precautionary measures in view of the threat it faces across the demilitarized zone. If the current political dispute in South Korea gets out of hand, its security would be gravely jeopardized. Neither the government nor the opposition would be the victor in such a scenario. By warning the Koreans not to resort to violence, the United States is dropping a broad hint to the Korean opposition that it cannot expect American support if they try to topple President Chon Tu-hwan by taking to the streets.

U.S. POLICY ON NICARAGUAN CONTRAS ENDORSED

OW010915 Taipei International Service in English 0200 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Station commentary]

[Text] U.S. President Ronald Reagan really believes that, if the United States does not provide assistance to the contras of Nicaragua, the Sandinistas will take over and Central America will be plunged into a communist versus anticommunist war. In that event, the Americans would not have much choice. Before the Vietnam War, which was 10,000 miles away, they lost only because they had one hand tied behind their back. Besides, the Sandinistas are not exactly on a fighting par with the North Vietnamese or even the Viet Cong. Americans could not doubt win the war in Nicaragua. However, Reagan said no dispatch of troops is contemplated. He asks only 100 million U.S. dollars to help the contras and assures Congress and American voters that this is sufficient to prevent the Soviet Union from establishing a beachhead in North America.

Regardless of the stand of Congress, President Reagan is not going to give up trying to save Nicaragua from Communism and the enemies of the United States that hope to use Central America as a beachhead. He rejectes the Democratic position that the Sandinistas can be negotiated with, saying this has been tried ten times without any progress toward peace. Democrats want to try more talks and warn that, if Americans are used to train the contras, they inevitably will be drawn into conflict.

It is the memory of Vietnam that brings votes against Reagan. President Reagan has recently toned down the harshness of rhetoric addressed to the Soviet Union. At the same time, there is no doubt that his view of Communism has not changed, and that he is prepared to take a firm stand in Central America or anywhere else red aggression becomes a threat. The U.S. Congress is not necessarily opposed to controlling Communism in Central America, but has its doubt about the military feasibility of assigning this task to the contras. Other Central American republics share that feeling. Of four neighbors of Nicaragua, three or four are said to oppose sending military aid to the contras. The four are Costa Rica, El Salvador, Honduras, and Guatemala. Possibly Central American states pose no serious threat to the United States, but the Sandinistas are dedicated to the thesis that the road to victory leads to Mexico, which is an entirely different proposition.

The Republic of China is of the view that President Reagan is right about the Communist threat. Our only lack of understanding concerns his exemption of the Chinese Communists as the danger, not only to the United States, but to free Asia. There are no good and bad communists -- all are aggressors who speak the destruction of the free world. None of them can be trusted. President Reagan's stand would be more consistent if he linked Red China with the Soviet Union, as he does the Sandinistas with Castro.

FURTHER COOPERATION WITH PHILIPPINES NOTED

OW281101 Taipei CNA in English 1006 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Taipei, March 28 (CNA) -- The Ministry of Foreign Affairs welcomed Friday the assignment of Joaquin Roces Sr., former publisher of the MANILA TIMES newspaper, as the new representative to the Philippines' Asian Exchange Center in Taipei. Spokesman Cheyne C.Y. Chiu said Friday at a new conference that since the setup of the new Philippine Government, the Republic of China [ROC] has, through various channels, expressed its sincerity in furthering cooperative programs between the two countries. Philippine Tourism Minister Jose Antonio Gonzales' recent visit here indicated the new relations between two countries are developing, Chiu said.

The government has always concerned itself about the safety of the ROC fishing boats which were detained in the Philippines marine zone that they mistakenly entered owing to engine trouble, irresistible natural disasters or other unexpectable reasons, Chiu said. The crewmembers of the detained fishing boats have been taken care by the ROC personnel stationed at the Pacific Economic and Cultural Center in Manila. Most of them were released in a short time after the personnel managed the matter with the Philippine authorities, he said. Since 1981, he pointed out, tha 102 of the 103 ROC fishing vessels detained by the Philippine patrolling ships were freed. The ROC personnel are trying their best in seeking the release of the remaining boat and its five crewmen, he added.

FOREIGN MINISTRY SPOKESMAN HOLDS WEEKLY BRIEFING

Denies U.S. Monitoring Soviets

OW021052 Beijing XINHUA in English 1033 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 2 (XINHUA) -- A Foreign Ministry spokesman reiterated at the weekly news briefing here today that projects of cooperation between China and the United States on research of seismology "are of the nature of scientific research." The projects were carried out in accordance with the Protocol of Scientific and Technological Cooperation on Seismic Study between the United States and China, he added.

When asked on the claim in the U.S. side that China and the United States had cooperated in installing seismic equipment in China, the spokesman pointed out that the Sino-U.S. research projects has nothing to do and is not to be mixed up with a groundless report by the U.S. WASHINGTON POST March 19. The paper reported about the so-called discussion between the United States and China on the installation of seismic equipment in China to monitor the Soviet underground nuclear tests. On March 20, the Foreign Ministry spokesman refuted the report saying it was groundless.

Normalizing PRC-USSR Relations

OW021047 Beijing XINHUA in English 1029 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 2 (XINHUA) -- A Foreign Ministry spokesman said today the removal of obstacles to the normalization of Sino-Soviet relations will not harm the interests of any third country. "The normalization of Sino-Soviet relations after the removal of major obstacles is precisely to correct those wrongdoings which harm the interests of a third country and will benefit all the parties concerned," he stressed.

The spokesman made these remarks in commenting on the statement in Mikhail Gorbachev's political report to the 27th Party Congress that the improvement of Sino-Soviet relations should not harm the interests of a third country at the request of the correspondent. The spokesman said that "not to harm the interests of a third country" should not have a specific interpretation.

The spokesman also confirmed that at the request of the Soviet side, I.A. Rogachev, director of the first department of Far East Asian Affairs of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Soviet Union, and his aides came to Beijing as the guests of the Soviet Embassy in China. He held consultations with Li Daoyu, director of the Department of International Affairs and Conferences of China's Foreign Ministry, on the outcome of the 40th session of the General Assembly of the United Nations on March 22 and 25, he said. During his stay in China, the spokesman added, Vice-Foreign Minister Qian Qichen gave a banquet in honor of Rogachev.

Praises Chiang on 'One China'

OW020856 Beijing XINHUA in English 0850 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 2 (XINHUA) -- A Foreign Ministry spokesman today appreciated Mr. Chiang Ching-kuo's one China stand. Responding to questions of correspondents at the weekly news briefing, the spokesman said "We appreciate Mr. Chiang Ching-kuo's remarks 'there is only one China and China is bound to be reunified.'"

"We believe that the "one China, two systems" is the realistic approach to peaceful reunification," the spokesman added. Commenting on Chiang's recent high-noted anti-communism remarks, the spokesman said "This is what we expected. He had to say so."

Wu Xueqian To Visit Japan

OW020900 Beijing XINHUA in English 0856 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing April 2 (XINHUA) -- Wu Xueqian, Chinese state councillor and minister of foreign affairs, will pay a visit to Japan from April 11 to 18 at the invitation of Japanese Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe. This was announced by a Foreign Ministry spokesman here this afternoon at the weekly news briefing. The spokesman said, during his visit, Wu will hold talks with Foreign Minister Abe on bilateral relations and international issues of common concern. He will also meet with Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone, personages from political and economic circles of Japan and some old friends.

Burmese Prime Minister To Visit

OW020920 Beijing XINHUA in English 0913 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 2 (XINHUA) -- U Maung Maung Kha, prime minister of the Socialist Republic of the Union of Burma, will pay an official goodwill visit to China from April 10 to 18 at the invitation of Premier Zhao Ziyang. This was announced by a spokesman for the Chinese Foreign Ministry at the weekly news briefing here this afternoon.

U Maung Maung Kha visited China in 1979. The spokesman expressed his conviction that his forthcoming visit to China would further enhance the Pauk Phaw friendship between the two peoples and friendly relations and cooperation between the two countries. He disclosed that during his visit to China, U Maung Maung Kha will visit Beijing, Tianjin, Guangzhou and the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone. He noted that the friendly relations and cooperation between China and Burma have developed continuously over recent years and the leaders of the two countries exchanged visits frequently.

The economic cooperation between the two countries has developed smoothly. The construction of Rangoon-Syriam highway and railway bridge, a project of economic cooperation between the two sides, is planned to begin this year, and the first joint inspection of Sino-Burmese border will be over in the near future, he said.

No Decision on Asian Games

OW021253 Tokyo KYODO in English 1244 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 2 KYODO -- China has not yet made a final decision on whether to participate in the Asian Games in Seoul this autumn, Foreign Ministry spokesman Ma Yuzhen told newsmen Wednesday. The matter is still under study at the offices concerned, the spokesman said. The 10th Asian Games will be held in Seoul from September 20 to October 5.

UN SECRETARY GENERAL WELCOMES GORBACHEV PROPOSAL

OW020806 Beijing XINHUA in English 0655 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] United Nations, April 1 (XINHUA) -- U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar today expressed cautious welcome to the latest proposal by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev on a ban on all nuclear testing. "The prohibition of all nuclear test explosions would significantly limit both the qualitative and quantitative development of nuclear weapons," said the secretary-general in a statement distributed here. "In view of this," he said, "All efforts towards achieving a ban acceptable to all parties concerned are welcome and deserve careful study.

He said he felt that "in view of its relevance in the process of nuclear disarmament, the question of the conclusion of a nuclear test ban continues to be of great importance."

Meanwhile, Soviet ambassador to the U.N. Yuriy Dubinin told a press conference here today that Moscow hopes the United States "has not said the final word on the Soviet proposal" to discuss with U.S. President Ronald Reagan for an end to all nuclear testing.

The Reagan administration has rejected the proposal made by Gorbachev on the Soviet television last Saturday on the ground that a moratorium cannot be counted on to lead to the enhanced security desired. Secretary of State George Shultz said that the U.S. would prefer doing things quietly through diplomatic channels rather than through public propaganda.

Dubinin stressed at the news conference that Gorbachev's proposal was not designed to score propaganda points nor did his idea that the Soviet and American leaders meet in an European capital now supercede the summit in the U.S. later this year which both sides had agreed upon earlier.

Washington and Moscow have so far failed to reach a definite date for the Soviet-American summit in the United States, according to diplomatic sources here today. The Soviets have rejected an American-proposed date in June for fear that the United States might put pressure on the Soviet Union for give-ups in the intermediate nuclear forces talks then going on in Geneva. While President Reagan is said to be in disagreement with the Soviet-proposed date in November "because the President would not like to see the U.S. congressional election be disturbed as a result of Gorbachev's speeches to the American democrats." The sources said that the most possible date for the summit now appears to be either in August or December.

Dubinin disclosed that his country had proposed through diplomatic channels that the United States and the Soviet Union discuss a comprehensive test ban in April but so far had not received a "positive response" from the United States. Noting that since World War II the United States, Britain and France have carried out 962 nuclear tests as against 565 by the Soviet Union, the Soviet envoy made it clear that Moscow could not extend "interminably" its current ban on nuclear testing because, in his words, the Soviets are being "damaged militarily by not testing."

GORBACHEV COMMENTS ON U.S. APPROACH TO SUMMIT

OW101318 Beijing XINHUA in English 0236 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, March 31 (XINHUA) -- Soviet leader Mikahil Gorbachev urged U.S. President Ronald Reagan to "take a responsible approach" to his proposal of a summit on banning nuclear tests. In his speech Monday at a Kremlin dinner honoring Mozambican President Samora Moises Machel, Gorbachev brought up the proposal of an ad hoc summit with Reagan in a European capital to discuss ways to ban nuclear tests but he did not mention Washington's initial rejection of his initiatives, which were unveiled two days ago.

"Today there is a realistic opportunity to show goodwill in practice rather than in words," Gorbachev said. "We expect Washington to take a responsible approach to our proposal." The Soviet leader strongly attacked Washington for what he called U.S. interference in other countries' affairs and accused Washington of acting with cynical cruelty. "Look how openly the U.S. imperialists are interfering in the affairs of Nicaragua, Angola, Libya and some other countries. Look at the cynical cruelty with which they act," Gorbachev said.

The Soviet Union will continue to support Mozambique which is facing "relentless pressure" from Washington, Gorbachev assured President Machel, who arrived in Moscow Sunday for a five-day visit.

SOVIET OFFICIAL CITED ON NUCLEAR TEST BAN PROPOSAL

OW011743 Beijing XINHUA in English 1512 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, April 1 (XINHUA) -- A senior Soviet official said today Gorbachev's proposed summit meeting in a European capital on nuclear test ban is not intended to supplant the planned Soviet-U.S. summit in Washington this year. First Deputy Foreign Minister Georgiy Korniyenko told a press conference here that the Washington summit, agreed upon by the two leaders in Geneva, "has not been withdrawn from the agenda." However, he said there is no "concrete planning" for a Washington summit and that the Soviet Union continues to insist there be a real chance of a specific accord on arms control before the second meeting is scheduled.

Korniyenko reiterated Gorbachev's statement made Saturday on national television that the Soviet's unilateral test suspension, scheduled to end on March 31, would remain in effect as long as the United States did not conduct a test. The next U.S. test is set for this month. The deputy minister repeated Moscow's refusal to accept Washington's invitation to the Soviets to inspect U.S. nuclear tests in Nevada.

U.S. President Reagan had turned down Gorbachev's proposal of a test ban summit, saying a superpower meeting should "deal with the entire range" of U.S.-Soviet relations.

However, Korniyenko said the Kremlin received no formal reply through the diplomatic channels and added, "we would like to hope that Mr. Reagan has not said his final word."

The Soviet media today described the U.S. response to Gorbachev's televised speech as "not to be optimistic about." The U.S. administration's "negative response indicates it does not want to reduce nuclear arms," one paper charged. A commentary in the party paper "PRAVDA" said Gorbachev's speech has offered a new chance which the United States should not miss.

HU YAOBANG MEETS DPRK NODONG SINMUN GROUP

OW011512 Beijing XINHUA in English 1444 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 1 (XINHUA) -- Hu Yaobang, a top leader of the Communist Party of China (CPC), said here today that China has achieved fairly coordinated development in various fields since the middle of last year. He attributed this to the efforts to correct some improper methods used in economic work in the first half of 1985.

Hu, who is general secretary of the CPC Central Committee, made these remarks at a meeting with a delegation from the Korean newspaper "NODONG SINMUN", led by its Editor-in-Chief, Yi Sung-pok, here this afternoon. Hu told the visitors that China's economic situation this year is excellent. The draft Seventh Five-Year Plan for Economic and Social Development is being examined and discussed by the ongoing meetings of the National People's Congress and the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference.

He said that coordinated development, however, does not mean there are no more difficulties or problems. China's economic relations are not yet in complete order, its infrastructure is still rather inadequate, its production of raw materials falls short of the demand, and its technological level is quite low. "To solve these problems demands painstaking efforts," he added.

He predicted that it will take China at least 30 to 40 years to get close to the world advanced level. However, the Chinese people are confident of catching up.

Yi, who is also a member of the Central Committee of the Korean Workers Party, said that the members of his delegation have seen with their own eyes the achievements of the Chinese people in their socialist construction. He said that great changes have taken place in Chinese factories and rural areas in the past five to six years. China has laid a foundation for its modernization. Yi said that both the Korean and Chinese peoples wish to continue their friendship from generation to generation. Journalists of the two countries should serve as a bridge between the two peoples, contributing to the development of their friendship.

Hu reiterated the consistent stand of the CPC and the Chinese Government for strengthening Sino-Korean friendship. He said that the Chinese and Korean peoples have shared their destinies in the past few decades. History has decided that the two peoples have to continue sharing their destinies, he noted.

Qian Liren and Tan Wenrui, director and editor-in-chief, respectively, of the "PEOPLE'S DAILY", were present on the occasion.

The delegation arrived in China March 21 at the invitation of the "PEOPLE'S DAILY". It has visited Guangzhou, Shenzhen and Shanghai.

Yi, who is also chairman of the Central Committee of the Korean Journalists union, called on Wu Lengxi, chairman of the All-China Journalists Association, here yesterday. They signed an agreement on cooperation between their two organizations.

XINHUA HOSTS KCNA DELEGATION IN BEIJING

OW011655 Beijing XINHUA in English 1440 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 1 (XINHUA) -- Guo Chaoren, deputy director-general of XINHUA NEWS AGNECY, on behalf of Director-General Mu Qing, gave a banquet for a delegation from the KOREAN CENTRAL NEWS AGENCY here this evening.

Led by Han Chong-sop deputy director-general of the Korean agency, the delegation arrived here this morning at the invitation of the host agency. In their toasts both Guo Chaoren and Han Chong-sop expressed the hope for further developing the friendship between the journalists of the two countries and cooperation between the two news agencies. This afternoon the Korean delegation visited the host agency.

JAPAN TO COUNTER SOVIET MILITARY BUILDUP

OW010954 Beijing XINHUA in English 0841 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Tokyo, April 1 (XINHUA) -- Japan will undertake a large-scale restructuring of its Ground Self-Defense Force to counter a ongoing Soviet military buildup in the Far East, says a leading Japanese newspaper. NIHON KEIZAI SHIMBUN, or the ECONOMIC NEWS, today quoted figures released by the U.S. defense ministry on March 25 showing that the number of Soviet troops stationed in the Far East rose to 53 divisions, four of which pose a serious threat to the northern islands and the Chishima Islands of Japan.

Guided by the concept of "destroying the threat from the north in the frontline," the plan under consideration will concentrate on restructuring the current formation of Japan's 13 divisions and improving mobilization procedures and the effectiveness of missile units. A group studying details of the restructuring will be set up within the council of staff of the Ground Self-Defense Forces, and a comprehensive plan will come out in July this year.

LANGE SAYS NEW ZEALAND TO BOOST TRADE WITH PRC

OW010904 Beijing XINHUA in English 0750 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Wellington, April 1 (XINHUA) -- New Zealand is looking forward to booming its trade with China, though it would be unrealistic to expect the same with Indonesia, which had been ravaged by declining oil prices. This was stated by Prime Minister David Lange in Auckland airport Monday after a two-week tour of Indonesia, China and the Philippines. Lange said that New Zealand will sell more meat to the Philippines after the disbandment of what he described as a corrupt meat-buying company which had run under the deposed Marcos regime.

The prime minister said that his visits to the three Asian countries were very successful. Major local newspapers today carried detailed stories about Lange's activities in China, highlighting the significance of his visit in the context of furthering the existing friendly relations between the two countries.

PHILIPPINES PRESIDENT FAVORS ACTIVE ROLE IN ASEAN

OW011922 Beijing XINHUA in English 1613 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Manila, April 1 (XINHUA) -- Philippine President Corazon Aquino said here today that she considered a more active role by her governmnet in the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) very necessary. Mrs. Aquino made this statement during her talks with visiting Singapore Foreign Minister Suppiah Dhanabalan.

After his meeting with the president, Dhanabalan told reporters that in the meeting Mrs. Aquino expressed her surprise that for the last two years or so there was a rather subdued role played by the Philippines in ASEAN, and she saw a more active role by her government in the future. Dhanabalan said they also discussed the proposal to hold an ASEAN summit. President Aquino was favorable to the proposal. They agreed that there should be a summit. Dhanabalan said ASEAN officials are meeting this week to work out details of the next ASEAN summit meeting. He said it will be the turn of the Philippines to host the summit which was last held in Kuala Lumpur.

Dhanabalan said the presence of U.S. military bases in the Philippines is "very important to regional peace and security." However, he said that it should be decided by the Filipino people and their government whether the bases stayed or not. Dhanabalan left here today after a three-day visit to the Philippines.

PALAU ISLANDS OPEN DOOR TO U.S. MILITARY BASES

OW311326 Beijing XINHUA in English 1317 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 31 (XINHUA) -- Palau, a group of Pacific islands, has decided to open the door for American military bases in exchange for partial independence and more U.S. aid, according to reports reaching here Sunday. The decision has, in fact, allowed the United States to complete an arc of defense installations in the western Pacific, comprising also the Northern Marianas, Guam and the Marshall Islands.

Palau, a United Nations trust territory under U.S. administration for the past 40 years, voted last month to accept a "compact of free association" which will give it semi-independence but leave defense to the Pentagon for at least 50 years. Palau's President Lazarus Salii described the deal, worth more than three billion U.S. dollars in aid, as vital in helping turn his islands into a "paradise on earth" in the next decade. Under the agreement, two strategic areas on Palau islands will be carved initially for exclusive use by U.S. military forces.

VANUATU CONSIDERING FISHING PACT WITH USSR

OW011207 Beijing XINHUA in English 0712 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Canberra, April 1 (XINHUA) --Vanuatu, a small South Pacific island country, is considering to give Soviet vessels access to the waters of its maritime resources zone, following the fishing contract signed between the central Pacific nation Kiribati and the Soviet Union last year. A report reaching here today quoted a spokesman for Vanuatu's Prime Minister Father Walter Lini as saying that a committee had been established under the foreign affairs department to seek further information from the Soviets relating to the estimates of the country's tuna resources and royalties. "The government will be examining every aspect of this matter before a final decision is made," he said.

General Secretary of the ruling Vanuaaku Party Barak Sope said he expected the deal to be concluded by mid-year.

He said Vanuatu was keen to conclude an agreement with the Soviets because of the poor record of the United States in negotiating equitable fishing contracts with the South Pacific countries. "They (the U.S. fishermen) have a history of ignoring our maritime boundaries and they like to bully the people around," he added.

Situated at the northeast of Australia, Vanuatu is an archipelago of 73 islands with a population of about 140,000. At the moment, Vanuatu has no diplomatic relations with either the U.S. or the U.S.S.R. The Soviet Union has signed a 12-month fishing contract worth 2.4 million U.S. dollars with Kiribati last August. It was reported that Moscow had made similar approaches to Fiji and Tuvalu, but were rejected.

MALAYSIA WELCOMES CGDK 8-POINT PROPOSAL

OW011917 Beijing XINHUA in English 1609 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Hong Kong, April 1 (XINHUA) -- Malaysian Foreign Minister Tengku Ahmad Rithauddeen said that Malaysia welcomes an eight-point proposal offered by leaders of the Coalition Government of the Democratic Kampuchea for political solution to the Kampuchea issue.

"I feel that Vietnam's unwillingness to talk is the main stumbling block to efforts for peace in Kampuchea and also in the region," Rithauddeen told reporters yesterday after talks with Gaston Sigur, U.S. assitant secretary of state for East Asian and Pacific Affairs who was on a visit to Malaysia. "Without Vietnam's involvement, there can be no peace in Kampuchea." he added.

He said, "Malaysia will study and give its fullest cooperation in solving the problem."

The eight-point proposal was put forward by Samdech Norodom Sihanouk, Son Sann and Khieu Samphan, leaders of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea on March 17. It calls on Vietnam to make a two-stage withdrawal of its troops from Kampuchea and for a four-party negotiation by the three resistance factions and the Heng Samrin regime for setting up a four-party coalition government for Kampuchea.

ITALIAN NAVAL ESCORT VESSELS VISIT SHANGHAI

OW011817 Beijing XINHUA in English 1625 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Shanghai, April 1 (XINHUA) -- Two missile escort vessels belonging to the Italian Navy arrived here today for an eight-day unofficial visit to China. The two vessels -- the "Scirocco" and the "Grecale" -- are under the command of Captain Luigi Lillo. Lillo and other officers were welcomed at a banquet given by the Shanghai Naval Unit and Shanghai Garrison of the Chinese People's Liberation Army (PLA), here this evening. Before the banquet, Deputy Mayor of Shanghai Liu Zhenyuan, commander of the Shanghai Naval Unit of the PLA Liu Xingwen and Commander of the PLA Shanghai Garrison Ba Zhongtan met Lillo and his fellow officers.

The Italian officers and men are scheduled to visit local factories, a handicrafts and arts institute and a children's palace, as well as local scenic spots. They will later visit Suzhou and Hangzhou.

PRC, ITALY TO BUILD LANGUAGE CENTER IN BEIJING

OW010940 Beijing XINHUA in English 0932 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 1 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese and Italian Governments signed a memorandum on setting up a modern Italian language training center here today. Signing the document on behalf of the two governments were Zheng Tuobin, minister of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade, and Gianni de Michelis, Italian minister of Labor and Social Security.

The training center will be set up in the Beijing University of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade [as received]. The Italian Government will supply equipment and help training teachers for the center. Before the signing, Zheng and Michelis exchanged views on further cooperation in the fields of personnel training between the two countries. Michelis and his party arrived here yesterday at the invitation of the Ministry of Labor and Personnel.

CHINESE ARTIST RECEIVES ITALIAN MEDAL IN BEIJING

OW011839 Beijing XINHUA in English 1538 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 1 (XINHUA) -- Huang Yongyu, a noted Chinese painter, has been awarded the Order of "Commendatore" by Italian president Francesco Cossiga for his achievements in fine art and contribution to cultural exchanges between China and Italy. The medal was presented to Huang by visiting Italian Minister of Labor and Social Security Gianni de Michelis at a reception given by Italian Ambassador to China Raffaele Marras here today.

Huang, a 62-year-old professor at the Central Academy of Fine Arts and Vice-Chairman of the Chinese Artists Association, is a noted specialist in engraving and Chinese painting. Speaking at the reception, he thanked the Italian people and government for the honor. Huang is going to give a one-man show in Italy in October.

Among those present at the reception were Vice-chairman of China's National People's Congress Standing Committee Huang Hua and Vice-chairman of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference Lu Zhengcao.

SFRY PRESIDENT BEGINS 7-DAY 'FORMAL FRIENDLY' VISIT

Zhang Jingfu Welcome

OW020722 Beijing XINHUA in English 0652 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 2 (XINHUA) -- President of the Presidency of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia Radovan Vlajkovic and Mrs Vlajkovic and his party flew in here this morning starting a seven-day formal friendly visit. They are guests of President Li Xiannian.

Accompanying Vlajkovic on the visit are Raif Dizdarevic, federal secretary for foreign affairs, and Mijat Sukovic, vice-president of the Federal Executive Council and chairman of the Yugoslav side of the Chinese-Yugoslav Mixed Committee for Economic, Scientific and Technical Cooperation. The Yugoslav guests were greeted at the airport by State Councillor Zhang Jinafu, Vice Foreign Minister Qian Qichen, and Yugoslav Ambassador to China Zvone Dragan.

President Li Xiannian will host a welcoming ceremony for Vlajkovic and his party this afternoon and a grand banquet for them in the Great Hall of the People this evening.

Li Xiannian Holds Welcoming Ceremony

OW021124 Beijing XINHUA in English 1106 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 2 (XINHUA) -- President Li Xiannian held a welcoming ceremony here today for Radovan Vlajkovic, president of the Presidency of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. The ceremony was held at the plaza at the east of the Great Hall of the People, surrounded by flags of China and Yugoslavia.

Vlajkovic, his wife and their visiting party arrived at the plaza in the company of State Councillor Zhang Jingfu. They were welcomed by Li, who shook hands with them and gave them his best regards. At four in the afternoon, the ceremony began with a 21-gun salute and the playing of national anthems of the two countries. Accompanied by Li, Vlajkovic reviewed a guard of honor formed by the three services of the Chinese People's Liberation Army.

Present at the ceremony were Li's wife Lin Jiamei, Geng Biao, vice-chairman of the National People's Congress Standing Committee, and Wu Xueqian, state councillor and foreign minister. Afterwards, Li and the Yugoslavian guests held talks in the Great Hall of the People.

Li met Vlajkovic in 1984 during his visit to Yugoslavia. The two old friends were very glad to meet again. On behalf of the Chinese Communist Party and Government, Chairman Deng Xiaoping, Communist Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang, and Premier Zhao Ziyang, Li welcomed Vlajkovic and his wife to visit China.

Vlajkovic conveyed to Li and other Chinese leaders regards from the presidency of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the Presidency of the Central Committee of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia.

Li said the parties and governments of the two countries have close and friendly links, and the exchange of visits between leaders of the two countries has been frequent. The increasing exchange of visits helps to enhance mutual understanding, Li added. Vlajkovic said this was very important.

[Text] Beijing, April 1 (XINHUA) — Geng Biao, Standing Committee member of the Chinese Communist Party Central Advisory Commission, met and feted here today Luis Pinerua, leader of the Venezuelan Democratic Action Party, and his wife. Geng, who is also a vice-chairman of China's National People's Congress Standing Committee, briefed Pinerua on the ongoing session of the Congress. The Pineruas arrived here March 28 at the invitation of the International Liaison Department of the CPC Central Committee. Zhu Liang, head of the liaison department, met them the next day.

UN SECRETARY GENERAL ON CENTRAL AMERICAN ISSUE

OW020918 Beijing XINHUA in English 0858 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Brasilia, April 1 (XINHUA) -- U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar said here today that the Central American problem should be solved without foreign interference. Perez de Cuellar told reporters at a news conference here that the United Nations is following developments in Central America "with great interest." He said he will strongly support efforts by the Contadora Group for a peaceful settlement to conflict in the region.

Earlier, speaking to the Brazilian Chamber of Deputies, the U.N. Secretary-General urged the industrialized nations to abolish trade protectionism so that debtor countries can increase exports and achieve a favorable balance of trade. Perez de Cuellar ended his two-day official visit to Brazil today and will now travel to Argentina on the second leg of his current Central American trip.

BRAZILIAN TRADE FAIR OPENS IN BEIJING 30 MAR

OW300834 Beijing XINHUA in English 0819 GMT 30 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 30 (XINHUA) -- A Brazilian economic trade and technology exhibition opened here today. Nearly 200 Brazilian companies have displayed their equipment and technology relating to aviation, space, energy, transport, machine-building, electronics, and light and textile industries as well as agriculture and forestry. Among the exhibits are also building machinery, telecommunications equipment and medical apparatus.

The week-long exhibition was sponsored by the Foco-fairs, Exhibition and Congresses Ltd. of Brazil. Danillo Dos Santos, President of the Brazil-China Friendship Association, attended the opening ceremony.

Brazil is China's biggest trade partner in Latin America. Bilateral trade totalled 1.44 billion U.S. dollars last year, 600 million dollars more than in 1984.

It is learnt that a Chinese trade fair is to be held in Brazil in the near future.

HU QILI JANUARY SPEECH AT CENTRAL PARTY SCHOOL

HK310635 Beijing LILUN YUEKAN in Chinese No 2, 25 Feb 86 pp 1-7

["Excerpts" of speech delivered by Comrade Hu Qili at graduation ceremony of Central Party School on 18 January 1986 -- edited transcript -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] Our revered Comrade Wang intended to invite Comrade Yaobang to today's graduation ceremony, but Comrade Yaobang has asked me to meet all of you because he has a prior appointment. On behalf of the Central Committee Secretariat, first of all allow me to extend warm congratulations to you on your successful study at the party school, and I ardently hope that you will score greater success when you return to your posts.

As you all know, the aim of study is to apply theory to practice. Therefore, today I would like to say something about the general ideas envisaged by the party Central Committee for this year's work so that you will solve problems in practical work with a better application of the Marxist stand, viewpoint and methods and justify the hopes that the party Central Committee places on you.

The first 5 years of the 1980's have passed and the second 5 years of the 1980's, which just cover the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, have started. This year is the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. What the tasks for this year? When he spoke at the meeting attended by cadres from the central party and government offices on 9 January, Comrade Yaobang put it clearly: "While paying close attention to economic construction in the second half of the 1980's, we must work hard for our economic restructuring and the building of socialist civilization and achieve some results in both so that our socialist modernization will develop in a sound, steady, and balanced way." These constitute our tasks in the second half of the 1980's and establish the orientation for this year's work. Centering on this subject and in line with the guidelines of some instructions made recently by the Central Committee Secretariat and the State Council, I will focus on the following three questions.

I. Economic Construction and Reform

1. THE CURRENT ECONOMIC SITUATION. At present, our economic situation is excellent, of a nature never seen since the founding of the republic. With regard to this question, Comrade Tian Jiyun delivered a detailed report at the cadre meeting of the central party and government offices; I believe you have read it in the newspaper. Now I would like to speak on two points for your reference.

First, the total output value of industrial and agricultural production in 1985 reached approximately 1,200 billion yuan. With this figure, I want to explain a major issue. As you know, in setting the general objective of quadrupling the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production from 1980 to the end of this century, the 12th National CPC Congress assumed that the annual growth rate in the first 10 years of this period would be below 7.2 percent, that is to say, we cannot double the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production in this 10 years, but in the second 10 years of this period, the annual growth rate will be above 7.2 percent and total industrial and agricultural output value will be quadrupled. Now it appears that it will be possible to double the growth value in the first 10 years of the period or even ahead of schedule. This is because the total industrial and agricultural output value this year will increase by 8 percent and may reach about 1,300 billion yuan. Taking the 1980 industrial and agricultural output value totaling 700 billion yuan as the base figure, there would be 1,400 billion yuan if it were doubled. Now there are 4 years left but it is only about 100 billion yuan short.

That is why we say that we may double the gross output value ahead of schedule. Of course, we should not blindly pursue a higher rate of development. What I mean is that if we do not commit any serious mistakes, it is sure that we will be able to attain the strategic objective set by the 12th National CPC Congress.

Second, the situation over the past year has shown that the measures we adopted to gradually mitigate the contradictions that emerged in our economic development sometime in the past by strengthening control of macroeconomic activities are quite suitable. The whole economic situation is changing from strain to relaxation. However, viewing the country as a whole, the investment in fixed assets is a bit excessive and consumption funds have increased considerably. Controls have been somewhat tightened, but the problem has not been solved properly. Last year the national price index was kept under about 9 percent, but the rate of price increases in major cities was a bit higher than this figure and the masses have a lot of complaints about this. Instability in our economic life remains and general social demand exceeds general supply. This situation may get worse, if there is the slightest imprudence. In controlling the money supply, it has often been found that things are done rigidly regardless of the actual conditions. Our economy can hardly develop soundly without improvements in all this.

2. FOCAL POINTS OF THIS YEAR'S ECONOMIC WORK. At a plenary session of the State Council and the national planning and economic work conference held a few days ago, Comrade Ziyang delivered an important speech on this year's economic work. He pointed out that the guiding ideology of this year's economic work is as follows: We should maintain and develop the good tendencies in the current economic work and make continuous efforts to remove instability from economic life. In further relaxing controls over microeconomic activities, we should further strengthen and improve macroeconomic control, and we should not only control general social demands but also improve general social supplies. Meanwhile, we should, on the one hand, keep the tendency of attaining an excessively high rate of development from returning and, on the other, maintain the proper rate by achieving better economic results. In a word, the economy should develop steadily, and this year we should focus on improving management, efficiency, and product quality. In line with this guiding ideology, the original plans for increasing the industrial and agricultural total output value by 8 percent this year will not change. According to an estimate made by the departments concerned, provided we do a good job, the gross output value is forecast to rise by 10 percent, and the industrial growth figures may be 10 to 12 percent. This growth rate will still be fairly high, but it would be beneficial for us, because it can avoid some new problems which might arise due to a drastic decline in economic growth. We should pay special attention to the following points in this year's economic work:

First, effectively control the scale of investment in fixed assets and readjust the investment structure. This is the key to maintaining steady economic development. The general scale of investment in fixed assets this year should, by and large, be kept at the level of last year, the investment structure should be readjusted, and projects under construction should be put in order so as to ensure the completion of the key projects in energy, transport, and raw and semifinished materials industries and projects that can earn foreign exchange through exports.

Second, control the swelling of consumption funds. The increase in consumption funds in the past few years was quicker than the expansion of production and the increase in the people's incomes. This situation should not exist for long. The actual state of our country is marked by high employment but low efficiency, and we, therefore, have to apply the low-pay system. This year we should make continuous efforts to control the scale of investment in consumption funds. At present, different trades and enterprises are competing with each other for increasing wages and welfare funds, and this practice is also found between enterprises and institutions. While conducting political and ideological work in earnest, we should adopt corresponding measures. Not only should we oppose egalitarianism in distribution, but we should also alleviate the great disparity in people's incomes.

Third, improve agricultural production. Adhering to the principle of promoting diversification of the rural economy without allowing grain production to fall off, we must further readjust the structure of agricultural production and stress production of such nonstaples as vegetables, meat, poultry, and eggs. We must exercise control over town enterprises in rural areas and render support to major projects.

Fourth, we must make further efforts to revitalize production and increase production of readily marketable goods so as to satisfy market demands and the export needs.

Fifth, promote foreign trade and exports. To achieve this, we must deal with three problems: 1) Work out a series of policies which can arouse the enthusiasm of enterprises and workers for increasing the output of export goods; 2) establish integrated industry-trading and agriculture-trading enterprises in various forms; and 3) departments in charge of foreign trade should shift the focus of work to promote sales in world markets instead of purchasing farm and sideline produce at home.

3. ARRANGEMENTS FOR REFORM OF THE ECONOMIC STRUCTURE

Last year we made a big stride forward in reform of economic structure in the urban and rural areas, and this year we should put reform on a sound basis and should not advance any ambitious plans. In following the principle of consolidation, digestion, replenishment, and improvement, we must discard the disadvantages and select the advantages and make efforts to solve some outstanding problems. At the same time, we must make preparations for taking major steps in carrying out reform in 1987 and 1988. Our tentative ideas are as follows:

No drastic measures will be adopted this year for reform of the price system. We will try as far as possible to keep the prices of vegetables and nonstaples stable. A two-track system will be applied to the prices of steel products; those listed in the state plan will be supplied at government prices and those not listed in the state plan will be subject to regulation through the market within a maximum price limit.

With regard to wage reform, we must solve some major problems left over in government offices and institutions in the execution of wage reform last year and the problem concerning the introduction of the system in which people are employed according to the titles of their technical and professional posts. This year enterprises should take some coordinating measures for wage reform and work out plans for reform in the days to come. In the policy of distribution, we have to solve two problems: one is the unequal benefits and burdens among social members and the other is the great disparity in incomes between different trades as well as between different enterprises as a result of differences in external conditions. The basic principles for solving the problem are: First, we must adhere to the principle of distribution according to work and must not practice egalitarianism any longer; second, there should not be a great disparity in incomes, as it may lead to social problems.

We must further stimulate large and medium-sized enterprises. The vitality of enterprises in urban areas is a matter of vital importance to our economy as a whole and to the realization of the objective of quadrupling the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production by the end of this century, which was set at the 12th National CPC Congress. Invigoration of enterprises, especially large and medium-sized enterprises owned by the whole people, is the key link in restructuring the national economy as a whole with a focus on urban economy. This year we must make further efforts to solve the problem by reducing regulatory taxes, increasing depreciation funds, and minimizing intermediate links so that enterprises will be able to really exercise the decision-making power delegated to them. At the same time, we should improve and perfect the economic responsibility system within enterprises so that large and medium-sized enterprises will be able to develop through their own strength.

Special attention must be paid to developing economic alliances transcending regions and departments. On the basis of delegated decison-making power, enterprises, in order to meet the needs of production and circulation, should smash the obstacles between regions and departments to strengthen horizontal ties between themselves and rationalize their structure. This effort should be supported by policies and guaranteed by law. Meanwhile, we will establish on a trial basis some new types of integrated agriculture-industry-commerce, agriculture-commerce or industry-commerce enterprises and create some new commercial channels and forms.

While further relaxing controls over microeconomic activities this year, we must continue to tighten macroeconomic control and particularly improve macroeconomic control. We will tighten controls but will not do things rigidly. We should control the general scale of capital construction and the total amount of credit and, at the same time, we should start the capital construction projects that we should start, grant loans to those to whom they should be granted, and curb credit where it should be curbed so as to improve investment patterns and economic results.

The policy of "consolidation, digestion, replenishment, and improvement" is positive not passive; it is realistic and in line with the actual state of our economic reform. Last year we took major steps in reform of the price and wage systems. Generally speaking, reform was successful. However, we still have something to do in straightening out the price system and perfecting the wage system. The adoption of the policy of "consolidation, digestion, replenishment, and improvement" and discarding the disadvantages and selecting the advantages itself represents a step forward. Things always advance in waves and in spirals, not in straight lines.

II. Build Spiritual Civilization and Improve Party Conduct

While striving for a high level of material civilization, we must strive to build a high level of socialist spiritual civilization. This is a strategic principle for building socialism. The history of socialism and the present situation in China both tell us that the success or failure of socialism depends on whether or not we adhere to this principle.

At the National Conference of Party Delegates, Comrade Xiaoping pointed out: "At present, in building spiritual civilization we must first concentrate on bringing about a fundamental improvement in party conduct and in general social conduct," and "the improvement of party conduct is the key to improving general social conduct." In the spirit of Comrade Xiaoping's instruction, the first party Secretariat meeting held after the National Conference of Party Delegates decided: While formulating major policies and principles for economic work, from now on, the central Secretariat should concentrate more effort on strengthening political and ideological work and bringing about a basic improvement in party conduct and general social conduct.

In promoting the building of spiritual civilization, the Central Committee follows the guiding ideology that we should not wait until documents are issued to begin, but we should, on one hand, prepare documents, and on the other, start work on this aspect in a down-to-earth manner. Through new experiences gained in practice, we can prepare documents better. To this end, the Secretariat has adopted the following measures:

1. STRENGTHEN EDUCATION ON THE SITUATION AND POLICIES. Having a correct understanding and analysis of the situation provides the scientific basis for making policies and seeking unity and thinking and action under the guidance of the party's line, principles, and policies. When things are increasingly improving, why should we stress education in the situation and policies? This is because as the situation improves, we are apt to be unrealistically optimistic and ignore veiled problems .

Experience teaches us that when a good situation arises, we would go wrong and commit mistakes while on the other hand, this good situation would bring shortcomings and lessons. We must have a correct understanding of these nonessentials. The situation with which we are now confronted is much the same as that mentioned above. At present, the general situation is very good, but new problems are cropping up one after another and the people bitterly complain of arbitrary price hikes, the network of relationships, and other unhealthy tendencies. We are now reforming the economic structure in an all-round way. In a certain sense, this is the practice of readjusting power and interests to some extend, consequently people's thoughts, understanding, and concepts should also change. Reform needs a course of exploration and people's understanding of reform cannot attain the same level. As a result, intricate and complex contradictions certainly appear. Under such circumstances, education on the situation and policies becomes more important.

At a certain time after the National Conference of Party Delegates last year, a small number of unversity students put up big-character posters and took to the streets and demonstrated. One of the weighty reasons attributed to the events was a lack of understanding of the good situation, reform, and the policy of opening up to the world and invigorating the domestic market. The demonstrations, staged by a small number of students, revealed the fact that our political and ideological work is weak and incompatible with the new situation. The countermeasures we adopted were to explain things to the students and educate them, the principal leading cadres personally went to the universities and colleges to meet the students, chatted with them, and answered their questions. In so doing, results were good and the tumult quickly subsided. Thanks to the correct policies and principles adopted by the central authorities, bad things have been turned into good things and the students were reeducated about the party's policy of opening up to the world and invigorating the domestic economy extensively and thoroughly. In carrying out the reeducation, we tried our best to clear up doubts and suspicions among the students and shot the arrow at the target; ideological education was conducted in accordance with their special characteristics and was persuasive. From now on, we should conduct education in the situation and policies as a regular practice. Some time ago, we mainly conducted education in sectors; now we must develop it in depth and carry it out among all cadres, workers, and other employees as well as intellectuals by reviewing our experience in the 10 years after the smashing of the "gang of four" and getting a clear understanding of the current good situation. We must seek unity of thought so as to step up reform.

2. PAY SPECIAL ATTENTION TO PARTY CONDUCT. With regard to the basic situation in this aspect and the central principles, policies, demands, and arrangements, Comrades Yaobang, Shangkun, and Zhaoguo put them very clearly at the recent meeting of cadres from central organizations, and all of you have studied them. Now I would like to propose two new requirements for you: first, you should set an example; and second, you should help to improve party conduct in the offices, areas, and units of which you are in charge.

In improving party conduct, we should not agree only in words. On the one hand, we should do solid work and on the other, we should not be softhearted. All lawbreakers must be dealt with according to the law, being jailed or executed by shooting as the case may be. We must execute one as a warning to a hundred and redeem a number of cadres. We must pay special attention to major and important cases regardless of who is involved, whether children of senior cadres, or senior cadres themselves, or else eminent persons. We must investigate and handle these cases without delay and grasp typical cases. As long as this is achieved, small potatoes can be dealt with easily.

Improving party conduct and social conduct at large is a long-term task. We will launch no political campaigns, but we must persevere with the task and "take action in earnest."

While working for economic construction, we must improve our legal system, including party discipline and state law. We must uphold the people's democratic dictatorship. Without it, it would be impossible for us to maintain political stability and unity and build socialist modernization. If there is no good party conduct or general social conduct, we can hardly ensure the unimpeded progress of our reforms and the development of the productive forces will be hampered.

3. STRAIGHTEN OUT GUIDELINES FOR THE IDEOLOGICAL, CULTURAL, AND THEORETICAL FRONTS. The principal aim of building spiritual civilization is to provide the broad masses of the people with rich and high-quality mental nourishment. In recent years' comrades working on the ideological, cultural, and theoretical fronts have been hard-working and have made outstanding accomplishments, thus making positive contributions to the building of socialist civilization. However, there also appeared some sub-standard products with bad artistic style, or even some poisonous products of bad taste with vulgar and obscene content. Films, television programs, broadcasts, newspapers, and books are widely distributed among millions and millions of people and directly affect their thinking, moral character, and mental outlook. To strengthen the building of spiritual civilization, we must therefore spare no efforts to improve production of mental products and strengthen the work of propaganda departments.

Since the fourth quarter of last year, the CPC Central Committee Secretariat has listened to work reports made separately by the departments in charge of broadcasting, television, film, publishing and the protection of cultural relics as well as the Academy of Social Sciences, and studied and solved their problems one by one. As a result, some departments have been reorganized and some leading bodies readjusted. Meanwhile, some principles have been made clearer than before and the ranks of cadres have been reinforced. We are also ready to listen to work reports from the departments in charge of literature and arts, the press, education, science and technology, and posts and telecommunications. The CPC Central Committee calls on all departments and units in charge of production of mental products and propaganda work to straighten out their guiding ideology, understand well their position and role in the building of socialist spiritual civilization, raise the political and professional quality of their cadres, strengthen and improve party leadership, and produce more and better mental products so as to make greater contributions to the building of the two civilizations.

Departments and units producing mental products should uphold the four cardinal principles and the principles of serving the people and give top priority to social benefit. Good mental products are loved by the people and also yield good economic results. Under the socialist system, social benefit and economic results are consistent with each other and do not conflict with each other. We must achieve better economic results, while attaching importance to social benefit.

Comrades engaged in production of mental products and propaganda work should pay attention to their own political and ideological progress.

4. IMPROVE POLITICAL AND LEGAL WORK. Our political and legal front is very important. The strengthening of our socialist state apparatus and the stability of our socialist society mainly depend on the efficiency of our political and legal work.

The functions of political and legal departments must change along with the development of the situation. First, departments of public security the procuratorate, and the judiciary must protect the life and property as well as legitimate rights and interests of the people; second, they must strike at the very few criminals who jeopardize public security and must check all crimes.

In the new historical period, political and legal work should strive to meet the needs of the four modernizations and serve the building of the two socialist civilizations, the policy of opening to the world, and our reform measures.

The objective of our political and legal work is to build our country into one which enjoys the best public security in the world. This objective we can certainly achieve, though it will take many years to do so.

This year, a national political and legal work conference is planned for after the Spring Festival in order to make arrangements for the third offensive campaign against economic criminals.

III. The Question of Integrating Theory With Practice

Integrating the basic tenets of Marxism with the legal state of the four modernizations and increasing the ability to apply Marxism to the solution of practical problems are a matter of prime importance for leadership work. We need correct theoretical guidance in building both material and spiritual civilization. At the National Conference of Party Delegates last year, Comrade Xiaoping once again called on cadres at various levels, and particularly leading cadres, to study Marxist theory. This is because Marxist theory is not dogma, but a guide to action. It calls on people to proceed from its basic principles and methodology and apply them to the changing conditions to devise solutions to new problems. In the spirit of the speeches by Comrade Xiaoping and Comrade Yaobang, this year we must make great efforts to study and apply Marxist theory and blaze new trails in this aspect so that the Marxist theoretical level of our party, and especially of senior and middle-ranking cadres, will reach new heights.

To achieve it, I think there are three points for you to consider:

1. UNDERSTAND WELL THE IMPORTANCE OF RAISING THE LEVEL OF MARXIST THEORY. What is the criterion of assessing the level of Marxist theory? In his speech delivered at the opening of the CPC Central Committee Party School on 1 February 1942, which is known as the article entitled "Rectify the Party Style of Work," Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out: "It is necessary to master Marxist theory and apply it, master it solely for the purpose of applying it. If you can apply the Marxist-Leninist viewpoint in elucidating one or two practical problems, you should be commended and credited with some achievement. The more problems you can elucidate and the more comprehensively and profoundly you can do so, the greater will be your achievement. Our party school should also lay down a rule to grade students as good or poor according to how they look at China's problems after they have studied Marxism-Leninism, according to whether or not they see problems clearly and whether or not they see them at all." It can thus be seen that to raise our Marxist theory level, we must read books, and what is more important is that we must know how to apply it and know well how to answer and tackle problems arising from the Chinese revolution and economic construction. In combining the basic tenets of Marxism with the actual conditions in China, we must concentrate our efforts on integrating theory with practice.

Experience has repeatedly taught us that whenever we successfully combined the basic tenets of Marxism with the Chinese revolution and economic construction, we made progress in our revolution and construction; otherwise, we committed errors, and our revolution and construction suffered setbacks. At present, the tasks of restructuring the economy and building the two civilizations are very hard. New conditions and problems are emerging one after another, with many problems we have never approached or heard before, but this only increases the need for us to raise our Marxist theory level so as to approach and tackle the new problems arising under new historical conditions.

This provides an important guarantee and basic measure for the building of the two civilizations. Without the guidance of the basic tenets and methodology of Marxism, our action will have nothing to go by, our thinking will waver, our action will become blind, and our modernization drive and reform will deviate from the correct path.

2. TAKING A SCIENTIFIC ATTITUDE TOWARD MARXISM. In reviewing the development of Marxism, we can find that all staunch Marxists usually matured during the low tide of revolution and in adverse circumstances. Lenin and Comrade Mao Zedong did so, as did our Comrade Xiaoping, who upheld and developed Mao Zedong Thought through the adversity of the 10 years of turmoil and finally led the whole party to create a new situation. All of them are especially noted for their ability to adhere to the basis tenets of Marxism under the most complicated situations and to negate certain outdated Marxist theses and tenets in order to meet the needs of the times. To adhere to the basic tenets of Marxism, to discard certain outdated tenets or those which have been proven not positively correct through practice and replace them with new tenets, and to enrich and develop Marxism with experiences gained in the new times and the new historical period and push it forward -- this is the way to take a scientific attitude toward Marxism. On this point, Lenin made a brilliant analysis: "We should in no case regard Marxist theory as an immutable and inviolable thing. Quite to the contrary, we firmly believe that it only provides a foundation for a science. If socialists are unwilling to lag behind actual life, they should push forward the science from various aspects."

If we agree with this viewpoint, then, our theorists, no matter whether they are old or young and no matter whether they work for the party's departments of theoretical work or social science research instituties, should all stick to the basic orientation for theoretical work. This means that they should integrate theory with practice. In other words, they should apply the Marxist stands, viewpoints, and methods to study China's problems, and especially the problems concerning our socialist modernization as well as world affairs. These are cardinal principles for theoretical work.

If we agree with this viewpoint, then we must recognize that the line, principles, and policies formulated after the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee are Marxist in nature and the important documents drawn up by the party Central Committee are included in the category of Marxist theory. This is because they have scientifically summed up experiences gained in the socialist revolution and construction since the founding of the republic and they are a scientific crystallization of combining the basic tenets of Marxism with actual conditions in China, thus adding new wealth to the treasure house of Marxism.

If we agree with this viewpoint, then all militant Marxists must resolutely criticize the ideological trend of censuring, doubting, and attacking Marxism, defend the basic tenets of Marxism and usher in a new tide of Marxist development.

Processing from such requirements, how should we appraise the present state of our ranks of theoretical workers and our theoretical work? First, we have had a sizable contingent of theoretical workers, including Marxist theoretical workers outside the party as well as a number of younger theoretical workers inside and outside the party. They are a very valuable treasure. Second, the political quality of most comrades in the contingent is good. Many comrades have fought for the victory of our cause for decades, sharing a common fate with the party, and they are considerably combat-worthy. Third, over the past few years, much has been done and marked success has been scored on the fronts of economics, history, politics, and law. However, there are a lot of deficiencies in our ranks of theoretical workers, which is incompatible with practical activities and cannot meet the demands and expectations of vast numbers of cadres and the masses.

Here once again I quote Comrade Mao Zedong: "Generally speaking, our theory cannot as yet keep pace with our revolutionary practice, let alone lead the way as it should. We have not yet raised our rich and varied practice to the proper theoretical plane." It must be noted that if comrades engaged in theoretical work are cold toward and not interested in actual conditions in China today, and if they evade problems of immediate significance and turn a deaf ear to anti-Marxist remarks, then their stand is not Marxist. Now we must encourage people to create a firm and unwavering belief in Marxism.

3. THE CENTRAL PARTY SCHOOL SHOULD MAKE GREATER CONTRIBUTIONS TO ENHANCING THE LEVEL OF MARXIST THEORY IN THE WHOLE PARTY. The central party school is an important place for our party to train party and government leading cadres and the backbone of the theoretical contingents, and also an important organ of our party's theoretical work. In the new historical period, the party has entrusted to the Central Party School glorious and important tasks. In order to fulfill the important historical mission imposed by the party, all those working at the Central Party School should take the lead in integrating theory with practice, striving for greater unity and serving the people wholeheartedly, and rectifying the style of study, of party relations, and of writing. The party Central Committee has called on central organizations to set an example for the nation. I think the Central Party School should encourage all teachers to set an example for their students. The aim of the proposal is to intensively educate and nurture all comrades studying in this party's institute of higher learning in the spirit of the party's basic work style so that their days in the school will be memorable all their lives. Of course, improving the party's work style, study, and writing is a matter for the whole party, not merely for the party school and its students. What I mean is that the party school should take the lead.

Comrades, your study at the party school has come to an end, but your task of studying Marxism is yet to be fulfilled. The party school is a classroom for studying Marxism, but the execution of reform and the fiery struggle for the four modernization are also a classroom for studying Marxism, and a larger classroom. Now you will soon be leaving the party school; you should take your graduation from the school as stepping from a small classroom to a large one. I hope all of you will compete with each other and see who will study better and achieve greater success in the larger classroom. In conclusion, I wish you good health and good work.

SIXTH NPC MEETING ACTIVITIES CONTINUE

Lateral Economic Ties Discussed

OW011400 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0851 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Article by XINHUA reporters Li Anding and Ge Daxing: "Follow the Major Trend of Establishing Association -- NPC Deputies Talk About Lateral Economic Ties"]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 31 Mar (XINHUA) -- Lateral economic association, which is centered on enlivening enterprises, is becoming a powerful motive force, giving impetus to comprehensive reform of the economic structure and national economic development. In reviewing the achievements of the "Sixth 5-Year Plan" and looking into the prospects of the "Seventh 5-Year Plan" during their examination and discussions of Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the draft Seventh 5-Year Plan, none of the deputies attending the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC has failed to focus his attention on this innovative activity which has brought such profound changes in our country's economic life.

Leap Onto a New Level of Lateral Association

The draft "Seventh 5-Year" Plan has mapped out separate plans for the economic development of the three economic regions in the eastern, central, and western parts of our country's mainland, with the demand that they bring into full play their respective advantages, develop lateral economic ties with each other, and gradually establish a network of economic zones with major cities as centers, displaying their respective characteristics at various levels and on various scales. Judging from the remarks of the deputies, it is obvious that lateral economic association in our country has been "escalating" from association and cooperation among enterprises to large-scale regional association at higher levels.

Qian Min, NPC deputy and deputy director of the State Council's Office for Readjustment and Reform of Third-Front [san xian 0005 4848] Construction, stated that lateral economic association is becoming a lively way for economic and technological cooperation between the first front [yi xian 0001 4848] and the third front in our country's eastern and western sectors. The third front concerns the nearly 2,000 military industrial, energy, raw materials, transport enterprises, and installations established by the country in the central and western areas over the past 30 years with a total investment of over 200 billion yuan. Mechanical processing capability of the third-front area alone accounted for about 60 percent of such capability in the whole country. However, for historical reasons and because of the difference in natural geographical conditions, there has been a great difference in the level of development between the first front and the third front. Although coastal areas have higher scientific and technological levels, relatively better development of commodity economy, convenient transport, and readily available information, they suffer from a lack of resources. Although interior provinces and regions have abundant resources and better equipment for their new enterprises, their transport is inconvenient, information is not readily available, and management levels are relatively low. Therefore, if the first and third fronts can cooperate closely and learn from each other's strong points to make up for their shortcomings, they could enable our country's economy to develop more rapidly.

A Major Premise for Bringing About Prosperous Commodity Economy

Lateral economic association is a product of reform, and reflects an objective demand in the development of socialist commodity economy. This was the view of Xiao Yang, mayor of Chongqing City and NPC deputy. Xiao Yang maintained: The development of rural commodity production, the further enlivening of production, circulation, and enterprises in cities, and the economic structure in urban centers which have carried out the policy of opening to the outside world have brought a further expansion of the role of market mechanism in the economy. All these reforms will enable enterprises to break through regional and departmental limitations and organize the most rational form of commodity production and circulation based on the principle of voluntarism and mutual profit, thereby gradually realizing a high degree of socialization and modernization of production aimed at achieving the greatest consolidated economic results. Thus, our reform will be carried out better and better in the correct direction, and our country will become more and more prosperous with each passing day.

Plan Discussion Ends

OW011542 Beijing XINHUA in English 1517 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 1 (XINHUA) -- China's economic growth rate during the 1986-90 period, and its economic and administrative restructuring were among the highlights of the panel discussions of the current National People's Congress session.

Other highlights involved China's policy of opening to the rest of the world, agriculture, science, technology and education.

About 2,800 NPC deputies began deliberating Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the country's draft Seventh Five-Year Plan March 26. The 57-page report, in the Han (Chinese), Mongolian, Tibetan, Uygur, Kazak, Korean and Yi languages, was distributed to the deputies when the NPC annual session opened March 25. The opinions and proposals of the deputies were collected by 31 delegations and then transferred to the State Council via the NPC session Secretariat.

Meanwhile, 1,600 members of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference, who are attending the organization's annual session, also broke into panel discussions of Zhao's report and the draft.

Many deputies described as "realistic and practical" the projection of an annual average increase of 6.7 percent in the combined value of industrial and agricultural output set in the draft plan. Some local leaders voiced the view that localities should not continue to pursue excessive growth rate out of their own interests. At the same time, they said, the growth rate should not be exactly the same for all areas. The underdeveloped areas, for instance, should be permitted to achieve a higher rate, they urged.

A Tianjin deputy said that over the past five years, the economic growth rate had greatly exceeded the 4-5 per cent rate set by the Sixth Five-Year Plan. In the next five years, he stressed, the fixed growth rate should be (?closely) followed to keep the credibility of the state plan. A deputy from Shanxi Province complained about the race for higher economic growth and larger capital construction in some places and called for strict control of the problem by the State Council and effective supervision of banks. Deputies from the mainly agricultural provinces like Jiangsu, Anhui, Shandong, Hunan, Hubei and Jilin warned of over-optimism about agricultural achievements. "Grain output must not be overlooked at any time and under whatever circumstances," they said. They called for full attention to be paid to the following problems: use of land for capital construction, the increase in illiteracy, lack of agro-technicians and neglect of farm machinery and water conservancy works. Deputies from Hubei Province asked that a law on land be promulgated as soon as possible so as to stop indiscreet use of land. Deputies from Hebei suggested that the state promote the production of fertilizers, composite feeder, pesticide, and plastics; rural education and services directed at farming be strengthened; and suitable farming machines be produced to quicken the pace of agricultural modernization.

Deputies agreed that the tasks set by Premier Zhao for economic restructuring over the next five years were "positive and careful." Those from the major industrial cities of Shanghai, Tianjin, Chongqing and Shenyang discussed ways to invigorate enterprises, particularly major state-run ones. Enterprises will become even more vigorous and assume greater responsibility, with the expansion of cooperation among them, bigger decision-making powers and a higher degree of responsibility for their profits and losses, they agreed. In this new situation, one said, the existence and development of an enterprise, and the improvement of the material interests of its employees will depend all the more on the enterprise's management and operation standards. "This is indeed a rigorous challenge for all business executives," he noted.

Deputies from across the country pledged to support the government in carrying through the policy of opening to the outside world. Some expressed the opinion that it is imperative to emphasize protecting and aiding national industry while pursuing the open policy. They proposed that this should be inserted into Premier Zhao's report.

Deputies from Beijing, China's cultural center, showed a particular interest in education. Many of them viewed that although the state budget for education during the five-year plan period will rise by 72 percent over the previous five years to reach 116.6 billion yuan, the funds for the improvement of educational facilities are still not enough, for half the budgeted funds will be used to raise teachers' wages. Qiu Weifan, a professor at the Beijing Agricultural University, said that at least 1.6 billion yuan will be needed to improve the basic facilities for the country's primary and middle schools, but the state has budgeted only one billion yuan for this purpose. He suggested that the prices of cigarettes and liquor be raised by one percent or two so as to raise about 700 million yuan for education.

Deputies from Liaoning and Hebei Provinces and the Guangxi Zhang Autonomous Region urged that the streamlining of the government organs be implemented in tandem with the economic structural reforms. Although a lot of noise has been made about streamlining government organs over the past few years, they claimed, the number of offices remains virtually the same and they are mostly over-staffed. There should be clearly-defined purposes and deadlines for the streamlining of government organs, said deputies from Hebei Province. They held that it is quite possible to trim one-third to a half of the present government staff.

Also, many deputies suggested that "regulations for public servants" be formulated and an inspection body for administrative disciplines be established.

Tomorrow NPC deputies will begin to examine three draft laws.

Draft Law Session Convened

OW020154 Beijing XINHUA in English 0146 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 2 (XINHUA) -- Some 2,700 deputies to China's National People's Congress (NPC) gathered here this morning to hear explanations of three draft laws following six days' deliberation of China's draft Seventh Five-Year Plan. The draft laws submitted today to the NPC annual session for examination are the general princples of civil code, which provide norms for China's civil acts, a law on nine-year compulsory education, and another concerning enterprises with exclusive foreign investment in China.

The deputies also heard a report on the work of the NPC Standing Committee in the past year.

They are scheduled to break into groups to deliberate the three draft laws this afternoon.

A delegation from the Moroccan Chamber of Representatives led by President Ahmed Osman attended today's NPC plenary meeting as guests.

Civil Code Deliberated

OW020236 Beijing XINHUA in English 0216 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 2 (XINHUA) -- A new law protecting the legitimate rights and interests of citizens and businesses in their inter-relations was submitted today to the present National People's Congress (NPC) session for deliberation and approval. Wang Hanbin, secretary general of the NPC Standing Committee, gave an explanation of the draft general principles of the civil code to the plenary session here this morning. Wang, who is also director of the Legislative Affairs Commission of the NPC Standing Committee, said the general principles have been formulated in line with China's socialist principles, and reflect characteristics of the country's socialist economy.

New experiences gained during the economic reform, the implementation of the policy of opening to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy have been taken into consideration in formulating the commonly observed rules governing civil acts. The characteristics include China's planned commodity economy, development of lateral economic links, expansion of the decision-making powers of state-owned enterprises, contracting of businesses by collectives or individuals on the basis of the socialist public ownership, and individual businesses which are a supplement to the socialist economy, Wang said.

The civil code is drawn up mainly to adjust the relations between citizens and businesses in their civil acts, the secretary general added. Citizens' rights to reputation, portrait [as received], health and life as well as the businesses' rights to title and reputation are protected by both the criminal and civil codes. The establishment of the legal person system is significant to China's economic restructuring and the implementation of the policy of opening to the outside world. This status will be granted to Chinese enterprises, both state-owned and collectively-owned, as well as to Sino-foreign joint ventures, Sino-foreign co-operative enterprises and wholly foreign-financed enterprises in China if they meet the requirements called for and go through the necessary registration formalities, Wang noted.

The general principles provide stipulations governing the healthy association of institutions and enterprises in various forms. The code provides legal protection of the legitimate rights and interests for the country's 10 million households engaged in industrial and commercial undertakings, while defining their economic liabilities to ensure their healthy development.

According to the principles, Wang Hanbin said, government institutions and functionaries will be liable for causing damage by infringing upon the legitimate rights and interests of citizens and businesses in the course of performing their duties. Manufacturers and sellers of inferior products will also have civil liabilities if their products cause damage to property or persons.

The general principles also contain provisions governing the application of laws in handling issues involving foreigners.

China began to draft a civil code in the 1950s. The draft general principles were based on the fourth civil code draft prepared in 1982 -- the work of the joint efforts of the Civil Affairs Commission under the NPC Standing Committee, the Supreme People's Court and law experts nationwide, Wang said. The public was consulted, and several revisions made.

Foreign Enterprises Law Viewed

OW020244 Beijing XINHUA in English 0228 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 2 (XINHUA) -- A draft law which aims at expanding China's foreign economic cooperation and technical exchanges, and attracting overseas investment was submitted to the on-going session of the National People's Congress (NPC) for deliberation here today. The draft dealing with the wholly foreign owned enterprises has 23 articles, covering their legal person qualifications, operations, supply of raw materials, and foreign exchange balance. Such enterprises with exclusive foreign investment are those established in China by foreign investors (foreign firms and other economic entities or individuals) with entirely their own capital in accordance with the present law. But this does not include the affiliates of foreign firms and other economic entities in China. The People's Republic of China permits foreign investors to set up their enterprises in China and protect their legitimate rights and interests. Such enterprises set up in China must be conducive to developing the country's national economy, according to the draft provisions. They should use advanced technology and equipment, and they should sell all or most of their products outside China.

The foreign-funded enterprises may remit abroad their legitimate profits and other lawful earnings, as well as the funds left over after the business is liquidated or transferred. Foreign employees of such enterprises may remit home their wages and other legitimate earnings after paying their income taxes in accordance with relevant Chinese laws. Enterprises with 100 percent foreign investment shall pay taxes in according with the provisions of relevant Chinese laws. They may apply for preferential treatment, such as tax reduction or exemption.

The draft requires the entirely foreign-funded enterprises to keep up-to-date account books in China, conduct independent accounting and, in conformity with relevant regulations, submit their fiscal reports and statements to Chinese financial and tax authorities for supervision.

The foreign investor should apply for the operation term of such an enterprise and get the approval of the Chinese authorities in charge of examination and approval. The investor should apply for extension of the term of the enterprise 180 days ahead of time when the enterprise term expires.

While offering legal protection for their lawful rights and interests in China, the draft requires these foreign-funded enterprises to abide by Chinese laws and decrees, and they must in no way do harm to the public interests of the Chinese society.

The draft also includes provisions on employing Chinese workers by such foreign enterprises and establishment of trade union organizations in such enterprises.

Zheng Tuobin Speaks

OW020304 Beijing XINHUA in English 0245 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 2 (XINHUA) -- The formulation of the law on enterprises established in China exclusively with foreign capital shall protect the lawful rights and interests of foreign investors, and provide a legal basis for their activity within China, a senior economic official said here today.

Zheng Tuobin, minister of foreign economic relations and trade, on behalf of the State Council, explained the draft at the current session of the National People's Congress. He said that it will also facilitate the efforts of the Chinese Government to control and supervise those enterprises. He told the session that the establishment of enterprises with exclusive foreign capital is a "suitable form" of import of foreign funds and technology. China uses direct foreign investment through three forms: establishment of Sino-foreign joint ventures, cooperative businesses and enterprises with exclusive foreign capital, according to Zheng. The country had 2,300 Sino-foreign joint ventures, 3,700 cooperative businesses and 120 foreign-funded enterprises by the end of 1985, he said.

China has enacted a series of laws and decrees on Sino-foreign joint ventures. But, it is urgent to formulate a law on foreign-funded enterprises as there is at present no legal basis for handling issues involving these enterprises. Talking about the duration of operation of foreign-funded enterprises, he said that as development of the national economy has different priorities at different stages and the feasibility study of a foreign-funded enterprise will become invalid after a certain period of time, it is necessary for the foreign-funded enterprises to apply for and secure approval of their operational duration. Such enterprises may apply for extension of operational period when the previous term expires. The draft is flexible on this question, he said.

Zheng said that, in tandem with the ongoing policy of opening to the outside world, the legal rights and interests of foreign investors must be protected according to law, so as to attract more foreign investment and promote the development of China's national economy. Zheng Tuobin elaborated on the provision that a foreign-funded enterprise may apply for preferential treatment for reduction of taxes or exemption from them in accordance with the provisions of Chinese law. Zheng said that the relevant provisions are contained in the income tax law of foreign enterprises, provisional regulations of the State Council concerning the reduction of and exemption from the enterprise income tax and the unified industrial and commercial tax for the special economic zones and the 14 coastal port cities as well as other relevant tax provisions. The detailed regulations for implementation of the law are being drafted by the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade. The regulations will be implemented after approval by the State Council, he said.

Li Peng on Education Law

OW021000 Beijing XINHUA in English 0947 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 2 (XINHUA) -- Vice Premier Li Peng today introduced a draft law to require most Chinese children to attend school for nine years. Li Peng, who is also minister of the State Education Commission, said he was representing China's highest governing body, the State Council in his call to deputies to the ongoing National People's Council [as received] here to support the 18-article draft at today's meeting. "With unremitting efforts," he said, "we can expect most school-age children to receive a nine-year education by the turn of the century."

The draft law says penalties for organizations or individuals employing children of school age will range from criticism to cancelling business licenses. It establishes three sets of compulsory education standards. Comparatively developed areas such as east China would require universal nine-year education by 1990. The most undeveloped areas in west China would seek only to popularize primary education as much as development of their economies permitted. Areas in between would require universal nine-year education by 1995.

Li said 90 percent of China's elementary school-age children are in school, compared with 20 percent 36 years ago. He said the number of junior middle schools has jumped 17 times while the number of middle school students has increased 46 times to 40 million. But, said Li, "in general, China's elementary education program is weak and cannot meet the needs of the socialist modernization drive." He said primary education has not yet been popularized in many of the country's villages. "Many school-age children, especially girls, have not completed the set schooling," according to Li. "As a result, illiterate and semi-literate people continue to be found among young people and adults." At the same time, he said, many primary and middle school teachers "are not qualified, and some classrooms are old and have been in disrepair for years." These factors have affected the quality of education, said Li.

Other methods have been tried, said the vice-premier, but legislating compulsory education "marks a new stage in Chinese education that will enhance the scientific and cultural proficiency of all Chinese." Since numerous dialects exist in China, it needs to promote the use of the common speech, Putonghua. Meanwhile, the languages of its different ethnic groups should be respected, he said. That is why the draft law requires both that schools should popularize the standard Chinese speech and that schools which enroll mainly students of minority nationalities may use the local common language in teaching, said Li.

Chen Pixian Reviews Work

OW020250 Beijing XINHUA in English 0236 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 2 (XINHUA) -- The Standing Committee of the National People's Congress (NPC) has formulated seven laws since last April and submitted three drafts to the on-going NPC session for deliberation, according to Chen Pixian, vice-chairman of the NPC Standing Committee. When addressing the 2,800 deputies at the current NPC session here today, he said that the NPC Standing Committee has made new headway in making economic laws aimed at protecting and developing natural resources such as grasslands, fish and mineral resources. Laws governing the exist and entry of Chinese citizens and foreigners and the draft law concerning wholly foreign owned enterprises in China are designed to facilitate the implementation of China's policy of opening to the rest of the world. The other laws deal with metrology and ID card for Chinese citizens. The draft law on the 9-year compulsory education and draft of the principles of the civil code are under deliberation at the current NPC session.

The vice-chairman of the NPC Standing Committee singled out last June's decision on the composition of the Hong Kong basic law drafting committee and the addition of a basic law consultative committee in Hong Kong.

Chen said the five new economic laws have justified some important economic relations, principles on economic activities and the successful experiences of the economic restructuring.

He stressed the importance of the draft principles of the civil code in China's effort to build its legal system. Since 1979, the NPC and the NPC Standing Committee have enacted 47 laws in addition to the current Constitution. The State Council has worked out more than 400 administrative decrees and regulations as well as provisional regulations on the economic reform and the opening to the outside world. China has enacted laws in major fields, he said, but legislation in the economic field cannot meet the needs of the modernization drive and the economic restructuring. The important economic laws under consideration cover land, state industrial enterprises, customs, corporation, bankruptcy, township industries, labor, and maritime law. China is also preparing or drafting laws on government workers, copyright, technological contracts and on education, science, culture and health. As some localities did not strictly abide by law, the Standing Committee has strengthened the enforcement of the Constitution and laws. For example, some local governments transferred officials elected in counties and townships without following procedures. The NPC Standing Committee has urged those localities to correct their practices. In order to help all citizens understand the legal system, and enable them to use the laws to protect their legal rights and interests, the Standing Committee has approved the decision of the State Council to spread knowledge of the law among all citizens.

Chen Pixian on Larger Committees

OW021006 Beijing XINHUA in English 0931 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 2 (XINHUA) -- The National People's Congress will expand its six specialized committees to include as many NPC Standing Committee members as possible, a senior official said here today. Chen Pixian, vice-chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, was speaking at a full meeting of the current NPC session. The six committees, set up two years ago, deal with ethnic minorities; law; finance and economy; education, science, culture and health; foreign affairs; and Overseas Chinese. About 80 NPC Standing Committee members now sit on these permanent committees. They all have permanent addresses in Beijing so that they are able to attend to the affairs of the specialized committees on a regular basis.

To enable more NPC Standing Committee members to join the specialized committees, Chen Pixian said, the NPC Standing Committee had proposed to the full NPC session that all the members of the NPC Standing Committee residing in Beijing should be made members of the six specialized committees. This means that another 20 Standing Committee members will join the specialized committees. The 3,000-strong National People's Congress meets annually while its Standing Committee, comprising around 150 members, usually meets every other month. The vice-chairman explained that the expansion of these specialized committees would help strengthen the efficiency of the NPC Standing Committee and ensure the continuity of its work. They had been playing an important role in helping the NPC and its Standing Committee effectively exercise their legislative powers.

Xu Dixin Outlines Reform

[Text] Beijing, March 31 (XINHUA) -- China's new economic structure should involve eight aspects, leading economist Xu Dixin said at a panel discussion of the National People's Congress here today.

"The first aspect refers to separating the ownership of state-owned enterprises from the right to use them," he told the Guangdong provincial delegation. This is aimed at turning them into real economic entities, with full authority for management and responsibility for their profits and losses. The second centers on application of the law of value and the function of market force regulation to help boost the commodity economy. "This means the state should reduce the scope of mandatory quotas while expanding that of guidance so as to achieve a balance between production and demand," he explained. The third involves a change from direct state control of state-run enterprises to indirect control. "Indirect control tools are taxes, prices, loans and credits, as well as interest rates," Xu explained, adding that education in the legislative system, administrative measures and socialist ethics are also indispensable in this regard. "The fourth marks a shift from a closed-type economy to an open-type one," Xu pointed out. Competition is inevitable in the open-type economy, he explained, but it can impel enterprises to upgrade technology and product quality. "Competition does not exist only in capitalist society," he said.

The fifth covers expansion of association among enterprises and regions. This form of association will help speed up production and commodity circulation. Such association among rural groups and individuals who have contracted land and businesses from the collectives is very likely to become a new form of cooperation, he pointed out. "In the sixth aspect, the new economic structure is aimed at tapping the productive forces," he noted. So advanced technology must be adopted, and workers must observe labor discipline and undertake production according to operational rules. "In the seventh, the new structure requires that the purpose of production is to meet demand," he said. "That is why it is wrong to seek output or output value to the neglect of quality." Xu added: "In the last aspect, it is imperative, in establishing the new structure, to take care of both immediate and long-term interests, and both interests of the part and the interests of the whole."

However, he stressed, immediate interests must be subordinated to the long-term interests, and the interests of individuals (or parts), to the interests of the whole. The smooth progress of China's reforms depends largely on the appropriate relations between various interests. "I think the new structure is based on applying cardinal Marxist principles of economics to the actual conditions of China's national economy." He went on to stress that there will be difficulty and complexity in transforming the old structure into the new. "That's why the structural reform can only be a gradual process," he pointed out. "China will possibly achieve initial successes in reforms during the Seventh Five-Year Plan Period (1986-90)," he said, "but it will take more than five years for the new structure to entirely replace the old."

Dong Furen on Economic Changes

OW010918 Beijing XINHUA in English 0734 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 1 (XINHUA) -- For decades, 75-year-old Lu Hongping and his family had led a self-sufficient life in east China's Shandong Province, in much the same way as his ancestors had lived for centuries. One of the very few commodities he ever bought was salt from a government-run co-operative. But over the past few years, the Lus' lifestyle and workstyle -- like those of millions of other Chinese peasants -- have greatly changed.

"Now in my home village," said Lu, a deputy to China's current annual session of the National People's Congress (NPC) in Beijing, "people purchase nearly everything from the market, from steamed bread, fried bread rolls and other staple foods to clothes and shoes. They do not make these items themselves any more."

Last year, according to statistics released by the government, Chinese peasants earned 234.3 billion yuan by trading commodities and providing labor services, 150 percent more than the 1980 figure. Dong Furen, director of the Economics Research Institute under the Chinese Academy of Sciences, said: "China's economy has begun to change into a new socialist commodity economy based on public ownership." Last year, 81 percent of China's state-owned enterprises paid taxes to the state rather than hand over all their products, as was the case in the past. More than 3,000 small enterprises have been contracted or leased out to their employees. They are responsible for their own profits or losses and act as independent manufacturers and traders.

The government's policies to encourage various forms of economic operations have also pushed collectively-owned and township enterprises, the self-employed, joint ventures and foreign-financed enterprises into market competition, thus breaking the monopoly of circulation by state-owned enterprises. The turnover made by collective and individual traders and that by peasant traders last year, for instance, accounted for 36.7 and 22.4 percent respectively of the total volume of retail sales in the country. Supplies of raw materials, machinery and technology are becoming more abundant. Even the once tightly-controlled labor has begun to flow more freely to where it is needed. On the market, state-fixed prices sometimes have had to compete against fluctuating market prices of popular goods. Meanwhile, banks raised interest rates five times last year to regulate demand for funds and supply. Departments and enterprises have broken down communications and trading barriers by establishing various lateral economic links.

Dong said: "These phonemena would have been unthinkable had the traditional theory that set the commodity economy against the planned economy still dominated the scene." In the past, he said, Chinese economists had long believed that a commodity economy would inevitably lead to cut-throat competition and polarization, and eventually to capitalism. In their view, all socialist enterprises belonged to the state and, therefore, they should not behave as commodity dealers. This concept was largely due to the misunderstanding that commodity exchanges and private ownership -- phenomena coinciding historically -- were indispensably interrelated. "Actually," Dong said, "these two phenomena are products of the division of labor in society, and commodity exchanges can exist and develop in any society."

As practice has proved, a mammoth state planning system is slow in responding to market feedback and vulnerable to decision-making errors, thus leading to economic losses. Also, as raw materials and finished products are all purchased and sold by the state, enterprises lack incentives to develop production. However, Dong said, a commodity economy is not immaculate, for commodity pruducers are tempted to compete on the market to go after their own interest. Therefore, the state should step in to make long-term and overall plans to regulate economic operations in advance, and reduce possible economic losses if market forces were left to run havoc. Dong said that the government's efforts to further invigorate enterprises, expand the commodity market and control the enterprises through the use of economic levers would "create the necessary conditions for the development of a socialist commodity economy."

SIDELIGHTS FROM RECENT NPC, CPPCC MEETINGS

HK310811 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1457 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Report: "Sidelights on NPC, CPPCC Sessions"]

[Text] Beijing, 26 Mar (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- The Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC held its second plenary meeting this morning. After making an appointment for an interview with former Shanghai Mayor Wang Daohan, a reporter asked the former mayor where he could find Hu Lijiao, chairman of the Standing Committee of the Shanghai Municipal People's Congress. Pointing at the meeting hall, Wang Daohan said: "Comrade Lijiao is on the rostrum." Because of changes in the situation, adjustments have been made involving 12 members of the current session's presidium, of which consists of responsible members of delegations from various provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions. No change has been made in the Shanghai municipal delegation, and Hu Lijiao remains a member of the Presidium.

When he met with Zhu Ermei, vice mayor of Ningbo City, a reporter asked about the special wharf for berthing 100,000-ton ore carriers in Beilun port under the management of the Ningbo port affairs bureau. People will remember what was happening 2 years ago when there were no ships at the wharf and the grab buckets were being operated without any ore, for fear that they might rust. Zhu Ermei smilingly said: "That is something of the past. The volume of freight handled by Ningbo port last year was 10.41 million tons; it has become one of China's big ports in terms of volume of freight handled." At this, a deputy from Shanghai joined in: "Things have really changed very fast."

At the Guangdong NPC delegation's group discussions, witty remarks made by Ren Zhongyi, Ye Xuanping, and Xu Shijie evoked roars of laughter among the deputies from time to time. Ren Zhongyi compared temporary setbacks emerging in the course of reforms to a child growing permanent teeth. He said: "As a child grows, he is bound to lose some teeth. The price paid caused by such a process may last a few days after which, a new tooth will appear. My case is different. After I have lost a tooth, no new one will ever appear." Ye Xuanping added: "Never mind. You can have an artificial tooth inserted."

"I agree with the call to strengthen macroeconomic control put forward by Premier Zhao in his report concerning the draft Seventh 5-Year Plan. It won't do if we do not exercise macroeconomic control. Of course, we must proceed from reality. Things are like fish, and some swim faster than others. If we slash at them with a sword, the heads of those which swim slowly and the tails of those which swim quickly will be cut off." This remark was made in an orderly manner by a middle-aged woman in Western style clothes at today's group discussion of NPC deputies from Jiangxi Province.

"Who is she?" a reporter asked a deputy sitting next to him in a low voice.

"Don't you know her? She is Wan Shaofen, our provincial secretary," was the reply.

The 12 episode television series "New Stars," which reflects the structural reform in a certain county in north China, had aroused the interest of Xia Meng and Xu Simin, members of the CPPCC National Committee. When they met with Xie Wenqing, vice minister of Radio, Film, and Television, they asked, "Would you mind showing us the series?"

"All right," was the reply.

Wubingya Weinqiang, a newly-elected member of the CPPCC National Committee and Buddha of Xiaocheng Buddhism, has strictly observed all canons and has never shaken hands with women. Therefore, when some female reporters, CPPCC members, and waitress try to show their respect for him by shaking hands, he feels embarrassed. According to the Buddhist canons, he is not allowed to eat beef or mutton. He is not allowed to have any meal after noon and he usually drinks some fruit juice in the afternoon. Being aware of this, waiters bring a special lunch for him in his room at 11:30 every day.

REFORM WITH DEVELOPMENT PERSPECTIVE ENCOURAGED

[Commentator's article: "View Reform in an All-Round Way and From a Development Outlook"]

[Text] Reform is a matter of primary importance which concerns the future and destiny of our country. It is natural enough that cadres and the masses urgently require reform and pay close attention to it. They are taking an active part in reform and their enthusiasm is commendable. This year, the main work we are doing is to consolidate, digest, replenish, and improve measures for reform which have been taken; to solve key problems; to maintain good points; and to overcome the bad points so that these measures will play an even better role. At present it is vitally important to adopt a scientific ideological method, namely Marxist dialectics, and view problems from a development outlook.

We are carrying out reform under the prerequisite of upholding socialism, and the substance of reform is the self-improvement and development of the socialist system. The practice of reform has shown that we have stuck to the socialist orientation because we have upheld public ownership of the means of production and the principles of distribution according to work, common prosperity, the development of a socialist planned commodity economy (which is completely different from the capitalist commodity economy), and proceeding from the actual conditions in our country. It is utterly groundless to worry about whether our reform will depart from the socialist orientation and lead to capitalism.

Propelled by reform, our country's entire national economy is growing in a more rapid, sustained manner, and our economic results have been considerably enhanced. Our scientific, technological, and educational undertakings have developed more adequately and our people's living standard has been generally improved. The staying power of the national economic development has been strengthened. All this has shown that through reform we will be able to overcome the defects of the old economic system so that the superiority of the socialist system will be brought into play and the development of the social productive forces will be speeded up. Only by proceeding from such an all-round and intrinsic understanding of things can we correctly solve contradictions and problems arising in reform, accurately weigh the advantages and disadvantages of reform, avoid being misled by transient and rare phenomenon, or prevent jumping to onesided conclusions.

Our reform is an unprecedented and very complicated undertaking. In the course of reform, various kinds of contradictions will inevitably occur, including the problem of understanding and the matter of gains and losses. In regard to those comrades who have ideologically failed to keep pace with the development of the situation, we should adopt a method of persuasion and education and be patient with them. We should help them solve their problems through enhancing their understanding in practice. An all-round economic structural reform means, in a certain sense, the readjustment of power and interests.

This will also give rise to a series of contradictions, including contradictions between the central authorities and local governments, contradictions among the state, collectives, and individuals, contradictions among departments, contradictions between localities and departments, and contradictions among individuals. It is appropriate to say that the fundamental and long-term interests of various parties involved in these contradictions coincide. However, they might conflict with each other in regard to their partial and immdiate interests. In other words, reform will, in a certain sense, go against the partial and immediate interests of some individuals, departments or localities.

When such things happen, the parties concerned should follow the principle of proceeding from the general situation and making overall plans with due consideration for all involved so that partial and immediate interests are subordinated to overall and long-term interests. Under such a prerequisite, we should do our best to give consideration to partial and immediate interests. Taking the overall and long view, we believe that reform will benefit the whole country and the entire people. However, a process is needed to reflect the results of reform. The progress of various reforms is uneven. Sometimes we achieve quick results, but sometimes it takes longer to make an achievement. Sometimes we have to wait for a longer period of time before we can produce the desired results. Some reform measures are aimed at reserving strength for our economic reinvigoration in the future. We should view problems in an all-round way and from an outlook of development. We should not be eager for quick success and instant benefits in the process of dealing with things. We should avoid an impetuous attitude while commenting on the success or failure of reform.

For example, vegetable prices have generally increased as a direct result of decontrolling vegetable prices in the cities. Consumers have to pay more because of this. However, this measure will stimulate the development of vegetable production. When there are plenty of vegetables on the market, prices will drop. But judging from the situation in cities where vegetable prices have been decontrolled such things will only happen after a few years. It is obvious that some problems arising in reform are transient in nature and that they can be solved in the course of reform.

We should also take a historical standpoint to comprehensively view the advantages and disadvantages and the gains and losses of reform. Reform is a complicated social practice. We have no precedent to go by in this country, and cannot copy everything from books or follow indiscriminately the experiences of foreign countries. What we can only do is to make constant explorations. Therefore, it is impossible to avoid all deviations and faults in reform (of course, it is necessary for us to take a prudent attitude in order to avoid major mistakes). We should specifically analyze faults and mistakes occurring in the course of reform.

First, we should seek truth from facts and avoid attributing irrelevant problems to reform. For example, we are now correcting unhealthy trends in the party and the society. Some unhealthy trends occurred a long time ago and some others run rampant by taking advantage of reform. The encroachment of decadent capitalist and feudal ideas is the root cause of these mistakes. We should neither attribute them to reform nor treat faults and defects occurring in reform as unhealthy trends. Second, we should also view in an all-round way the advantages and disadvantages and the gains and losses of reform. We should not seize upon one point and ignore the overall picture. The main contribution of reform is to stimulate economic vitality and promote the development of the productive forces. However, certain negative things will inevitably occur. We should make a distinction between the principal aspects and the secondary ones, and differentiate what is primary from what is secondary. Generally speaking, the advantages of reform outweigh the disadvantages and the gains outweigh the losses. We should not reverse the order of importance. We should neither entertain doubts nor waver because of certain negative factors occurring in the course of reform.

Third, the problems of reform are problems arising in the course of progress. They can only be solved in the process of reform and through the further improvement of reform. We should on no account take the road back. If we give up eating for fear of choking or turn the clock back because of negative factors in reform, the old mechanisms will be revived. This means greater chaos will occur and we will suffer further setbacks.

With regard to cadres and masses who take the lead in reform, we should consider their merits and negative aspects in the context of the overall situation in reform. "There is neither pure gold nor a perfect man." It is impossible for those who take the lead in reform to avoid all defects. They might also commit mistakes in the course of reform. While dealing with their problems, leaders at all levels should help them seriously sum up experiences, carry forward their achievements, overcome their defects, learn a lesson from their mistakes, and protect their enthusiasm in reform with the exception of those violators of law and discipline who should be dealt with according to the law. At the critical moment when they are unjustly blamed or groundlessly accused, leaders should support and encourage them and help them withstand pressure. It is very important for them to do so. This concerns not only the success or failure of individuals, but also whether reform in an area or unit can continue. Therefore, this problem should be conscientiously treated.

JINGJI RIBAO EDITORIAL URGES DEEPENING REFORM

[Editorial: "Unify Awareness, Deepen Reform"]

[Text] An important task set forth at the national work conference on urban economic reform called by the State Council calls for further analyzing the situation in the current economic reform, correctly understanding new conditions and new problems as the new system replaces the old, unifying the ideological awareness of the masses of cadres and people, having clear idea about our direction, strengthening confidence, and deepening the reform. The economic reform being launched in urban and rural areas throughout the country, which has achieved remarkable results, has won the understanding. and support of the masses of cadres and people. But the reform is a profound revolution of a comprehensive nature. It calls for not only major readjustments in the relations of responsibility, authority, and benefits in various segments of society, but also a change in people's deeply entrenched ideological concepts, work methods, and living styles. Therefore, different ways of thinking have arisen among cadres and people. Especially now, when we are in a period of the new and old systems existing at the same time and taking over from each other, certain contradictions and conflicts inevitably arise in the process of the switchover. Certain difficulties and problems will also unavoidably crop up in economic life. Faced with this situation some comrades impatient to get things done hope to make the quickest possible transition to the new system so that it is the only one in existence. Some comrades also take difficulties and problems too seriously and have at times developed doubts. To properly solve these problems of ideological awareness is of unusually great importance when it comes to strenghtneing our confidence in reform and actively and steadily stimulating the process of a switchover to the new system.

A common factor responsible for certain one-sided ideas on the part of a number of comrades is underestimating the protracted, arduous, and complicated nature of the economic reform. Our reform calls for acting according to the laws of a socialist planned commodity economy and finding a new path that organically combines planning with market forces and microeconomic devotion to revitalization efforts with macroeconomic control.

This is a great experiment never witnessed in the world before. There is no ready-made pattern to follow. Everything depends on our applying fundamental Marxist principles and proceeding from the realities in China in exploring and creating things. The reform of the system involves the relations of production and the various areas of the superstructure. It is a social system-related project on a large scale that is intricate and complicated. Different levels, different links, and different fields impose particular demands on reform. It is no simple task to take good care of various reform measures that call for being linked or made to work as a whole. It should be noted that the existing system has been in operation for more than 30 years. Our cadres and management personnel are relatively well accustomed to using chiefly administrative means to exercise direct control and are relatively unaccustomed to chiefly using economic and legal means to exercise indirect control.

Therefore, there is a process of restudy and gradual adaptation. Meanwhile, the influence of the idea of a natural economy and a product economy is relatively deeply ingrained and widespread in our country. New concepts and systems required in developing a socialist commodity economy can be gradually established only through reform. In addition, the economic reform is inevitably restrained by a given period of economic and social capacity for absorption. These many factors dictate reform being a very arduous and complicated affair. We must have not only firm and unwavering faith, but also a tough and unshaken will. We must do well in becoming ideologically prepared for a long-term struggle. The trend toward impatience to achieve immediate success or a display of a lack of confidence is incompatible with such a demand.

To solve problems of ideological awareness, we must at present strengthen education on the prevailing situation so that everyone can grasp the fundamental ideological method in observing the situation. As far as the business of reform itself is concerned, it is impossible to have no setbacks, no troubles, and no loss of a single drop of water [as published] in such a widespread and profound revolution. The important thing is that we should correctly understand the nature of a problem and distinguish between what is important and what is less important, what is essential and what is nonessential, and between what can and what cannot be overcome. In the past few years, rural and urban economic reforms have been crowned with achievements that have become the focus of world attention. The existing rigid economic mechanism and management system have been broken through. The economy has come alive. The people's enthusiasm has soared. Production and construction have been marked with development. The people's living standard has improved.

What is more important, through practice in reform and theoretical exploration, we now have a more scientific understanding of the inherent characteristics of the socialist economy. We have really seen with increasing clarity the outline of a new socialist system with Chinese characteristics. The direction of reform and the road to reform have become increasingly clear. This is the main aspect of reform and the essence of the problem. This is something that has a lasting effect on the modernization of our country. By comparison, difficulties and problems of all kinds are only nonessential and transient. So long as we pay adequate attention and take realistic and effective measures, things can be easily taken care of. This has been proved by experience over the past 2 years. We can never let our confidence in reform be shaken just because of some problems cropping up in reform. Still less can we have cold feet, staying put for fear of trouble.

In solving any problem of ideological awareness, we cannot consider something as it is or treat a case as it stands. This often brings poor results. Instead, we must work from a strategically advantageous position and basically raise our awareness of reform. Toward this end, we should further strengthen education about the economic reform, so that the direction of reform, relevant principles, and fundamental policies can be imprinted more deeply on people's minds.

In line with reality, we must guide the masses of cadres and people in correctly understanding and handling the relations between microeconomic devotion to revitalization efforts and macroeconomic control, between immediate and long-term interests, between distribution according to work and common prosperity, between pioneering efforts in creating the new and the need to abide by laws and discipline, and other relations. We must not only foster the new concept of developing a socialist commodity economy, but also resist the corrosive effects of decadent bourgeois thought. In doing ideological work, we must make a point of focusing on problems that directly concern the interests of the masses. In carrying out ideological education, we must reason things out and show common sense. Only in this way can ideolcgical and political work be rewarded with good results. We firmly believe that after the current national work conference on urban economic reform, under the leadership and the command of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council, cadres at all levels and the masses of people will surely unify ideological awareness, strengthen their confidence and determination, and show the spirit and perseverance of the foolish old man who removed the mountains in making their way forward. Thus, they can definitely overcome various difficulties in forging ahead and continuously achieve new victories in reform and construction.

RENMIN RIBAO ON TECHNICAL CADRE MANAGEMENT REFORM

[Commentator's article: "A Major Reform in the System Governing the Management of Professional Technical Cadres"]

[Text] The CPC Central Committee and the State Council have decided to reform the system of deciding on professional titles on the basis of appraisals, and to put into effect the system of employing specialized technical workers according to the requirements and nature of works. Starting this year, this reform will be carried out throughout the country in a planned, guided, and step-by-step manner.

The country's 14 million intellectuals have been looking forward to this good news. However, some comrades still do not fully understand the purpose and significance of this reform. They simply regard this as the resumption of the system of deciding on professional titles on the basis of appraisals and they think that "the gates are about to be opened again." This is a misunderstanding.

Between 1978, when the conferring of technical titles was resumed, and 1983, when this was again suspended, 5.95 million people received professional titles of various types. The system of deciding on professional titles on the basis of appraisals has contributed much to stimulating the growth of talented people; to implementing the party's policy toward intellectuals; to giving the technical workers a better sense of responsibility and a pioneering spirit; to stabilizing the contingents of technical workers; and to discovering some more young and middle-aged talented people.

However, practice has demonstrated that some knotty problems exist in connection with the system of deciding on professional titles on the basis of appraisals. This system was introduced under a particular historical circumstance. Professional titles are designations suggestive of their holders' responsibilities. Since professional titles are designations, there should not be a limit to the number of titles conferred. All qualified people are entitled to appropriate titles. Titles will be kept by their recipients for the rest of their lives once they have been conferred. Titles, as designations and nothing else, are separate from responsibilities. However, titles as designations suggestive of their holders' responsibilities are closely related to responsibilities.

In this case, there should be a limit to the number of titles conferred and such titles should be associated with fixed terms of office and fixed responsibilities. This paradox is a source of trouble in our practical work.

The system of deciding on professional titles on the basis of appraisals is not quite in keeping with the current situation. The reform of the economic structure, the reform of the system governing scientific and technological work, and the structural reform of the educational service require us to correspondingly reform the system governing the management of our technical personnel. For example, in practicing the system of personal responsibility, in implementing the principle of distribution according to work, and in putting an end to the practice of "eating from the same big pot," egalitarianism, and other malpractices, we find it difficult to combine obligations with rights and benefits, given the system of deciding on professional titles on the basis of appraisals. Another problem is that at present, we are making an effort to put an end to the life tenure of party and government cadres. Thus, it would be quite inappropriate to allow some specialized technical cadres to keep their titles for the rest of their lives. From this, it can be seen that the reform of the system of deciding on professional titles on the basis of appraisals, and the application of the system of employing people according to the requirements and nature of work, are not simply a problem of "opening the gates," but a major step in the structural reform of the system governing scientific and technological work and of the educational service, as well as an essential part of the reform carried out since the 3d Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee.

The fundamental purpose of the application of the system of employing specialized technical workers according to the requirements and nature of work is to respect knowledge and talented people and, in particular, to help young and middle-aged specialized technical workers make the best use of their talents and wisdom. In recent years, thanks to the attention given by the party and the government, technical workers of various categories in the country have been playing an increasingly important role in the four modernizations. However, the problem of having too many talented people in some parts of the country and not enough in other parts has yet to be thoroughly solved. In some parts of the country, there are not enough pioneers in scientific and technological work nor are there enough qualified teachers. However, in other parts, the high concentration of professors makes it difficult for them to display their talents. Our cause cannot advance very far if we do not change this unreasonable distribution of talented people. The application of the system of employing specialized technical workers according to the requirements and nature of work can help talented people of different categories to play their respective roles more satisfactorily. Specialized, technical responsibilities differ from professional titles in that the former implies well-defined responsibilities and the setting up of posts in light of actual needs, and that the number of posts and tenure of office are fixed. Holders of specialized, technical posts must have the appropriate systematic knowledge and skills. Units with a concentration of talented people and more qualified workers than vacancies may encourage and help some of them to join other departments and units. In this way, more specialized technical workers can find jobs commensurate with their knowledge, talents, interests, and objective needs and all intellectuals can find ample scope for their talents.

The application of the system of employing specialized technical workers according to the requirements and nature of work, constitutes an important reform in the system governing the management of our technical personnel. At present, the reform of China's economic structure, the reform of the system governing scientific and technological work, and the structural reform of its educational service are developing in an in-depth manner. We must take this golden opportunity to strengthen and centralize leadership in order to put an end to the malpractices in the system governing the management of the country's technical personnel.

We should put an end to the stagnant situation where talented people are prevented from displaying their talents, and gradually establish a lively system for managing the country's technical personnel.

HOUSEHOLD CONTRACT, COOPERATIVE SYSTEM LINKS SEEN

HK010721 Beijing NONGMIN RIBAO in Chinese 21 Mar 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "Do Not Think of the Cooperative System as Conflicting with the System of Contracting Responsibilities on the Household Basis with Payment Linked to Output"]

[Text] In order to meet the requirements in the development of the rural commodity economy, this year's Central Document No 1 specifies the task of developing and improving the cooperative system. In order to fulfill this task smoothly, we should properly handle the relationship between the cooperative system and the household contract system. This is the most important point in this issue.

At present, there are two tendencies that we should notice in the process of developing and improving the cooperative system in some localities: First, some people hold that the cooperative system should not be encouraged or mentioned, otherwise, the household contract system may be negated and the peasants may be upset. Second, some people hold that the household contract system should be replaced by the cooperative system. The two tendencies come from the same thinking: they set the cooperative system and the household contract system against one another. In the eyes of these comrades, the development of the cooperative system will inevitably negate the household contract system; and the maintenance of the household contract system will allow no room for the development of the cooperative system. Obviously, without correcting this erroneous viewpoint, we will not be able to correctly put the requirements of Document No 1 into practice.

Why do some comrades set the cooperative system and the household contract system against one another? An important reason is that they excluded household contract operations from the cooperative economy. They do not understand that the household contract system is itself part of the cooperative economy and is different from the practice of "distributing the land to households for individual farming." The term "contract" also fully demonstrates the economic character of this system. The household contract system only negates the practice of "eating from the same big pot" and it does not negate the cooperative system. Moreover, the household contract system still falls into the category of cooperative economy, and forms a cooperative economy which can combine the initiative and positive roles of both collectives and individuals. Household contract operations become a marked characteristic of this cooperative economy. Therefore, when we call for developing and improving the cooperative system, we do not mean that we will discard the household contract system and backtrack to the old convention of "everyone eating from the same big pot"; instead, we mean to develop and improve the cooperative economy which includes household contract operations.

Practice shows that the development and improvement of the cooperative system is closely related to household contract operations rather than being contradictory to them. At present, producers are also functioning as commodity handlers and business operators at the same time. The form of household contracting which links responsibility with rights and benefits is most readily accepted by the peasant masses and is most effective in strengthening the enthusiasm and sense of responsibility of the peasants. So it is also most favorable to the development of the agricultural productive forces. Only by founding the cooperative organizations on the basis of household contract operations can our agriculture and rural economy become vigorous in development.

This is a truth we have come to realize in summing up both positive and negative experiences over past years. However, we also know that household contract operations cannot be separated from cooperative organizations. In the development of the rural commodity economy, peasants in various localities may encounter some difficulties which cannot be overcome by the strength of individual households, and they all need preproduction and postproduction services in irrigation, farming machines, plant protection, crop breeding, transport, information, and technical support from cooperative organizations. Some peasants say: "As we long to become rich, we particularly need services." This remark vividly reflects the wishes of the peasants after undertaking contracts. At present, these services do not yet meet the needs of the peasants. This state of affairs has to a certain extent prevented peasant households from tapping their potential in developing production. In this sense, the improvement of cooperative organizations is a necessary condition for the further development of the household contract system and for fully tapping production potential.

In view of the relationship between cooperative organizations and household contract operations, we should pay attention to "services," which form the most important link in this relationship. We must tightly grasp the link of services in the course of developing and improving the cooperative system, and need not worry that household contract operations may be affected. As we all know, when pursuing the household contract system, the two things that the peasants are most interested in are: 1) decision-making power in production: and 2) decision-making power in distribution. Increasing "services" not only satisfies peasants' needs in the development of commodity production, but also ensures their decision-making power in the two fields which they most treasure. No one will intervene in the peasants' arrangements for planting, sideline operations, and disposal of products and incomes (as long as they turn over the due part to the state and the collective according to the contracts and subject their operations to the state's guidance plans). What cooperative organizations will do is provide services for them and to help them overcome difficulties. How could the peasants not welcome such a form of cooperation?

That is why Document No 1 emphasizes the need to provide services for household contract operations when mentioning the improvement of the cooperative system. If we indeed act in light of this spirit to the full, we will certainly be able to continuously and deeply carry forward rural economic reforms.

It is also necessary to emphasize that measures for developing and improving the cooperative system must be in line with local conditions and must be realistic. No arbitrary uniformity can be imposed on grass-roots units, still less can anyone stir up any kind of "communist winds." Everything should be done on the principle of voluntary participation and mutual benefit. No marriage can be arranged by force; similarly, no cooperative system can be performed by force. We must bear painful historical lessons in mind!

TIAN JIYUN INSPECTS JIANGXI 25-30 MARCH

OW011239 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1149 GMT 31 Mar 86

[By reporter Jiang Qiusheng]

[Text] Nanchang, 31 Mar (XINHUA) -- Tian Jiyun, member of the CPC Central Committee Political Bureau and vice premier of the State Council, recently pointed out, while making an inspection tour of Jiangxi: It is necessary to firmly establish the guiding ideology of "agriculture is the foundation of the national economy, and grain is the foundation of this foundation."

It is necessary to accurately and comprehensively implement the party Central Committee's 1986 Document No 1, and to lose no time in starting spring farming in order to wrest an even better harvest this year.

Accompanied by Ni Xiance, deputy secretary of the Jiangxi provincial party committee and governor of the province, Comrade Tian Jiyun inspected Nanchang City and the old revolutionary base area of Jian, with its glorious revolutionary tradition, from 25 to 30 March. During the inspection, he invited responsible comrades of Yongxin, Lianhua, Ninggang, Suichuan, Wanan, Taihe, Xingguo, and Ruijin Counties and rural cadres of Niggang County to hold separate discussions; he also visited rural areas and peasant households.

During the inspection, Tian Jiyun pointed out: The current situation in Jiangxi is very good, and that in its rural areas is even better. First, cadres' mental attitudes are good, and they are full of confidence and vigor; second, the party Central Committee's 1986 Document No 1 was transmitted earlier than before, and it has been implemented in good time; and third, the enthusiasm of the broad peasant masses is running high. These three basic conditions are very important for doing rural work well and wresting a good harvest this year.

Feeling that spring was very much in the air, Comrade Tian Jiyun was very happy to see that a large number of peasants were transporting chemical fertilizer and other materials for agricultural use, by car or boat, and that they were starting an upsurge in spring farming. He said: The whole year's work depends on a good start in spring. People in various localities can lay a solid foundation for reaping a good harvest this year, provided they promptly, comprehensively, and accurately implement the guidelines laid down in the party Central Committee's 1986 Document No 1 and do a really good job of spring farming.

During the inspection, Comrade Tian Jiyun emphatically pointed out: Leaders and large numbers of cadres at various levels should firmly establish the guiding ideology of "agriculture is the foundation of the national economy, and grain is the foundation of this foundation," and ensure the stable and sustained development of agricultural production. He said: To achieve the goal of the four modernizations set by the 12th National CPC Congress, we must first bring about a stable and sustained development in agriculture, especially a stable increase in grain production. In our country, with a population of 1 billion, achieving the grand goal of the four modernizations will be out of the question if we do not lay a solid foundation in agriculture and first solve the problems of feeding and clothing the people. To undertake the four modernizations, it is of course necessary to produce more petroleum and coal and to generate more electric power in order to have sufficient energy. To the people, however, foodstuffs are all-important; the people live on grain; and meat, eggs, and milk are also produced basically through the consumption of grain. In this sense, grain is the most fundamental "energy source" for undertaking the four modernizations. It is from this standpoint that we should understand the important of strengthening agriculture as the foundation, developing grain production, and putting agriculture in an extremely important place.

He pointed out: In judging agricultural economic benefits, we should consider, not simply its direct benefit, but its social benefit as well. Grain production has developed considerably in our country in recent years. From a long-term viewpoint, however, grain in our country is not in excess, but inadequate. A few years ago, it was difficult to sell grain, mainly because of a shortage of storage facilities, and weak ability to change the planting of grain crops to the cultivation of other crops, and a poor performance in the circulation of grain. This year, basic quotas in grain contracts have been properly reduced in some areas.

The state has reduced grain purchasing quotas, not because there is an excess of grain, but because the state wants peasants to have more grain to sell at negotiated, or higher, prices, in order to further promote grain production. It is necessary to explain this clearly to peasants, so that they will be accurately informed. After seeking unity in thinking, practical measures should be taken to support agriculture and to effectively engage in grain production.

He emphasized: It is necessary to further improve relevant policies and measures designed to encourage the development of grain production. In economically developed areas, where village and town enterprises have been growing rather rapidly, efforts should be made to solve the problem of industry subsidizing agriculture, to gradually increase investment in agriculture, and to further rationalize the prices of agricultural products in order to increase peasants' enthusiasm for planting grain crops. At the same time, people in all trades and professions should support agriculture. By paying close attention to grain production, it does not of course mean neglecting the development of a diversified economy. It is essential to comprehensively implement the principle of "never relaxing efforts in grain production and vigorously developing a diversified economy." Vigorous efforts should be made to develop a diversified economy while developing grain production. It is necessary to develop village and town enterprises in a planned and systematic way, according to local natural resources, and to do a good job in processing farm and sideline products in order to better promote the comprehensive development of the rural economy.

In view of the new circumstances found in the course of the inspection, Comrade Tian Jiyun stressed that cadres at all levels should accurately and thoroughly carry out the contents of this year's Document No 1 of the party Central Committee and do intensive and meticulous ideological work to promptly remove any unnecessary doubt or misgivings from the minds of the peasants. He said: While relaying and implementing the contents of this document, all localities should clearly explain to the masses that, in order to promote development of the rural commodity economy, the document points out the need for good pre- and post-production cooperation and service. But this in no way means the formation of such "cooperative" organizations as in the past. Even in the case of a cooperative arrangement to render service to meet the peasants' urgent needs, it must be entirely voluntary on behalf of the peasants. Under no circumstances must it be tantamount to trying to help the shoots grow by pulling them upward, as the saying goes. Nor should there be any kind of coercion or commandism.

Touching on the question of how to improve the various services in rural areas, he hoped that no cadres at any level would ignore the role of rural supply and marketing cooperatives. Since supply and marketing cooperatives have numerous personnel, are widely scattered, and possess certain facilities and adequate capital, all counties and cities should further step up their leadership over these organizations, so that currently available channels are fully utilized to provide the peasants with pre- and post-production services in developing commodity production, he said.

When conducting inspection in Jian prefecture, Comrade Tian Jiyun braved the drizzling spring rain to travel to villages and towns and call on peasants in their homes to probe and discuss with the grass-roots cadres and peasants how to exploit the resources and speed up the pace of discarding poverty and becoming well off in this mountainous and old revolutionary base area. He said: In the past, the people of the old revolutionary base areas made great contributions. Leadership at all levels in Jiangxi has deemed it a major task to help the old revolutionary base areas change their outlook as quickly as possible, and has taken many effective measures to this end. This is very good. Jiangxi has a number of old revolutionary base areas. In the days to come, it is imperative to grasp this work even more firmly and earnestly, and to see to it that fruitful results are achieved in a relatively short period.

Most of the old revolutionary base areas are mountainous, and some of them are still rather poor. On the other hand, the mountainous areas are rich in surface and underground resources -- a very favorable condition for the development of commodity production. To exploit the resources of the mountainous areas, it is necessary to bring the local strong points into full play by adopting measures suited to local conditions, in addition to the implementation of a more flexible policy. In poor localities in the old revolutionary base areas, not only should work be down to utilize the already-known favorable conditions for growing grain crops and raising hogs, but attention should also be paid to exploration of their undiscovered strong points. On the basis of the actual situation, efforts should be made to improve management of mountain forests, promote processing industries using bamboo and wood as raw materials, and develop small hydroelectric power projects as well as other undertakings suited to the characteristic local conditions, such as plant growing and animal breeding.

Referring to the disbursement of funds provided by the state for supporting construction work in old revolutionary base areas, Comrade Tian Jiyun said: No locality should "scatter" the funds. Instead, the disbursement of such funds should be relatively concentrated on a few selected projects capable of producing a positive effect in invigorating the local economy, and only after one project has been completed should another be started. This is the only way to achieve greater results. Extension of bank loans should be linked with the work of helping the poor. The so-called "extending loans to the best" means that loans should be extended to support the best projects, and in no way should they be extended to the rich only, and not the poor. Economically underdeveloped old revolutionary base areas should open their doors and go all out to develop internal and external economic associations of one kind or another, to get capital, technology, and competent personnel from outside to bring about the economic development of their own localities.

Comrade Tian Jiyun encouraged cadres at all levels working in the old revolutionary base areas to carry forward the glorious revolutionary tradition and make still greater achievements in invigorating the economy and transforming the outlook of the old revolutionary base areas by displaying the same spirit and perseverence as the foolish old man did in "unceasingly digging the mountain."

BAINQEN ERDINI QOIGYI GYAINCAIN INSPECTS FUJIAN

OW311348 Fuzhou FUJIAN RIBAO in Chinese 23 Mar 86 p 1

[Dispatch by reporter Liu Ruizhou]

[Excerpts] Bainqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyaincain, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, left Fujian for Beijing on 22 March after winding up his 11-day inspection tour in this province.

Vice Chairman Bainqen arrived in this province on 11 March. Accompanied by Cai Liangcheng, vice chairman of the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee, he inspected Xiamen, Zhangzhou, Chuanzhou, Huian, and Fuzhou and met with leading party and government comrades of these localities. He expressed satisfaction with the economic development of the province.

On 15 March when touring Xiamen, Vice Chairman Bainqen went up Yunding Yan and looked at Jinmen Dao in the distance. He said that Taiwan is an inalienable part of China's territory and that the reunification of the motherland is a common aspiration of the people of all nationalities in the country. He firmly believed that the great cause of reunifying the motherland would surely be realized and expressed the hope that the people of our province would make even greater contributions to promoting the contracts between the two sides of the strait.

Vice Chairman Bainqen visited the Zheng Chenggong memorial hall, Jimei academic district, and Chen Jiageng's former residence.

On the afternoon of 20 March, Vice Chairman Bainqen went on the office of the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee and called on the comrades of this organization. He said: I have come from Xizang to Fujian; that is, from the southwest corner to the southeast corner of the motherland. I have been deeply impressed that the people of both places cherish a warm love for our motherland despite their different geographic conditions and different nationalities. As long as the people of all nationalities across the country unite as one and step up their efforts to build material and spiritual civilizations, our country is bound to prosper and develop.

While Vice Chairman Bainqen was in our province, Chen Guangyi, Xiang Nan, Hu Ping, Cheng Xu, and other leading party and government comrades visited him and had cordial conversations with him.

FANG YI ATTENDS MEETING ON MINERAL RESOURCES

OW301122 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0049 GMT 29 Mar 86

[By reporter Li Can]

[Excerpts] Dukou, 29 Mar (XINHUA) -- Great progress has been made in the comprehensive utilization of resources including iron, vanadium, and titanium in the Panzhihua and Xichang areas. These resources are playing an increasingly important role in the economic construction of our nation.

The scientific and technological work conference on the comprehensive utilization of resources in Panzhihua, which was held recently in Dukou City, Sichuan, fully affirmed the achievements in the comprehensive utilization of this region's resources. Fang Yi, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and state councillor, attended the meeting and made an important speech.

The conference held that except for those which cannot be applied in the near future, all projects classified as key state scientific research projects in 1978 have either completed or have yielded positive results.

Last year, Panzhihua steel company's pig iron output topped 2 million tons, and its steel output was 1.75 million tons. The combined industrial output of the steel company and Panzhihua mining company topped 1 billion yuan, and their profits and revenues totaled 376 million yuan. While the steel output was increasing by big margins year after year, Panzhihua mining company also did a better job in recovering and making use of vanadium resources. The output of vanadium dregs [fan zha 9940 3275] increased from 15,000 tons in 1977 to more than 70,000 tons, accounting for 80 percent of the national output.

The conference also worked out a strategic plan for the comprehensive utilization of Panzhihua resources during the Seventh 5-Year Plan: Raising the various technical and economic indexes by continuously relying on technical progress, making constant efforts to improve production process, and transforming, as quickly as possible, scientific research results into productive force, paying special attention to comprehensively utilizing titanium resources well, and making greater contributions to the fulfillment of the grand goals by the end of the century.

ZHANG AIPING WRITES PREFACE FOR DEFENSE DIRECTORY

OW011005 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0116 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, 31 Mar (XINHUA) -- The first large business reference book in our country, containing information and materials on production of civilian goods by military enterprises, using national defense science, technology, and industry and on military industrial technologies which may be transferred to civilian use -- "Civilian Products Made by the National Defense, Science, Technology, and Industry, a Special Volume of the Directory of Chinese Industrial and Commercial Enterprises" -- has been published by the Xinhua Publishing House.

The preface, written by Deputy Secretary-General of the Central Military Commission and Minister of National Defense Zhang Aiping for the book, states: Our country's national defense, science, technology, and industry have been relatively developed and have attained a certain high level. They have become a major force in our national economic construction. There is ample a major force in our national economic construction. There is ample scope and much to be accomplished in making full use of the strong points and productive potential of our national defense science, technology, and industry to develop economic construction and translate them into a social productive force to promote economic growth and technological advance. The preface also states: This book, "Civilian Products Manufactured by the National Defense, Science, Technology, and Industry, a Special Volume of the Directory of Chinese Industrial and Commercial Enterprises," will provide a favorable condition for the exchange of information, stimulation and development of cooperation, and coordination of production and sales between national defense, science, technology, and industry on the one hand, and civilian science, technology, and industry on the other. It will make due contributions to opening a new situation in developing production of civilian goods by combining the efforts of military and civilian industries, and in transferring national defense science and technology to civilian use.

This reference books lists 1,100 enterprises, carries 33 advertisements, and contains a total of approximately 400,000 characters. For each enterprise listed in the book, there is a brief account, focusing on the civilian goods it produces, as well as its specialized field or technological expertise. The appendixes contain six special articles, entitled "A General Review of the Work of Production of Civilian Goods, Scientific Research, and Technological Development of Nuclear Industry," "Aeronautics Industry Strives To Develop Civilian Products by Instituting the System of Military-Civilian Combination," "A General Review of the Development of Civilian Products by the Ordnance Industry," "Astronautics Industry Serves the Needs of National Economic Development," "A General Review of China's Electronics Industry," and "Production of Civilian Goods by China's Shipbuilding Industry and the China State Shipbuilding Corporation." Some military regions (services) of the Armed Forces also give brief accounts of their production activities. All these will assist people in further understanding the technological strong points of our national defense industry, its characteristics in developing civilian production, and the overall situation in its production work.

SCIENTISTS STRESS TECHNOLOGY EFFORTS AT CPPCC

OW011609 Beijing XINHUA in English 1430 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 1 (XINHUA) -- Noted Chinese scientists have urged the nation to meet new technological challenges in the next five years. They said that effective solutions to many of the major problems of China's economic development lie in major breakthroughs in science and technology. Likewise, the advance of science and technology is the profound source of the vitality of China's further economic development. The remarks were made by a group of representatives from science and technology circles at the ongoing annual session of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference.

China faces the urgent task of concentrating its efforts on tackling key scientific and technological problems, popularizing scientific and technological achievements and accelerating the training of qualified personnel in the Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-1990) period, they said. "Now that we are forced to face the challenge from the worldwide technological revolution," said Lu Jiaxi, president of the Chinese Academy of Sciences, "Chinese scientists should make great efforts to achieve notable progress and breakthroughs in research on and development of new and high technologies. This is of long-term importance to China's economic and social development," he said.

Li Naiji, senior engineer at a research institute under the Astronautics Industry Ministry, called for more attention to be paid to the construction of basic facilities and basic industry. "Without a solid foundation, there will be no enduring economic strength," he said.

The import of advanced technology and key equipment from other countries is an important step in accelerating China's scientific and technological progress, and, therefore, deserves great attention, said Tan Zhenxiong, a senior engineer at the Beijing metallurgy machinery research institute. On the other hand, he said, "reckless imports, repeated importation of the same items and waste involved in imports" should be avoided.

The scientists also urged the development of the micro-electronics industry. An expert in the field from the Astronautics Industry Ministry said that micro-electronic technology is one of the mainstays of the modern technological revolution, and the construction of such a basic industry is essential to China's modernization drive.

On the development of precision instruments in China, Wang Dezhao, honorary director of the acoustics research institute affiliated to the Chinese Academy of Sciences, suggested that a ministry be established to take care of this sector. He said that China spent 300 million U.S. dollars importing precision instruments for scientific research in 1984 -- a sum that equals the total amount the state invested in the industry from 1958 to 1985. "But half the imports have not been well utilized due to our poor management and bottlenecks in the supply of spare parts," he said. He added that, since China already has a specialized force of technicians in precision instrument production, it should be able to manufacture most of the instruments it needs in three or five years and some items of international standard by the year 2,000.

PLA DEMOBILIZATION TO BE COMPLETED BY YEAR END

HK020654 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 2 Apr 86 p 1

[By staff reporter Liu Dizhong]

[Text] China's demobilization of one million military personnel is expected to be completed as scheduled by the end of this year, Han Huaizhi, deputy chief of the General Staff, announced yesterday. Large numbers of army officers have been demobbed over the past year without disrupting the service, Han told CHINA DAILY in an exclusive interview. The decision to cut down the number of People's Liberation Army personnel was announced by Deng Xiaoping, chairman of Central Military Commission, in May last year, as part of the modernization of the national defence forces. Han said the modernization efforts focused on streamlining the administration, reducing staff, strengthening various branches of the services and replacing out-of-date weapons.

More than half of the PLA's older veterans in all the seven military areas have been retired and the average age of cadres at army level and above has dropped by between three and five years. More than 65 percent by the officers in the combat units have been replaced by others who have had regular training in military institutes, Han said. Priority will be given to improving weaponry and training officers after the large-scale demobilization is completed.

Han said that in some ways, officers training is the most important and investment in this field will be increased by a bigger margin. He said the Central Military Commission would be issuing a new directive stressing the need for reform of the military academies and their strategic importance to the training of army cadres.

The PLA has about 100 military institutes and schools throughout the country which have provided more than 200,000 officers in the past five years. The Central Military Commission has planned to bring all chief officers in the combat troops up to higher education level by the end of 2000. Those who are promoted in the field must receive re-education in military academies afterwards, he said.

Military education must be geared to national defense needs and to the possibility of future conflicts. "It is hard to win any future war without a larger number of revolutionized and younger army officers who are better educated and professionally competent," He said, adding that it was important to upgrade training methods in military academies and schools, particularly by using electronic and laser technology and simulation techniques. So far more than 650 million yuan has been earmarked in 1984-1988 period by the Central Military Commission to develop simulators which are ready to enter the world market, Han said.

To prepare against a future war, the PLA should not only improve its studies of the policies and strategies of China's national defence but also of those used by the major military blocs on a global level. Academic and information exchanges with foreign countries will be increased to learn new military methods in the establishment of army units, officer ranking systems, management, technology, science and equipment, Han said. China has planned to exchange military students with foreign countries and more foreign military experts will be invited to watch manoeuvres or give lectures in China.

During the Seventh Five-Year Plan period (1986-1990), China will import some armaments urgently needed for its national defence, but Han said that emphais will be placed on mostly importing modern technology. "We'll rely on our own efforts to upgrade the weapons and equipment of the army," he said. The newly-released national defence budget amounts to more than 20 billion yuan this year, nearly 10 percent of the total revenues in the 1986 state budget. Asked whether some defence expenditures were hidden under other budget items, Han said categorically that the budget was realistic and not meant to be deceptive.

QINGHAI EDITORS DISMISSED OVER LU XUN ARTICLE

HK020445 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 0200 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Today's SHAANXI RIBAO reports the following item from ZHONGGUO BAOKAN BAO [CHINA PRESS AND PUBLICATIONS JOURNAL]: The Qinghai provincial literature and art federation recently decided to terminate the appointments of chief editor (Liu Hongliang) and deputy chief editor (Qian Peiheng). In its Issue No 8 of 1985, QINGHAI HU WENXUE YUEKAN [Qinghai Lake Literary Monthly] published an article entitled "On Lu Xun's Writing Career," which aroused strong reaction in society by its censure and negation of Lu Xun.

RENMIN RIBAO and WENYI BAO published articles criticizing this piece, branding it as a conspicious example of the trend of negating Lu Xun. The provincial literature and art federation has now appointed a new chief editor.

WAN LI, HAO JIANXIU AWARD KITEFLIERS 1 APRIL

OW011050 Beijing XINHUA in English 0757 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Weifang, Shandong Province, April 1 (XINHUA) -- The Third International Kite Festival and the First Chinese National Kiteflying Invitational Tournament opened in this east China's city today.

After the mayor of Weifang City declared open the festival and tournament, kitefliers from 16 Chinese provinces and municipalities and the People's Liberation Army filed into the stadium. Kite hobbyists and tourists from overseas and some 30,000 home spectators watched a gala song and dance performance given by 6,000 local students, workers, farmers and office workers.

Speaking on the occasion, Li Changan, governor of Shandong Province and chairman of the organizing committee, expressed the sincere hope that the annual event, which started in 1984, would be crowned with sucess. He called on the kite lovers from home and abroad to join efforts in the promotion of friendship and swap experience in kiteflying.

Wan Li, vice-premier; Hao Jianxiu, member of the Secretariat of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party; and He Zhenliang, vice-minister of the Chinese State Physical Culture and Sports Commission; attended the opening ceremony. Prior to the performance, Wan Li, Hao Jianxiu, He Zhenliang and Li Changan presented the representatives of the kitefliers from afar with souvenir awards.

The inaugural kiteflying contest will start tomorrow morning while overseas kite hobbyists, in the capacity of non-contestants, will fly their kites together with the home entrants.

ANHUI'S HUANG HUANG ON COMMODITY CIRCULATION

OW311406 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1336 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, 29 Mar (XINHUA) -- Deputy Huang Huang, secretary of the Anhui Provincial CPC Committee, said: The next important step in Anhui's economic restructuring is to make every effort to invigorate commodity circulation. He said: The Anhui Provincial CPC Committee and the Anhui Provincial Government have completely agreed to this step.

Anhui started rural economic restructuring earlier than other regions of the country. In the past few years, agriculture and industry have developed tremendously, and new problems have also cropped up. For instance, the supply of production means needed by the peasants was not sufficient, the cost of grain production kept rising while peasants enjoyed no price protection, and peasants had "difficulty selling grain." To sell grain, some peasants had to bring their bedrolls and sleep in long open-air lines in front of the purchasing stations. Huang Huang said: This shows that we must reform commodity circulation so as to further arouse the peasants' enthusiasm for production and promote the development of production.

Huang Huang said: Anhui has a high population density and an average of 1 mu of cultivated land per person, leaving a large idle labor force in the countryside. Therefore, invigorating commodity circulation to develop trade is a desirable way for Anhui because it makes the best use of Anhui's strength to mend its weakness.

He told reporters that while on a study tour of Yeji in Western Anhui last year, he suggested that Yeji concentrate on developing trade. Recently, he noticed that Yeji had many more stores and shops, a new street 20 meters wide, and a new country fairgrounds occupying some 50 mu. In less than a year, this small township of less than 10,000 has become a business center for several nearby countries of more than 400,000. He said: This fully testifies to the peasants' eagerness for and the need to develop commodity circulation. It also shows that much can be done in this area.

Huang Huang said: In the past, we always tended to respect production and neglect commodity circulation. Even today, many people still despise businessmen, thinking that doing business is an improper thing. In fact, if we take a good look at many developed countries and some advanced provinces of our own country, we will see that developing trade is one of the important things to do for economic takeoff. We should look at it this way.

A county Commerce Bureau director told Huang Huang that although his county had only 500,000 people, it had to run commerce for 1 million. Huang Huang told reporters excitedly: If all counties can do the same, how can Anhui fail to become rich?

JIANGSU ISSUES PROVINCIAL CIRCULAR ON MILITIA

OW312152 Nanjing Jiangsu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] The Jiangsu Provincial CPC Committee, Provincial Government, and Provincial Military District issued a joint circular recently, making specific arrangements for our province to do a good job in transferring the country, city, and district level People's Armed Forces departments to control of local governments as part of their establishment and set forth clear-cut requirements with regard to matters relevant to the transfer.

The circular decided that the work of transferring county, city, and district People's Armed Forces departments to local government control will be carried out in three stages of (?active) preparation, actual transfer, and summing up of experiences, concluding all work before the end of June this year. To ensure the success of this work, the People's Armed Forces departments of Shazhou, Huaian, and Xinghua Counties and Baixia District of Nanjing City will be selected as trial areas so as to obtain experience with which to offer guidance for the work throughout the province.

The circular calls on the party committees, governments, and People's Armed Forces deaprtments in various cities and counties to deeply understand the great significance of the Army's structural reform and the transfer of People's Forces departments to control by the local governments. It is necessary to vigorously strengthen ideological and political work for the transfer, strictly adhere to the principle of streamlining the organization to adjust the assignments of cadres to the People's Armed Forces departments -- with particular attention to building a strong leading body -- and carefully handle the actual problems of the substitutes for those away from their work or administrative posts. It is necessary to strictly adhere to financial and economic discipline to do a practical and good job in the inventory and turnover of the weapons, equipment, facilities, and funds and supplies of the People's Armed Forces departments.

JIANGXI'S WAN SHAOFEN INTERVIEWED ON BASE AREAS

OW011031 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 0200 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Interview with Jiangxi Provincial Party Secretary Wan Shaofen by correspondent (Li Chunsheng); date, place not given -- recorded]

[Excerpts] [Li] Secretary Wan, could you tell us why it is necessary to attach strategic importance to stepping up construction of the old revolutionary bases in Jiangxi?

[Wan] I was especially inspired by the statement in Premier Zhao's report calling for more vigorous efforts to help accelerate the development of old revolutionary bases. That is because Jiangxi, a famous old revolutionary base itself, tops other parts of the country in having the largest area of, population in, and number of martyrs from, old revolutionary bases. In addition to the 15 million population, Jiangxi's old revolutionary bases are rich in the natural resources of agriculture and mining. The overwhelming majority of the 126 kinds of mineral ore verified in the province are deposited in the old revolutionary bases. However, a number of areas and a few farm households in the old revolutionary bases still do not have enough to eat or wear, are unable to get rid of poverty, and face relatively grave difficulties in production and everyday life.

The backward old revolutionary bases, which have great economic potential, have affected the economy of the province as a whole. To help the impoverished old revolutionary bases become better off is not only an economic, but also a political, issue. This is a demand on us set by the party Central Committee. The party Central Committee has shown kind concern for Jiangxi's old revolutionary bases and the people there. At the same time, it is also the fervent aspiration of the people of the old revolutionary bases to get rid of poverty and become prosperous. They do not want to depend on relief, but want to rely on themselves, with only a little assistance from the state to help them overcome poverty and become better off. That is why we attach strategic importance to this question.

[Li] What are the goals for the construction of the old revolutionary bases during the Seventh 5-Year Plan?

[Wan] Our fighting goals for the construction of the old revolutionary bases are to find enough to eat and wear within 2 or 3 years, get rid of poverty in 5 years, and strive to catch up as quickly as possible, with the average of the province's economic development, that is, an average per capita annual income of around 500 yuan. The goal for this year is to take a bigger stride on the basis of the new step we made last year. To this end, we have outlined six tasks, including the following two major ones. First, the average per capita annual income of households receiving preferential treatment in the old revolutionary bases should increase by 20 percent over last year, including that of one third of the households exceeding 200 yuan. Second, problems concerning the small number of the most impoverished households which do not have enough to eat or wear should be basically resolved this year.

[Li] What are the measures for accelerating construction of the old revolutionary bases?

[Wan] We shall primarily take the following 5 measures: 1) We shall further emancipate our minds in implementing the policy of reducing the burden, relaxing control, and enlivening the economy of the old revolutionary bases. 2) We shall rely on ourselves in building up the strength of the old revolutionary bases. 3) We shall optimally utilize the old revolutionary bases' natural resources and work out a couple of development projects. 4) We shall mobilize and organize efforts in all quarters to support construction of the old revolutionary bases. 5) We shall effectively manage and use funds to subsidize the development of old revolutionary bases, and raise efficiency in use of the funds.

OW290227 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 0100 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Excerpts] The Shanghai urban district work meeting closed on the afternoon of 24 March. The meeting pointed out: In urban district work we should further unify our thinking, put emphasis on priority work, focus on economic construction, pay attention to building socialist material and spiritual civilizations, perform actual deeds for the people, and make new contributions to implementing the strategy for transforming and developing Shanghai. The meeting, co-sponsored by the municipal party committee and the municipal government, began on 22 March.

Comrade Rui Xingwen and Jiang Zemin seriously listened to briefings from various districts on their situations and their requests and suggestions. They also addressed the meeting.

GUANGXI'S CHEN HUIGUANG ATTENDS CONFERENCE ON POLITICAL WORK

HK010927 Naning Guangxi Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 30 Mar 86

[Excerpts] From 25 to 30 March, the political and legal commission of the regional CPC committee held a conference in Nanning on political and legal work throughout the region. The conference studied and made arrangements for our region's political and legal work for 1986, stressing that it was necessary to further strengthen the building of the socialist legal system, to severely crack down on serious crimes and economic crimes, to vigorously and comprehensively tidy up social order, to realize a steady turn for the better in social order, and to guarantee the smooth progress of economic reform and economic construction.

Leading comrades of the regional CPC committee and regional people's congress standing committee, including Chen Huiguang, Tao Aiying, Gan Ku, and Lin Chaoqun, spoke at the conference.

The conference held: In 1985, under the leadership of CPC committees and governments at all levels, political and legal departments at all levels throughout the region cracked down severely on serious crimes and economic crimes and scored very great achievements in comprehensively tidying up social order and in strengthening the building of the ranks. The situation in social order, on the whole, markedly improved. However, social order in our region was not tidied up evenly and consolidated. Therefore, we must not relax our vigilance because of an apparent, turn for the better in social order.

The conference pointed out: Strengthening the building of the socialist legal system is a reliable guarantee and necessary conditions for upholding good social order in our country over a long period of time and for building socialist material and spiritual civilization, is a principle the whole party must follow over a long period of time, and is the guiding ideology for strengthening and reforming political and legal work. It is necessary to overcome the trend toward despising the building of the socialist legal system; to enhance the conscientiousness in putting the legal system on a sound basis and in upholding the legal system; and to really ensure that people will act in accordance with the law, if any, that the law must be strictly enforced, and that offenders' responsibility must be investigated and affixed.

The conference pointed out: To promote a further turn for the better in social order, it is essential to continuously and severely crack down on serious crimes. Serious criminals guilty of murder, robbery, causing explosions, rape, organizing gangs of hooligans, inflicting grievous bodily harm, and serious theft must be punished severely and quickly in accordance with the law. It is imperative to crack down on, ban, and prohibit such evil social phenomena as prostitution, gambling, and feudal and superstitious practices.

The conference pointed out: Economic crimes do great harm to the building of the two civilizations. We must be determined to stamp out the arrogance of the economic criminals within a year. The situation in economic crime is complicated. CPC committees and governments at all levels must strengthen leadership over cracking down on economic crime. In coordination with one another, all departments concerned must make concerted efforts to step up investigating and dealing with the important and especially big economic criminal cases, particularly the big and important cases involving leading cadres and their children. We must impartially enforce the law, be bold in handling the tough cases, break through obstacles, investigate the cases to the end, and mete out punishment in accordance with the law.

The conference pointed out: To effectively prevent crime and reduce the number of crimes, it is imperative to mobilize the forces of the whole party and whole society to comprehensively tidy up social order. In the course of comprehensively tidying up social order, we must seriously and extensively implement various forms of the system of contracted responsibility for social order within this year. We must really do well in popularizing the legal system and seriously do well in helping and educating young people and juveniles who violated the law.

The conference pointed out: The tasks confronting the political and legal front are arduous and complicated. The key to accomplishing these tasks lies in enhancing the quality of the whole of the political and legal ranks. Political and legal departments at all levels must strengthen the building of the political and legal ranks and improve the political and professional quality of the political and legal cadres and policemen to meet the needs of the struggle.

The conference emphatically pointed out: CPC committees and governments at all levels must strengthen leadership over the political and legal work, support the work of the political and legal departments, and help them resolve their practical difficulties in their work.

GUANGXI PARTY LEADER URGES IMPROVED INFORMATION SHARING

HK010733 Nanning Guangxi Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 30 Mar 86

[Excerpts] Not long ago, while being interviewed by a reporter from this station, Chen Huiguang, Secretary of the Regional CPC Committee, talked about the importance of information work. He believed that whether or not we have quick access to information is the key to whether or not we can vigorously develop the commodity economy. Chen Huiguang said information work is very important and plays a very great part in promoting the circulation of commodites and helping the poor; fruits, sugar-cane, water chestnuts, jute, ambary hemp, ginger, and bananas have been kept in stock too long in many places in our region, and found no sale. One of the reasons is that we do not have quick access to information. Therefore, to vigorously develop the commodity economy, one of the very important problems is to grasp information work. When we have quick access to information, we can promote production and consumption.

Comrade Chen Huiguang stressed that the focal point of information work is to serve the development of the rural commodity economy. This is because the development of production of all commodities is quick after rural areas readjusted the production structure during the past few years. However, due to the fact that peasants do not have quick access to information and do not understand the overall situation well enough, they have carried out production blindly. Some products which are very much needed by society have not been produced, while other products which are not much needed by society have been mass-produced, resulting in overstocking of products and a dampening of peasants enthusiasm. We must do service work well by providing information and in accordance with the demands of the market, develop commodity production. Therefore, it is hoped that the propaganda department will publicize the importance of service work by providing information and better serve the readers and listeners.

SICHUAN'S YANG RUDAI URGES IMPROVED PERFORMANCE

HK010343 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] According to Sichuan Ribao, Comrade Yang Rudai stressed at a recent meeting of responsible persons of journalism units in the Chengdu area convened by the provincial CPC Committee's Propaganda Department, and also at a number of other meetings, that Sichuan must do its work during the Seventh 5-Year Plan even better than during the Sixth 5-Year Plan. This is the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. We must work hard and fight a successful first battle.

Comrade Yang Rudai specifically analyzed the current production situation in Sichuan and pointed out the current problems and the work to be grasped. He stressed: Certain leading comrades have become blindly negligent and failed to get a tight grasp on current production. They do not attach importance to economic growth rate.

He said: We are not chasing a high growth rate. The sort of high growth rate attained by relying on loans and the use of more foreign exchange cannot be sustained for long. However, we must have a certain growth rate. In particular, we must have a rate that produces good economic results and has reserve strength, and a rate that can ensure coordinated economic development. Such an economic growth rate is not attained easily. We cannot become blindly negligent. The leading cadres at all levels must bring their subjective initiative into full play, devise ways to overcome difficulties and solve problems, and ensure healthy and coordinated economic development.

Comrade Yang Rudai said: While straightening out party style, we must grasp the problems that exist everywhere. Apart from solving problems of abuse of power, economic problems, and so on, we must solve the problems of political liberalism, bureaucratism in work, and ideological individualism. At present the majority of cases of bad party style are problems of lack of spiritual vigor, a weak concept of providing service, and serious bureaucratism. Bracing our spirits and transforming our work style are extremely important in fighting the first battle in the Seventh 5-Year Plan. The leading cadres must go deep into [words indistinct] study and solve problems as they find them.

XIZANG ESTABLISHES GROUP TO SEND CADRES TO RURAL AREAS

HK010701 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Text] A regional leadership group for sending cadres down to rural areas has been set up, with Hu Songjie, Regional CPC Committee Standing Committee member, as the head and Gong Daxi, Vice Chairman of the Regional People's Government, as deputy head. The leadership group comprises seven members: (Zhaxi Pingcuo), regional Civil Affairs Department Director; Pingcuo, Organization Department Deputy Director of the Regional CPC Committee; Ma Guanghua, deputy Secretary general of the General Office of the Regional CPC Committee Yang Zhiqing, deputy Secretary General of the General Office of the Regional People's Government; and (Ni Ma), regional Agricultural and Animal Husbandry Department deputy director.

The leadership group has set up a general office and eight comrades have been transferred from the Organization department, Propaganda Department, and General Office of the Regional CPC Committee as working personnel. The general office is sited in the Regional Agricultural and Animal Husbandry Department.

The leadership group has decided the number of cadres to be sent to rural areas from all regional departments. Regional subordinate organs will send 815 cadres to rural areas and will be organized into 33 working groups. Of these, 25 will go respectively to 25 counties in 7 prefectures and cities; 2 will investigate party grassroots organizations and the building of the grassroots political power; 1 will investigate factories, mines, and enterprises: I will inspect rural areas; and the other 4 will go down to rural areas to undertake the tasks of meteorological zoning, building new villages, investigating farms, and so on. The regional leadership group held a meeting on the afternoon of 28 March on sending the cadres from all regional subordinate organ units to rural areas.

GANSU OFFICE TO COORDINATE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

OW011100 Beijing XINHUA in English 0830 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Lanzhou, April 1 (XINHUA) -- An office to coordinate the economic development of northwest China -- about one third of China's land mass -- opened today in this capital of Gansu Province.

It will prepare the three northwest provinces -- Qinghai, Gansu and Shaanxi -- and two autonomous regions -- Xinjiang and Ningxia -- for a planned economic take-off at the turn of the century, an office spokesman said. Chinese leaders have announced the intention to give northwest top priority in China's economic development by the end of this century.

The office will coordinate the economic planning of the northwest provinces and regions. While tapping the economic potential of each area, it will try to promote economic, technical and personnel exchanges with coastal areas, according to the spokesman.

The northwest is rich in mineral resources such as oil, coal and nickel, yet the provinces and regions remain undeveloped -- and poor -- compared with coastal areas.

The spokesman said the provinces and regions will exchange information, establish trade agencies in each other's areas and jointly manufacture goods for ethnic and foreign markets. The office also plans to oversee improvement of transport and telecommunication service. It will open a chain of tourist services along the ancient "silk road" from Xian, capital of Shaanxi Province, through Lanzhou to Urumqi, capital of Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region.

GANSU'S LI ZIQI CALLS FOR IMPROVING PARTY STYLE

HK290703 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Excerpts] This morning, the provincial CPC Committee held a report meeting of leading cadres at and above the departmental level of the organs of the provincial CPC Committee on correcting party style. At the report meeting, responsible persons of departments concerned of the provincial CPC Committee reported on or introduced the situation in recently beginning to correct party style.
